THE INTERNATIONAL

A Central Socialist Bureau is to Be Established.

HEADQUARTERS AT BRUSSELS.

Socialist Organizations of the World to Be Permanently Connected by a Universal Center.

The following outline of the establishment, constitution, aims and objects of the International Socialist Bureau, which was decided upon at the recent international congress at Paris, is published at the request of the executive members of the bureau, for the information of all Socialist comrades throughout the world:

Dear Comrades:

We have the pleasure to announce to you the definite constitution of the International Socialist Bureau. Most of the countries of Europe have already chosen their delegates, and other countries will do so in a few weeks. The seat of the bureau is established at the "Maison du Peuple," Joseph Stevens street, Brussels, Belgium. The nomination of Comrade Victor Serwy as secretary has been ratified by many nationalities, and unanimously by the congress of the Labor party of Belgium, on the 18th of November last. The designation of Edward Anseele and Emil Vandervelde as delegates has also been approved. Those willing to bear their quota of the expense of establishing the secretariat can address him as follows: "Edward Anseele, Rue de Jambon, Gand."

We believe it is necessary to call attention in this first circular to the terms of the resolution of the congress establishing the International Bureau, defining precisely its powers and duties:

RESOLUTION ONE.

The International Socialist Congress at Paris considers

That as the International Congresses are destined to become the parliament of the proletariat, it is necessary to formulate resolutions for the guidance of the proletariat in their struggle for freedom.

That these resolutions, resulting from international agreement, should be translated into acts. The following measures are decided upon:

1. An organization committee shall be named as soon as possible by the Socialist organizations of the country where the next congress is to be held.
2. A permanent committee consisting of two delegates from each country shall be formed to handle the necessary funds. They shall regulate the order of proceedings in the next congress, and shall receive the reports from each national organization connected with the congress.
3. The committee shall choose a salaried general secretary, who shall (a) Procure all necessary information.
- (b) Edit an explanatory code of the resolutions passed by previous congresses.
- (c) Distribute the reports of the Socialist movement of each country two months before the next congress meets.
- (d) Furnish a general summary of reports on the questions discussed by the congress.
- (e) Publish at different times leaflets and pamphlets on questions of fact and of general interest; also on important reforms, and essays upon serious political and economic questions.
- (f) Take all necessary measures to facilitate the international organization of the proletariat of all countries.

RESOLUTION TWO.

The International Socialist Committee shall form from the national organizations of Socialists in parliament, a special inter-parliamentary commission to facilitate common action on great political questions and international economic. This commission shall work in unity with the International Socialist Committee.

RESOLUTION THREE.

The International Secretariat located at Brussels shall have the custody of the international archives of socialism, and shall collect all books, documents and reports concerning the labor movement in different nations.

The congress has also decided that the nomination of two delegates from each country shall be subject to the ratification of the proletariat of those countries. They have fixed the budget of the International Bureau at 10,000 francs ($1,000). The principal countries, (Germany, England, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Holland, Italy, Switzerland, United States), shall each furnish $50 francs, ($100), of this amount, the other countries (Norway, Argentina, Bohemia, Bulgaria, Roumania, Poland, Portugal, Spain, Russia, Japan, Serbia, Sweden, Hungary, Australia, etc.), shall each contribute $30 francs, ($60).

There are other proposals in accordance with the above which your committee has prepared with the assistance of our Socialist friends from all nations. Already we have received from many delegates, different proposals, which we are now examining and, upon which we shall consult you.

At present we think that the most important tasks before your bureau are as follows: (1) To establish communication with all Socialist organizations, labor parties, parliamentary groups, press, etc. (2) The codification of resolutions of the congress and putting them into execution.

In the meantime we ask you to indicate the questions which, in your judgment, are of a nature to render more efficient the work of our bureau. Finally, we would ask all those organizations which have not yet been heard from to send us:

1st. The names and addresses of their delegates.

2nd. The name and address of their correspondent.

3rd. The name and address of their party secretary.

4th. The name and address of the party treasurer.

5th. The place of meeting of their organization.

6th. The names and addresses of their principal newspapers and reviews.

Through us the Belgian Labor party thank most heartily the comrades of all countries for the confidence and trust they have reposed in us by choosing our country as the seat of the International Bureau. We shall strive to show ourselves worthy of the task which has been assigned to us. "Vive l'International!"

"Les Membres Du Bureau Executif," Edouard Anseele,

Emile Vandervelde,

Victor Serwy, Secretaire.

Important Notice.

Secretaries of branches will please take notice that the constitution and resolutions adopted by the Provisional Central Committee and ordered submitted to referendum have been mailed to them. No time should be lost in voting on it, as it must be in by the 12th of January. It is that the Committee can organize itself permanently. In case no regular meeting of the branch will take place between now and the 12th, they should call a special meeting.

All members should please take note of this and be on hand to vote upon this important matter.

Fraternally,

Joe B. Smiley,

A. A. Somerville,

Joe S. Smith,

Sub-committee.

Neither Money nor Marbles.

A plan for making glass marbles by a new process was recently established at Steubenville, Ohio. Although the product was harder, more beautiful, and in every way superior to the German article which had heretofore supplied the American market, the concern failed. The reason given for this is highly illustrative of the manner in which inventors fare under capitalism. The press reports say that everything was proceeding most satisfactorily, "until the inventor of the process, J. Harvey Lighton, began to ask for his share of the proceeds, and failing to get a satisfactory accounting, had asked for a receiver."

Those who are extremely anxious to know how socialism would treat inventors might try to find out why trouble arises when the inventor "begins to ask for his share" under capitalism.

Coming Crisis Gives Warning.

The first rumblings of the impending crash in the commercial world have been heard in Germany and England, and their corollaries of gloom, pessimism and anxiety have impressed themselves on the spokesmen of capitalism to such an extent that hardly one American newspaper, having foreign correspondents, has not some account of the dire straits in which the ruling classes of Europe find themselves.

Instructed by evolutionary events, the Socialists have predicted more than in a general way what is now taking place in Europe.

Some of the headlines in the newspapers convey startling intelligence. "Nations Quake at World Crisis," "All Europe is Unhappy," "England Ends Year in Gloom," are some of them. The present phase of things we are told, is causing panics as well as individuals to devote themselves to "serious introspection," and the London Spectator states that the cause of England's woes is the growing industrial supremacy of the United States. Competition of course being international will wipe out the weaker nations after the weaker individuals within nations are disposed of, and England is beginning to feel the pressure.

First and Last.

Much controversy has been waged over the question as to whether Russians, British, French, German or American troops were first to enter the Forbidden City in Peking. A letter has been received at the Navy Department "establishing the claims of the Americans to have been first on the ground." The next struggle of the "allied" powers will determine who will be the last to remain on it.

The sale of literature at Brand's Hall on Saturday evening, January 5th, is reserved for the Workers' Call board.

There has been a notable increase in wealth, trade, commerce, murder, suicide, and insanity, in the year 1900, according to capitalist statistics.

THE HOLIDAY BOOM

How the Big Department Stores Scooped the Profits.

PREPARE FOR RUSHING TRADE.

How the "Reserve Army of Industry" Are Utilized for a Temporary Period of Abnormal Profit Making.

The holiday season just passed has recorded the greatest success ever achieved by the great department stores of Chicago. Their sales far surpassed those of any previous year, and their owners at least have no reason to deny the prosperity which is alleged to be the common heritage of all under the present administration. Of course the particular success of the department store is wholly due to the "business ability" of those who own and control these immense establishments, and these parties through their meritorious efforts will be enabled to shine in "society" and aid in movements to mitigate the pangs of poverty, by well-timed charitable donations, which will be duly accredited in the columns of the daily press, with flattering notices of the generous donors.

There is another side to the picture, however, one which is not dwelt upon to any great extent in the public journals, but which could have readily been observed by anyone of average reasoning power who showed any desire to discover the modus operandi by which wealth is accumulated in the distribution of goods during the festive season. An inquiry would show at once that the "business ability" displayed consisted mainly in the merciless exploitation of thousands of wretched poverty-stricken human beings, whose temporary services were utilized to the limit of physical endurance by those who had purchased them.

An immense number of these are engaged at a low price for the holiday season, and are worked remorselessly while it lasts. The hope of an "steady" employment continually urged them to outdo their fellow wage slaves who appear in the role of "permanent employees," and in consequence an extraordinary activity is generated in the entire mass, and "business" drives along at top speed during the so-called "festive" season.

At the close of this period, from one-half to two-thirds are discharged, and in this process the "business ability" again asserts itself. Many who were employed regularly for years and who had attained the generous remuneration of six or seven dollars per week, and considered themselves steady employees, find themselves displaced by their cheaper brother and sister wage slaves, whose activity during the term of their temporary employment had favorably impressed some petty driver or overseer who knew that his own job depended upon his exertions in seeing that the utmost was extracted from those under his immediate supervision.

Towards the close of the holidays, the writer made systematic tours of these profit-grinding mills during the days when the final purchases of Christmas "gifts" were being made. The clerks who had received their "Christmas gift" in the form of discharge were easily recognizable. Everywhere might be seen scores of exhausted creatures of both sexes whose faces and motions bore unmistakable evidence of the fact that a "thriving business" had been driven for the previous week. At many of the out-of-the-way counters where business was slack traces of recent tears might have been observed on the faces of the girls in attendance, due partly to physical exhaustion and partly to the knowledge that on Christmas eve they would almost certainly walk out of the establishment to enjoy the prospective good cheer that falls to the lot of those enrolled in the army of the unemployed. Everywhere was evidence that the bodily and mental torture of one class was being used to build up the fortunes of another.

But "business" was prosperous. A new record had been made. New improvements suggestive of greater economy were sure to result from the feverish rush of the preceding week. Displacement of more highly paid by cheaper employees was in order. The presence of hundreds of supernumerary help, gave an opportunity for "natural selection" so that the "survival of the fittest" might be assured—a process which in "business" always proceeds from the exigencies of profit-making.

But the "public" got cheaper and more efficient service just as did the owners of the establishments, and the small "business" man, whose business grows smaller year by year and who desperately strives to save off the bankruptcy which constantly threatens him, may protest in vain. The improved machine has come to stay. Its ultimate ownership however is another matter.

But how proud the workers should feel that "business" was good.

FALLEN FROM GRACE

British Trades Unionists, Losing Their "Respectability."

WON'T WORK FAST ENOUGH.

Capitalist Anger Over Lost Markets Accuses Workmen of Degeneracy and Dishonesty.

In commenting upon the decline of British manufactures in competition with those of the United States, the Associated Press correspondent quotes approvingly the following typical rant from a British newspaper:

The Spectator today goes to the root of British industrial degeneracy—namely, the refusal of English workmen, under trade union influence, to render an honest equivalent for their wages. The Spectator concludes: "We believe if a deputation of British trades unionists of the best type were to visit America and conduct a thorough investigation of trade conditions there they would return convinced that their duty to their countrymen in future would be best discharged by encouraging the universal practice of the best and hardest work compatible with health during recognized working hours."

In the first place it will be noticed that the upholders of capitalist exploitation appropriate a scientific term to describe the workman who refuses to be driven constantly at top speed. Such a one is a "degenerate" and a thief into the bargain. We would like to know what is an "honest equivalent" for wages received, and who is to decide the matter. The capitalist will of course contend that every atom of labor power which can be extracted during a given time is his just due. He bought it and considers himself entitled to it. On the other hand the workman, if he has an atom of sense, knows that it is not his interest to expend his labor power recklessly. He wants to work leisurely and comfortably. He knows that unless he produces more than an equivalent for the wages paid him that he will not be employed. He knows also that when his employer charges him with not rendering an equivalent for his wages, and still continues to employ him, that his employer is, to put it plainly, lying. The complaint of the British employer against the workman is therefore not that he does not produce more than his wages, but that he does not produce over and above his wages as much as the American workman. From the employer's standpoint, no workman produces enough who does not produce at least as much as the workman employed by his competitor. It is a quibble, not about surplus value, but about the amount of surplus value. It is also an admission that the accumulation of capital is only possible when the workman can be driven to the utmost limit of his labor power. If he will not submit to this he violates every canon of capitalist morality, and becomes a thief and a "degenerate," when judged by that standard.

The surplus value produced by British laborers has for more than 100 years made the British capitalist industrially supreme in the world's markets. Now however that the American capitalist is in possession of a wage slave who can be exploited with still greater intensity, the Briton becomes a "degenerate" because he will not and can not be made to keep pace with the other. Such is the magnitude of capitalism. Let some rising national competitor find means to drive his workers at a greater speed than the American wage earner can be driven and the latter would also be accused of theft and degeneracy by his masters.

The "best type" of workman, as the Spectator doubtless considers, is composed of those who will submit without protest to the "speeding-up" process. But it is absolutely certain that the workmen themselves would disagree with their employers upon this matter. "Their duty to their countrymen." Well, who are their countrymen? The capitalist class alone of course. Wage earners are not "countrymen" to each other. Of course not. The Average British workman is perhaps thick-headed, but not sufficiently so that he could be convinced that his duty to his fellow wage earners consisted in acting as pacesetter for them.

Then comes the last hypocritical assertion, that what is desirable is the "best and hardest work compatible with health, etc." And this abominable cant comes from a land where the health of the working class is the very last consideration! A land where physical degeneracy from brutal overwork has set its seal upon millions of the population, so much so that the standard for military fitness has to be constantly lowered so that the ranks which once were supplied with giants, now are with difficulty filled with dwarfs and stunted specimens of manhood. No one who is in the least acquainted with the industrial history of England need be told of the horrors which accompanied the attainment of the world's markets. It is not necessary to recount the history of the passing of remedial acts of legislation nor the bitter opposition with which they were fought by those who now appear so solicitous for the health of the workers, acts which only became laws when it was conclusively shown that the laborers were in actual danger of extermination. The British workmen of the present day are supposed to be ignorant of the poisoning of thousands of pottery operatives, white lead workers, match factory girls, and others, whose short unwholesome and diseased lives gave evidence of the fact that they were doing their "duty to their countrymen," who were so very considerate of the health of their victims.

So the "trades union influence" now breeds dishonesty and "degeneracy," according to the British possessing classes. Before American and German competition were seriously felt, British trades unionism had attained a position of "respectability," and was graciously patronized by the very people who now condemn its influence as immoral. While French and German workmen were considering theories of socialism, the Briton stuck doggedly to the trades union, and was commended by his masters as a practical hard-headed fellow, who couldn't be fooled with theories formulated by foreign demagogues and dreamers.

But all this is changing and will continue to change. It was well enough while the British workman produced more than any foreign competitor. Now that he is falling behind he must be spurred to further effort. He is inclined to resent this operation and depends upon his union for power to enable him to do so effectively. Therefore a struggle looms ahead in the immediate future.

The unions may issue from it with their "respectability" in tatters, but they will have obtained valuable knowledge as to the reality of the class struggle. If the American laborer doesn't know enough yet to resist the intensity of his exploitation, he will at least while keeping it, do his part towards impressing upon his British fellow workman the necessity of adopting the socialism which he had heretofore scouted as visionary and impracticable.

The Workers' Call is the organ of the SOCIALIST PARTY.

Very Much "Reserved."

This is what Ex-president Harrison said in a speech delivered at Indianapolis on December 31st, 1900:

"Columbia should have been the name of the Western Hemisphere—the republican half of the world, the hemisphere without a king on the ground, the reserved world where God sent the trodden spirits of all to be revived; to find, where all things were primitive, man's primitive rights."

And this is how the state of Louisiana illustrated the truth of his remark on January 1st, 1901:

New Orleans, La., Jan. 1, 3 a. m.—Today fully 25,000 voters will be declared disfranchised in New Orleans. The vote of New Orleans is about 41,000, and to prevent disfranchisement every voter under the age of 60 was required to pay his poll tax by yesterday or be barred from voting for two years. Not more than 10,000 complied with the law.

Twenty-five thousand "trodden spirits" sent chasing after their "primitive rights" is not a bad record for one day's work. The "reserved world" seems to be reserved for those who are able to pay a poll tax.

"Reward of Abstinence."

The newspapers give a list of twenty-three persons who are said to have "made" $271,000,000 last year. As the names of Russell Sage and Henry Green are included amongst the twenty-three it might seem that part of this vast sum at least could be accounted for as the "reward of abstinence." As a general rule, however, the "abstinence" of the laborer forms the "reward" of the capitalist.

"Missouri Socialist."

The Socialists of St. Louis are determined not to let the twentieth century open without helping along the movement whose consummation will be its most remarkable feature. They have added another Socialist weekly in the English language to the rapidly growing number of Socialist publications already in existence. The "Missouri Socialist," as the new arrival is called, is a four-page weekly of about the same size as this paper, of good typographical appearance, and, better than all, filled with straight class-conscious, revolutionary socialism from beginning to end. We welcome the coming of the "Missouri Socialist," realizing that it has a vast field to work in amongst the fourteen or fifteen million laborers who yet listen to the siren song of capitalist politicians. There is an ample harvest for the Socialist reapers, and every assistance which helps overthrow capitalism brings the social revolution, which is our common object, ever nearer.

The wool business of 1900 is reported as being very unfavorable. This is rather strange in a presidential year, when large quantities of it are required to pull over the eyes of the working class.

Socialist Pointers

The machine must be made the servant of man instead of being the master.

The mission of the twentieth century is to bring industrial freedom to the race.

The bankers and the bosses are not going to contribute to our campaign fund.

Like all reformers Frank Hall wants someone other than himself to be made to be good.

Mayor Jones has remained quiet so long that he may be meditating over his recent mistakes.

The erring brothers who think that a part is greater than the whole will learn better some day.

The agitation which bears the best fruits is that which is conducted when there is no campaign on.

The legislature will see to it that the spring campaign for municipal gas is an entirely harmless one.

Your neighbor may not know that John Collins is running for mayor, and it is up to you to post him.

Stock manipulation is a much more politic word than confiscation, but it is not nearly so honest a one.

Socialists of Chicago really ought to start the new century by doubling their vote at the spring election.

Isn't it strange that the city can find men enough to shovel snow when every man who wants work has a job?

Capitalist reviewers of the century, if they notice socialism at all, only treat it as a passing freak of the hour.

It seems strange that none of the critics listed Coyn's "Financial School" as one of the great books of the century.

Socialist party is surely a good name for an organization that stands for socialism alone without any modifications.

The average minister and grand juror are careful not to look too closely for the causes of vice. Their class interests might suffer.

The work of making Socialists is not an ungrateful task, for the man you convert will be thankful to you all the rest of his life.

Russell Sage thinks we will still have rich men at the end of the century. Russell had better go and read the signs of the times again.

Even when they are convicted the bankers generally get a pardon, which goes to prove some more that there are no classes in this country.

Socialism will be accomplished by a peaceful and bloodless revolution. It is only men who do not know what they want who take up the sword.

The rank and file of the Democratic party must be amazed at the suggestion that their warring leaders are going to leave any question to them to settle.

Come to think of it, it is very appropriate for the Democratic party to hark back to a man who has been dead nearly a hundred years for its principles.

What a joke it would be if we were to grow so strong that the Republicans would be forced to endorse Bryan four years from now in an effort to stem the tide.

The business interests of the country get what it wants at the hands of the legislatures and congress, because it nominates the candidates for the workmen to vote for.

Four women are employed in factories where one was fifty years ago. That is a part of the great progress of the latter part of the nineteenth century that we hear so much about.

Bird E. Coler told the workmen of New York that being in the majority they could have such legislation as they might desire. This will certainly be news to them, but will they act on the information?

The powers will consider that the murder of the millionaires has been avenged if they can fix it so the Chinese will have no time to do anything but work for the bankers for the next hundred years.

EVOLUTION OF PLATFORMS.

It will hardly be denied by those who possess any knowledge of the progress of the Socialist movement within the last fifty years or so, that with the passage of time and the development of capitalist production, the vision of Socialists in general has become clearer as to methods of propaganda, and nowhere is this fact borne out more plainly than in the so-called "municipal platforms" formulated by local Socialist bodies here and there. The estimates placed upon "planks" have changed considerably, things which were once regarded as indispensable, or at least of great importance, have been relegated to secondary positions or neglected as being of insufficient value to obtain special mention in a local platform. The entire tendency has been towards curtailment and brevity. "Immediate demands" in many cases have disappeared and are disappearing, although the old name of "demands" is still used to describe that which has supplanted them.

There is good reason for these gradual changes. As the nature of the class struggle becomes more and more comprehensible to the members of Socialist organizations, the folly of "demanding" without the requisite power to enforce becomes ever more apparent. Utopian socialism vainly endeavored to "persuade" capitalism to abdicate, by pointing out the superiority of its "plan" of society. To show the practicability of such plans, experiments, "samples of socialism" were necessary. The invariable fate of these experiments is familiar to most of our readers. Socialism, considered wholly as a "plan" demonstrated its own impracticability.

From the writings of Marx, Engels, and others, a conception of the class struggle gradually forced itself upon the revolting workers. These writers had shown conclusively that capitalism itself must first be made impossible before socialism could be realized. But the old Utopian school of thought inevitably colored the ideas of those who had theoretically accepted the class struggle, while only partially grasping its nature and consequences. Between persuading capitalism to efface itself, and actually declaring that it must be overthrown by the united efforts of the working class, a middle ground was discovered which materialized in "demands" for certain specified measures which it was erroneously thought could be forced from capitalism and would serve as a foothold from which further demands could be made. Fabianism was supplanting Utopianism.

It then began to be perceived that in many instances the capitalist class were not only willing, but were being forced to consider certain propositions bearing an ostensible resemblance to some of the "demands" of the Socialists. It is now becoming apparent that this was not so much the result of "demanding" as it was a manifestation of the struggle raging between the great and small exploiter, and a desire upon the part of the more far-seeing members of that class to develop a bogus socialism which would not affect their material interests and which could at the same time serve as a barrier from behind which the ruling class could say to the revolting proletariat: "We are Socialists too." We will give you socialism. State ownership of railroads? Why certainly! Municipal ownership of gas, street cars, waterworks, electric lighting, etc. Nothing could suit us better. Just have a little patience and we will see to it that this shall be accomplished. We are all Socialists now.

But they didn't deem it necessary to admit that they considered themselves the "state." They conveniently forgot to say that the "municipality" meant the "property owners."

In many places however this promise has been partially made good. And it is now dawn upon the proletariat, in spite of the falsehoods circulated by the capitalist press, that so far as the working class are concerned, these "steps toward socialism" might as well never have been taken. So-called state socialism turns out to be merely state capitalism, and it is now becoming evident that between the Socialist idea of public or state ownership, and the capitalist idea, there is "a great gulf fixed."

The long string of ridiculous "demands" is in consequence being displaced by a few terse statements of measures calculated to directly benefit the working class. Measures, not demands. And it is pointed out, that the enforcement of these measures is entirely contingent upon the election of Socialist candidates to office, and the amount of power with which they are endowed.

Little can be done in any town, county, city, or even state, while capitalism remains supreme at Washington. Socialists know it and feel no reluctance about saying so, though what can be done will by no means be neglected. The chief value of Socialist participation in local elections is, first, to register the growth of socialism through the vote, and second (more particularly in case of local victory), to show practically to the working class, that while the central authority remains in the hands of their exploiters the capture of an outpost is in itself of little importance. The system of capitalist safeguards by which power descends from a central point down through states, counties, cities, towns and villages, is ever diminishing volume, was specially devised to thwart and check the action of any economic change hostile to the interests of the ruling class.

The evolution of local Socialist platforms constantly tends to embody more and more the declaration of Marx that the first step in the social revolution is that the working class shall make itself the ruling class. Some of the events which have led to this perception we have endeavored here to set forth. The period of "demands" is passing away, as it is being understood that the granting of these while capitalism continues in existence is utterly impossible and unthinkable. Neither will they be necessary when socialism attains political power. When that period arrives, the transformation of private property in the means of production and distribution into collectively owned property, will proceed on the assumption that capitalism is non-existent.

THE NEW CENTURY.

One hundred times has the earth made its circuit round the sun and the period known as the nineteenth century has gone to join its predecessors in its appointed place, the past of human history and human achievement. At such periods naturally enough the minds of men turn towards what has been accomplished in the past, as a sort of guide to the possibilities of the future, and the public press, which on the whole reflects the opinions of those whose lines have been cast in pleasant places, has recounted the marvelous strides made in the last hundred years in every branch of knowledge, the wonderful inventions which have been applied towards the satisfaction of human wants, the natural forces which man has harnessed to do his bidding, and in short, every factor which has contributed towards what is known as human progress has been exhibited in chronological order in the columns of the press for purposes of comparison, with the accomplishments of previous centuries. A glance over the long list will certainly convince the reader of average intelligence that in this respect the nineteenth century stands pre-eminent.

It is only when the question of how far the human race as a whole has benefited from this conquest of the productive powers of the world that doubt is cast, not upon the reality of the progress made, but upon whether the sum total of human happiness, security and contentment, has been increased in consequence. We think that to this question a negative answer must be returned.

The Socialist is not inclined to pessimism. He does not view any given period of time as an isolated entity unconnected with the past, or form his judgment of good or evil upon such conception. He knows that the material necessary for the wonderful progress of the nineteenth century were gradually gathered, stored and prepared during many preceding centuries.

and that the industrial revolution which has transformed the face of the world is as truly the child of the past as it is the parent of the future. The application and invention of the steam engine, electricity, the telephone, telegraph, etc., were no haphazard discoveries. They sprang from the economic conditions which demanded them and which stimulated the thought necessary for their production.

Those who mostly deny that happiness, the reasonable satisfaction of the physical and mental wants of the human race, is the end and object of society, generally attempt to show that all who have contributed to making possible the triumphs of the century just passed have been sharers in the benefits produced. To a very limited extent this is true, to a very large extent unqualifiedly false. At no period of the world's history have the mass of mankind received so little of what their labor has created, as at the present.

And it is the recognition of this fact, (not indeed expressed in these words), that alone casts a doubt upon the brilliant prospects marked out for the twentieth century by those who have profited through the labor of the nineteenth. An enormous mass of human beings deprived of their just portion of the wealth which is the creation of their own hands and brains, and gradually recognizing the reason of this deprivation is an unjust system of distribution, may well appear as a menace to those who affect to regard the present economic system as permanent.

The nineteenth century has solved the problem of production, the task of the twentieth will be the solution of the problem of distribution. The scientific knowledge of the present is also the property of one class, who control the means of livelihood of those who devote their labor to augmenting the sum of human knowledge. To apply this knowledge for the benefit, not of individuals, but of the entire community is a task which the twentieth century will see completed.

As the basis for what was accomplished in the last hundred years is to be found in the centuries preceding, so the nineteenth century has formulated the problem of the twentieth. "Shall the results of the social labor of mankind be appropriated by a small portion of society or shall they be the common heritage of all?" This is the question that must take precedence of all others in the immediate future. It cannot be evaded or suppressed. Economic necessity will compel mankind to deal with it, and there can be but one answer. The method of distribution must be made to harmonize with production. The twentieth century must complete the work of the nineteenth by substituting socialism for capitalism.

Central Music Hall Lectures.

The lectures on the ethical aspects of socialism by Prof. Geo. D. Herron began at Central Music Hall next Sunday afternoon, January 6th, at 3:30 o'clock. Judging from the interest already manifested, Central Music Hall will be well filled to greet Prof. Herron at his first lecture. Prof. Herron is one of the most powerful and untiring advocates of the cause of socialism in the country, and no pains should be spared by Chicago Socialists to see that there is a great attendance at the Sunday lectures. All lectures are free. Cards advertising the same may be had at the Social Crusade, 608 Ashland block.

"Call" Hustlers.

Comrade Alvin Appel, of the C. C. C. of San Francisco, Cal., sends us an order for 100 copies of the Workers' Call for 15 weeks. The comrades on the Pacific coast are interested in what Socialists are doing in Chicago.

Comrade Thos. M. Purcell, of Long Beach, Cal., renews his subscription and writes an interesting letter on local affairs. Long Beach has a promising local of 34 members.

Mrs. Turner of Colorado, sends us a list of thirty subscribers from the mining districts of that state.

Comrade E. O. Knaus of this city turns in a club of seven yearlies and six half-yearlies.

Five six months subscribers were put on our list Monday by F. Boerama of Pullman. Comrade Boerama also equipped himself with eight postals.

Geo. Lyne, of Fairbury, Ill., sends us a list of 11 half-yearly subs from his town, and writes that more will come later. You may bet that Fairbury will have a number of Socialists by the time the grass grows.

Robt. Plotter, of this city, sends us another club of ten.

Fifteen yearly postal cards go to Comrade Anton Bounsgartner, of Central, Ill.

August Ellman, of Beaver, Macon county, Missouri, sends us a list of eight half-yearly subscribers.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

And now comes the news from Europe that insurance companies absolutely refuse to take further risks on the crowned heads of Europe, the murder of the King of Italy being the event which mainly prompted this decision. It is not stated that Kaiser Wilhelm has attempted to bring his "lese majeste" statute into action against the insurance companies upon this account, though he is ever ready to apply its provisions to a Socialist editor or writer. And yet socialism could make the life of Kaiser Wilhelm more secure than all the insurance companies in the world provided he was willing to produce an equivalent for his physical and social wants. But then of course both emperors and insurance companies would have to go out of "business."

It is also stated that the insurance companies are now contemplating the introduction of special rates for millionaires, owing to the numerous attacks upon the "rich" which have recently occurred. The "rich" man is thus recognized as an object of special hatred, and his murder an event somewhat more likely to happen than ordinary. This would seem to bear out the Socialist assertion that under capitalism a man is not judged by what he is, but by what he has.

The infamous Esterhazy, notorious through his connection with the Dreyfus case, is said to be perishing from cold and hunger in London. His fellow scoundrel, Mercier, may consider himself fortunate that he was not compelled to "invade" England in a similar manner.

The opening of the new century is to see an attempt made for the wholesale "evangelization" of the United States through the co-operative effort on the part of the existing churches. One week of "united prayer" is to inaugurate the attempt, which it is declared will result in one of the greatest religious "awakenings" ever known in the history of the country. Two million "souls" and incidentally twenty million dollars are to be garnered before January 1st, 1902. The fact that the chairman of the movement is known as "the business man evangelist" may perhaps give the casual reader some idea as to which of the two objects are most likely to be secured.

The capitalist class may perhaps be induced to open their purses for the furtherance of this scheme, but we do not hesitate to prophesy that the results will not come up to expectations. The "business man's" evangel shows signs of being played out as a drawing card. If the exploitation of the workers is to continue, the exploiters who attempt to hypnotize them into a state of non-resistance, will find that the present occupies their attention considerably more than any hypothetical "hereafter." The twentieth century will not be devoted to preparations for life in another world, so much as to making the present one habitable and decent for those who live on it. The "good tidings" of socialism will shortly supplant the discredited evangel of the "business man" and all that it now represents.

Following the example of Rev. Mr. Sheldon, an English clergyman tackled the editorship of a London daily for one week and then quit in disgust. He gave it as his opinion that it "was impossible for a daily paper to live without gambling," and that this would not be necessary if Christians were not "dead." We wonder what use the reverend gentleman will make of this discovery. Will he inquire into the reason why these things are so, or will he merely remain "disgusted?" Or will he in time recover from his disgust and again endeavor to sow seed on the stony ground? Most probably the latter course will be adopted. A wealthy and influential congregation, together with a good salary are generally sufficient to bind the average clergyman to the fact that capitalism has assimilated what is known as "Christianity," and that divorce can only be obtained through the medium of socialism.

The "midnight ordinance" which requires that saloons and other places where liquor is sold shall close at 12 p.m. is to be enforced, at least while the "crusade against vice" is at its height. The papers record the startling fact that many of the "better class resorts" have closed their doors just the same as those of evil repute. A large proportion of the former owe their reputation mostly to the fact that higher prices are paid for the liquor consumed there. The sacrifices made by the mayor and police officials in joining the army for the "suppression of vice" are generally unappreciated by the public. Diminished revenues and the loss of their grip on the political bums and beilers are by no means to be regarded as trifles when political exigencies are up for consideration.

Dun and Bradstreet's reports show a large increase in the number of business failures for 1900. As usual the immense majority of them were concerns with less than $5,000 capital.

The "full dinner pail" doesn't seem to be affected by the disappearance of the little business cookshops, which have given way to the larger and better equipped concerns. The passing away of the middle class is a matter of small importance to the wage worker. When the latter finds his dinner pail empty, with the first touch of the coming crisis he will be able to discern the cause.

The close of the century has given the capitalist newspaper scribbler and other notorious weakens an opportunity to voice their opinions as to what the new century will bring forth. With striking unanimity they can see only the interests of the present ruling class in the future. The wage-earners are ignored altogether or vaguely told that their lot will improve.

This is as it should be. To the proletarian there is no new century. Another era will only begin for him when his class have made themselves supreme in city, state and nation, and use the power thus acquired solely to safeguard the interests of those who produce wealth.

A newspaper trust is now threatened. The big English editor, Mr. Harmsworth, who is now visiting this country, given it as his deliberate opinion that a single newspaper cannot much longer be profitably conducted, and that it requires the ownership of at least three daily journals to make profitable exploitation of the news business possible. It is a curious coincidence, that the rabid anti-monopolist Hearst, comes nearer fulfilling the requirements of a newspaper monopoly than any other journalistic concern in the United States.

BOOK REVIEWS.

A SOCIALIST'S VIEW OF RELIGION AND THE CHURCHES, by Tom Mann; International Library Publishing Co., 23 Duane St., New York; price, 5 cents.

This work contains in plain and simple language perhaps the best statement of the attitude with which a large and growing number of the working class regard what is today termed "religion" and the "church." Although it cannot be truthfully said that every particular count in the indictment is original, it is none the less true that not one of them have ever been refuted by the apologists for what is popularly, though falsely, described as "religion." The alliance of the modern churches with the upholders of the present economic system, the tendency to minimize, ignore or justify, the appalling social contrasts of the age, the soporific cast by which it is attempted to persuade the plundered victims of capitalist class rule, that suffering here brings reward hereafter, the nauseous hypocrisy which prays for the kingdom of God to come on earth, and at the same time insists that the prayer is impossible of realization, are all used by the writer to justify the hostility with which Socialists, as well as large numbers of non-Socialist workmen, regard the "religion" of the present day, and the "churches" through which it finds expression. The book should, if possible, be placed in the hands of ministers of all denominations. Whatever they may think of it, there is no doubt that it represents largely what workmen think of the institutions for which they speak and whose existence they are supposed to justify.

HOW TO WORK FOR SOCIALISM, by Walter Thomas Mills; Chas. H. Kerr & Co., 66 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.; price, 5 cents.

The appearance of this, the latest addition to the well-known "Pocket Library of Socialism," is at the present time exceedingly opportune. A work of this sort has long been needed, and will be found full of valuable information by those having grasped the truths of socialism and who feel the necessity of spreading its principles. There can be little doubt that a large amount of attempted propaganda work is either lost or wasted by injudicious methods of presenting it to those whom it is designed to influence, or failure to choose those most susceptible to its reception. The writer points out in simple, though elegant language, the best methods of reaching the unregenerated. Valuable pointers are given as to Socialist equipment, selection of audience, manner of approaching the subject, literature, correspondence, organization, and other factors necessary to successful Socialist propaganda. No comrade who intends spreading the light to the best of his ability, should fail to provide himself with a copy of "How to Work for Socialism." It is perhaps one of the most practical of the entire series of the Pocket Library, and in view of the nature of the work now before the advocates of socialism, it has appeared, as we said before, just at the right time.

Edward Cudahy, the Omaha packer whose son was recently abducted and ransomed, has, according to press reports, just received a communication from the thieves, stating that if the reward offered for their arrest and conviction is not instantly withdrawn, they intend to capture one of his daughters in the same manner. A deal of silly talk has been expended upon the fancied woes of the wealthy, but here at least is a grievance which is certainly genuine. And yet even here the advantage lies with those who are able to pay the ransom demanded. Numberless children of the working class have been snatched away from their parents by preventable diseases, which the latter, through poverty, were unable to cope with. The conditions of capitalist society make away with more children in one week than individual child-stealers could in a hundred years.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The International Bureau.

Editor Workers' Call:—At the request of the Dear Sir, please publish the following: To the Locals of the Social Democratic Party:—Comrades:—The Paris Socialist International Congress has adopted a resolution creating the Socialist International Bureau, with headquarters in Brussels, Belgium. The chief duties that will devolve on this bureau will be to draw the Socialist parties of the world into closer relations, receive reports and make arrangements for the International congress. Its other functions will be defined later.

The Socialist party or parties of each country, which adhere to the resolutions of the International congress, may be represented at the International Bureau by two delegates, or secretaries. In pursuance of this resolution the locals are hereby called upon to make nominations of candidates for two secretaries. Each local may nominate only two candidates. Any member of the party in good standing may be nominated. In nominating candidates the comrades will bear in mind that the secretaries may be called upon to pass not only upon matters concerning the Socialist movement of our country, but upon questions concerning the movement of other countries. The officers of the locals are requested to forward the NAMES and ADDRESS of the candidates nominated to the National Secretary, not later than February 9th, 1901.

Cincinnati Wants Unity.

Editor Workers' Call:—Branch Four of Cincinnati, with forty members, has until recently been a strong supporter of the Chicago Board. A large percentage of the members are brainy men and active workers for socialism. Since the presidential election the question of unity has been freely discussed, with the result that the integrity of the Chicago Board has been strongly impugned by all. The only alternative to the Chicago Board, the "loyal" members is that they have had no faith in the Springfield Executive Committee, but none have a sufficiently vivid imagination to see in any of the acts of that body the slightest sign of aversion to unity.

The call by the Chicago Board for a convention in January, is looked upon by its followers here as a move to sidetrack unity propositions. Branch Four elected a delegate to the convention, but it is now practically decided that no delegate will be sent.

It is generally conceded that the instigators of discord are to use a common expression, "dead ones."

The outposts of socialism of Cincinnati Socialists is that it is time to drop the discussion of unity, and unite.

A Socialist Sunday School.

Editor Workers' Call:—Did you ever hear of a Socialist Sunday School? Well, the Fifteenth Ward branch started one last Sunday morning. Before long you will hear Socialist songs from one end of the ward to the other. The little ones may perhaps be able to spread socialism even better and quicker than "public meetings," for they will be practically pleading for their own future. Have you any children, reader? If so send them here or start a similar school in your own ward. Teachers should be easily secured, as there certainly must be many public school teachers who long for a chance like this where they can teach undisturbed what they feel and believe. Every child is naturally a Socialist, and would remain so but for the influences of the public schools, where the education given is entirely controlled by the capitalist class. The Socialist Sunday school will do much to correct this evil.

The small business men will no doubt find much comfort in the fact that when the delayed payment of the teachers' salaries at last took place, 1,100 of the latter, according to the newspaper reports, at once made tracks for the department stores, and helped swell the business of the latter to no small extent through their purchases.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

Its Claims to Special Prominence in Local Socialist Platform Cannot Be Sustained.

The fact that the municipal platform of the Chicago Socialist party does not contain a declaration in favor of "municipal ownership of public utilities" has aroused considerable comment and some objections. These objections may be properly divided into two classes: First, there are those who maintain that while such ownership is not necessarily a part of socialism, it is of sufficient importance to the laborers to deserve mention in a Socialist platform; second, it is said that such ownership is a "first-step" in the direction of socialism, or is an example of "socialism in practice" and ought therefore to be made the "issue" of this campaign by Socialists.

To be sure there is still a third form of objection which has been put forward by a little handful of people, who masking under the name of socialism are seeking to disrupt all Socialist activity and organization. These would have it that the absence of a declaration in favor of municipal ownership indicates that the party is OPPOSED to it. But it is so manifestly evident that these persons are "dishonest" in their position that it is not worth while to notice them, the more so, as the account of the convention proceedings in The Call specifically stated the contrary and the platform itself declares in favor of "obtaining for the working class all that is possible under the present system so long as it shall last;" and finally it was pointed out at the convention, and reported in The Call, that it was the sense of those present that this point was already covered, and given all the prominence it deserved in the state and national platforms.

Regarding those objections which are put forward in good faith, it may be said that the first one stated above was the one upon which the most of the debate of the convention was concentrated. It is maintained by those opposed to the introduction of such a plank into a Socialist platform that there are hundreds of things that are capable of accomplishment within the confines of capitalism that are infinitely of more importance to the worker than municipal gas, street cars, and electric lights. It was furthermore pointed out that the agitation for these things was exclusively by the capitalist class, a fact which no one who has an atom of honesty and ability to observe can deny. Reference is not here made to the perfunctory resolutions that have been passed by labor unions at the behest of small property owners, or in response to an agitation started and maintained by similar bodies, but to the actual vital agitation that has from the beginning been carried on for municipal ownership. If this is traced down it will be found in every instance that the inspiring minds back of the agitation are the ones who will reap a benefit and those who are the suburban landlords, store-keepers, and in short, the same interests that are supporting Bryanism. The fact that laborers sometimes passed resolutions in favor of free silver and high tariff did not inspire Socialists to place those demands in their platform. The Socialists if elected would, as a matter of course, take possession of these industries, in the same way as they would see to it that the streets were kept clean and the city hall office floors swept, but they are not mountebanks enough to claim that any of these things are of sufficient importance to the laborers to be made an "issue." Those who framed the Chicago Socialist platform and defended it on the floor of the convention, believed that it was of more interest to the laborers of Chicago that their children should have proper and adequate school facilities and should be provided with food and clothing, (not as a charity, but as a right, in the same way as they now receive free books and desks), than it was that the corner grocer should get his gas ten cents a thousand cheaper. They believed that it would be a greater help to the producing classes of this city to have their own lives lengthened, and those of their children saved, by securing to them the benefit of the scientific medical knowledge of today, than it would be to permit the city of Chicago to sell electric lighting to the residents of the Lake Shore Drive. The Socialists were foolish enough to think that the laborers of this city would be more helped by the guarantee of employment to the unemployed, and the consequent removal of the haunting terror of want and suffering from their homes, than by being permitted to take fifty cents less a month out of the pocket labelled "carfare" and keeping it until the landlord demanded one dollar more. But there is no accounting for tastes.

On the second point the Socialists are quite sure that if the capitalists are permitted to select the "steps" which will be taken toward socialism they will select a very round-about way and may lose us in the wilderness of confusion. The Socialist cannot see that the Belgian state railways, with their one-fifth of a cent per mile fare, have done as much for socialism in that country as the presence of a few fighting Socialist laborers in the Chamber of Deputies, and it would require close searching among the Socialist patrons of the Hiramian "public utilities" to find one so hopelessly foolish as to speak of their ownership by the state as having any relation to socialism.

All these arguments will fade away as a greater knowledge of scientific socialism comes to displace the Utopian Fabianism that still fills the minds of many and those who claim the name of Socialist. The American movement has not yet entirely rid itself of the phase through which France passed in the time of Fourier and Cabet, and many an American Socialist is still building, all unconsciously, on the crumbling ruins of Owen, Brook Farm, and Fourier, thinking that the props of Bellamy have made them a firm foundation, not realizing that he has only covered them with the beautiful growth of literary rhy.

NOT IN THE SAME CLASS.

Where China Falls Behind the Modern Methods of Using Human Raw Material.

Latest advices from China state that "capitalism prevails in the province of Shansi and that human flesh is offered for sale in many villages." On reading over the dispatch a second time we find that a trifling mistake in orthography has been made: "Capitalism" should read "cannibalism." The difference, however, is so slight, that perhaps the correction is hardly necessary.

It may be that the progressive inhabitants of Shansi are merely trying to accustom themselves by degrees to the altered conditions which may be looked for when the "civilized" powers agree amongst themselves as to who shall exploit Shansi, when the "partition" takes place. If this surmise is correct it shows that China is at last "awakening" to a sense of her "moral" responsibilities in the future, and preparing to take her place amongst the "civilized" nations of the earth.

Of course it could not be expected that Shansi could possibly adopt at once the most improved methods of utilizing human flesh, such as are practised by those who have brought to China the light of capitalist civilization. Doubtless the method of extracting the most out of that commodity is still unknown in the far off Chinese province, but there is no doubt that eventually "waste will be eliminated." If it were possible to bring to this country a deputation of the most prominent and influential business men of Shansi, and initiate them into the mysteries of modern up-to-date cannibalism as it is here practised, their return to their own land might be reasonably expected to inaugurate an era of "prosperity" such as we are now enjoying.

They could here be shown a traffic in human flesh of such enormous magnitude that the well-meant efforts of their compatriots in the Shansi villages would sink into absolute nothingness. They might first be apprised of the demand for many thousands of choice carcasses (on the hoof), required to fill the ranks of the army and navy. Their attention might then be directed to the countless hosts of women who offer their persons for sale on the streets of our great cities, to the numerous establishments devoted to consuming these bargains, to the traffic in helms, and last and greatest, the rapid consumption of the bodies of millions of men, women and children in the mills, mines, factories, and sweatshops of this much-favored land, the skillful and economic transformation of human raw material into the concentrated extract known as "profit."

Even then the marvels of modern cannibalism would still remain unexhausted. Another phase more wonderful still could be brought forward for their astonishment and admiration, the existence of which the most prominent cannibals in Shansi never even dreamed of. What would our visitors say if they could grasp the idea that hundreds of thousands of human beings were constantly searching, struggling, scheming and striving to secure the privilege of being consumed—of having their bodily forces extracted and transformed into profit for the benefit of the buyers? They would be compelled to admit that the true art of deriving a subsistence from human flesh was utterly unknown in Shansi.

Looking Backward.

The various comments of press and profession on the century just closed remind one of men raised in low-ceilinged cellars. When they get too tall to walk upright within their confines, they stoop, and consequently their forms assume a bent posture, which is retained during life.

Being ignorant of the fact they do not realize that by coming out into the open a better world would lay before them, so they make themselves as comfortable as men possibly can, who are continually striking their heads against the confines which ought to remind them should be removed.

Speaking about the basic elements underlying cities—industry and commerce—the Tribune has the following to say:

Indeed, searching discussion of these elemental matters has been left during this generation largely to various protesting schools of radical thought, and the dominating elements in society, partially from preoccupation and partially because their immediate advantage has—perhaps mistakenly—not appeared to lie in that line, have never faced, in a patient and thorough-going manner, the influence of our productive and distributive life upon political expression and general social development.

So far correct, the Tribune does not see, however, that the searching discussion is done by just those who should do it—the revolutionaries—who will see to it that things are remedied, by getting a majority of all to be revolutionary.

Do you not think that 100 copies of The Workers' Call coming to your town every week would help your cause along? You can have them with but a very little trouble. Write for supplies and get to work.

"DUTY" OF THE "RICH."

Ex-mayor Hewitt Advocates Increased Almsgiving, As a Remedy for Human Evil.

Now and then as some individual member of the ruling class look over the economic field, he becomes "conscience stricken" when the terrible contrast between wealth and poverty rises up before his mental vision. It is very seldom however that his utterances upon this question ever tend to endanger the system which creates these horrors. For instance, last week we have the partial report of a speech by Abram S. Hewitt, ex-mayor of New York, delivered before the originators of a "Civic Reform" movement in that city. The report adds that "many rich and fashionable people were present," and listened approvingly to the "striking utterances" of Ex-mayor Hewitt, as he described what the press report calls the "staggering price paid for industrial prosperity, as proved in the condition of the poor and the selfishness of the rich."

Ex-mayor Hewitt started off by saying that "The rich have not begun to do what they ought to do."

Then what "ought" the "rich" to do? In his next sentence the ex-mayor shows two things. First, that his statement that the "rich have not begun, etc." is false. Second, that he considers it the duty of the rich to "give" to the poor—to "give" more than they are at present giving. In other words the duty of the rich towards the poor can only be performed by a constant extension of alms-giving. This is how he puts it, in the most illogical paragraph perhaps that ever issued from a muddled brain:

"Men that I almost worship for their generosity and solicitude for those that have less are not giving in proportion to their wealth, the half what was given by their families a generation ago."

First these people have "not begun to do." Next it seems that they are giving, but in proportion to their wealth, less than half the amount that their families gave a generation ago. The speaker then asserts that he almost worships them. What for? For "not having begun?" No. For giving less than half, etc.? No. He almost worships them "for their generosity!" If there is anything "striking" about this utterance except its remarkable foolishness, we totally fail to see it. But this is about the best brand of logic that the sentimentalist can possibly afford. The ex-mayor then interjected his "rich and fashionable audience" as follows:

"Have we the right to take all this wealth and do nothing to correct the evils created in its production?" If Ex-mayor Hewitt had been addressing an assembly of young men starting out in "business" life he would never have cast a doubt upon the "right" to take the product of the labor of others. He would have shown that "success" depended upon the ability of each of his individual hearers to perform this feat more thoroughly than his competitors. He would have labeled this quality "energy," "thrift," "perseverance," "business foresight," "commercial ability," etc., etc., and would have assured the young men that the accumulation of wealth could only be realized through the exercise of these "virtues." The "evils" created in its production" could be conveniently overlooked while the business of labor-skinning was in full swing. After the "rich and fashionable" stage had been attained it would then be in order to "correct the evils" by handing back part of the plunder, under the cloak of "charity." The "right to take all this wealth" involves the sacred "duty" of making beggars of those from whom it is taken.

Socialists have been constantly reproached with want of respect for "good intentions," with intolerance and want of consideration for those who were described as "doing their best" to ameliorate and make more tolerable the social conditions of the age. They have been accused of discouraging the well-meant efforts of "reformers," of referring to "charity" in tones of contempt, of refusing to aid or encourage to those who felt they had a "mission" to perform in striking at some special effect of capitalist civilization. To all this the Socialist may reply that these schemes consist entirely of "good intentions," that they are utterly impotent and that the conception of their uselessness (invariably comes from the very people who formulate them—if the latter are but permitted to talk long enough. And Ex-mayor Hewitt is no exception to the general rule. His closing paragraph which is here reported shows positively that he has no belief in his own remedies, and that in the face of social conditions he stands in helpless, hopeless ignorance.

"Good God! Can this be the end to which we have been working all these centuries? For heaven's sake, is this the result of our industrial development, and must our prosperity, as a nation, be purchased at such a staggering price? If these terrible tendencies these over-crowded districts, these dark and foul dwelling places, all these miseries must attend industry, then I would to God that every industrial center could be destroyed as were Babel and Gomorrah of old and man be driven back to the fields."

Possibly, like most of his class, Ex-mayor Hewitt has been confronted with the philosophy of socialism, and like them he has most probably dismissed it as visionary and impracticable, and yet the remedy he postulates in the opening of Aja speech transforms itself into a tale of despairing, ignorant, impotence towards the close. Like the magician, who by his incantations raised the evil spirit which he was unable to exorcise, Mr. Hewitt gazes in horror upon the handwork of his class, without the slightest comprehension of how it all came about. There was no intention upon the part of the class to which Mr. Hewitt belongs, that society should ever reach the stage where the spectre of universal pauperism should confront a small group holding the wealth of a nation in their possession. While this process was developing, the intentions of the latter were of the best. And now they come forward to announce that they wish to undo something, of which according to their own confession, they have not the slightest conception as to how it came into existence. Why should those who are ignorant of the nature of the disease be considered competent to apply a remedy?

Frantic appeals to Heaven are mere waste of breath, when applied to social conditions. There is no likelihood that industrial centers will perish under a deluge of fire and brimstone from the skies, neither will man be driven back to the fields. Such imaginings are even more impracticable than socialism, though apparently Ex-mayor Hewitt does not think so. "Industry" can be carried on without the terrible accompaniments which outrage the humanitarian instincts of Mr. Hewitt. And there is no doubtful "if" about it either. Those who mainly pay the "staggering price" of the prosperity which the capitalist class enjoy are already gathering for the solution of the problem which Mr. Hewitt cannot even understand.

And they expect no assistance from miraculous celestial fires, or from the ignorant sentimentalism of capitalist reformers. Long before the new born century has attained its meridian this question will have been settled once for all by the ballots of millions of class-conscious Socialist workmen in every nation on the globe.

LABOR ITEMS

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Exchanges, Throughout the United States.

The four big Bible printing houses in England have formed a trust and raised the cost of "the book" 25 per cent. Salvation is going up—skyward.

Over in Indiana the Populists, Silver Republicans and Union Reformers, or what is left of them, will flock together next month and hold a confab.

At every election held in Germany during the past few months the Socialists have been either victorious in the matter of winning seats or increasing their votes.

There are more tramps and paupers in the United States today than there were men, women and children in the original thirteen colonies at the time of the Revolutionary War.—Eric People.

It may not be generally known, but it appears to be a fact that Denmark is the best organized country in the world. Recent statistics show that 76.7 per cent of workmen and 12.7 per cent of the women are trade unionists.

A few thousand workmen at the Iron Mills have been made superfluous. A new machine that welds couplings is being placed in the mills. A laborer feeds material in at one end and the finished product drops out at the other.—Ex.

Sausagemakers in Philadelphia went on strike in a plant because the bosses searched them to see whether they had any sausages concealed about their persons when they quit work. Bosses probably surmised that they heard a bark.

The "Book and News Dealer" of San Francisco is howling for co-operation amongst retail booksellers. Out With a "Challenge."

Still another Socialist arrival in the literary field. Los Angeles is the birthplace of "The Challenge," edited by Comrade Wilschire. From a glance at its contents it is probable that the enemies of socialism may be expected to ignore "The Challenge" of Comrade Wilschire, according to their usual custom.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Provisional City Central Committee meets at 32 Wells street on Saturday, January 12th at 8 p. m. All delegates are requested to be present.

Fred K. G. Strickland can be seen any day (except Sunday), between 1 and 2, at room 34, Metropolitan Block, 163 Randolph street; phone, Main-3065.

The Twelfth Ward branch reports good progress. At the last meeting four new members were admitted. Comrade Strickland's report of the meeting will be found in another part of our columns.

At the regular meeting of the Eleventh Ward branch, the new constitution was voted upon, the call for a special state convention endorsed, and preparations to defray expenses of delegates attending thereat from different parts of the state.

All members of the Fifth Ward branch are requested to attend the next business meeting of the branch, Monday evening, January 17th, at 3701 Wentworth avenue, entrance on Twenty-seventh street. Business of importance requires your presence.

The Fourth Ward branch, which has been organized little more than three weeks, is pushing ahead at a remarkable rate. Starting with but twelve members, it is rapidly augmenting its numbers, and has already secured headquarters at 2555 State street, where meetings will be held throughout the winter.

Comrade S. Robbins has been re-elected as organizer by the Fifteenth Ward branch. Comrade Simons has been invited by the branch to deliver a series of four lectures dealing with scientific socialism and the class struggle. The Fifteenth Ward branch intends to keep its reputation as one of the most aggressive branches in the city.

Fourteenth Ward branch have arranged for meetings every Friday night at 8 p. m. They have secured a meeting place at 34 W. Division street. Different speakers will address the meetings every week. The branch is in a flourishing condition and will do its part towards making an aggressive campaign during the months previous to the election.

A large meeting of Woodworkers' union No. 61 met on last Friday evening at 623 1/2 Halsted street to listen to the address of Comrade T. J. Morgan, who spoke on the "Progress of the Workers from Slavery to Freedom." The large hall was crowded with the members of the union, business being suspended at 8:45 p. m. to listen to the speaker. Agitation continued until 10:30, and after answering many questions from the audience, a unanimous vote of thanks was tendered to the speaker.

A meeting at which over 200 persons were present was addressed on last Sunday at 344 Armitage avenue, by Comrade T. J. Morgan, who took as his subject the "History of the Co-operative Movement of the World." The lecture was much appreciated by the audience. Comrade Morgan will speak on January 15th at Local Union 194, Painters and Decorators of America, at 466 Milwaukee avenue at 8 p. m. On January 13th at 8 p. m. he will speak before the Socialist Educational Club, at 1122 Milwaukee avenue.

One of the best speeches ever made for socialism in the Fifteenth ward, delivered by Comrade Mills, last Friday night at the hall of the branch, 545 Armitage avenue. The subject was "The Department Store and Socialism," and the large audience, mostly composed of small store-keepers, showed their interest and appreciation, by frequent applause. The speaker pointed out clearly how the department store, with its large capital, was steadily crushing out its smaller rivals; the impossibility of destroying it was also made apparent—and the remedy, which the speaker described as the establishing of a monster store, larger than any or all ever built, in which every man, woman and child should be part owner—the Co-operative Commonwealth.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Glimpses of the World-wide Struggle of the Proletarian Army for Its Liberty.

BELGIUM.

The Socialists have prepared a bill introducing one year's service in the army.

FRANCE.

The "Petite Republique" is trying to put down sweating in the selling and distribution of its journal. The sweaters who have shamefully exploited the sellers of the paper are trying to boycott the paper, but so far unsuccessfully. In France, as here, the difficulty is to bring the newspaper to the notice of the man in the street.

GERMANY.

The day after Count von Buelow's speech in the Reichstag, Bebel also spoke. He, too, referred to the Transvaal and showed how, looking at the famous telegram of the Emperor after the Jameson raid, President Kruger might well fancy that he would receive German support. Bebel pointed out how the German government had been wanting in tact in not letting the President know before he left France that the Emperor could not receive him. He showed how in this case the German people were of a different opinion to the Emperor, and said that the new motto should be: "The German princes fear God . . . and their grandmother."

In November, Socialists were sentenced to two years, six months and five weeks' imprisonment, and to fines of £145. This is rather below the average. The prosecutors have been busy with scandals and will make up, no doubt, for lost time next month.—London Justice.

"We believe that immunity is extended to the vicious and criminal classes." So runs the grand jury report on existing conditions in Chicago. The number of swindling bankers, embezzlers, defrauders, etc., who have been recently pardoned and again set free to prey upon society, would seem to substantiate the report of the grand jury.

The daily press reports that our comrade, the Rev. Chas. E. Valli, has resigned his pastorate in order to devote his time to Socialist propaganda.

WHY THE LAW "COLLAPSES."

Report of the State Factory Inspector Shows Futility of Child Labor Laws.

The annual report of the State Factory Inspector shows that nearly 11,000 children of both sexes, under the age of sixteen years, are employed in Chicago factories alone, and states also that "girls and boys of tender years are crowding out grown men and women as factory employees," and all in spite of the laws enacted against child-labor, which is declared to be a complete failure.

The report then goes on to state that previous reports have "repeatedly pointed out the weakness of the present method of preventing child labor under the age of 14, the numerical insufficiency of the present force of inspectors, and the total collapse of the other clauses of the law, which aim to protect the health of the children and to forbid their work at those occupations where their lives or limbs are in danger or their health likely to be injured or their morals depraved."

It might be asked why the law "collapses" when it is attempted to apply it to the end for which it was apparently enacted. We rarely if ever hear of this disaster occurring when the law takes the form of an injunction against striking workmen. Volumes of misleading excuses have been brought forward to account for the non-enforcement of child-labor laws, but all are careful to abstain from mentioning the fundamental reason for such failure. The Socialist alone comprehends that the law is merely the instrument of those who control the law making power, and is never allowed to interfere with their material interests. The provisions of the child-labor law were never intended to be strictly enforced. Its enactment was merely an ostensible concession to the clamor of the majority of the working class, who still imagine that laws are not made in the interests of a ruling class but for the "welfare of the community."

Is there then no remedy through law? Yes, but it depends entirely upon who it is that controls its making, interpretation, and enforcement. With the powers of the legislature, judiciary and executive in the hands of the capitalist class it is only reasonable to suppose that capitalist interests will be conserved. When the working class control the law-making power in all its branches it is equally evident that the expression, interpretation and enforcement of law will maintain the interests of the producers. But the laws that capitalists fail to enforce will, when socialism supplants the present system, most probably remain neglected. There will then be no reason for "child-labor laws," because there will be no reason for child labor, which will in consequence itself be abolished. The profit system alone makes it necessary at present, the destruction of that system will make it unnecessary in the future.

A Socialist Chorus.

An enthusiastic meeting of the Socialists of the Twelfth and Thirteenth wards was held at 1003 W. Madison street, Sunday, December 23. It was decided to continue this meeting Sunday mornings at 10:30 o'clock, (during January, February and March), with the special purpose of developing a Socialist chorus.

The Schubert String Quartette have been secured for this meeting.

This meeting is held at an odd time, so that members and friends from other sections of the city may come and join the chorus. Get in line, Socialist singers, for the spring campaign.

Fred K. G. Strickland has been engaged as organizer for the Twelfth and Thirteenth wards and will devote all of his time to the work. He will give a short address at each of these Sunday morning meetings. Four new members were received at last Sunday's meeting, and all forces will be directed to make this a purely propaganda enterprise.

No expense will be attached to the joining of this chorus, save that of purchasing music. Comrade Strickland will be sustained by voluntary 10-cent per week contributions. The Socialists of the Twelfth and Thirteenth wards, following the example already set by the comrades of the Fifteenth ward, hope to see local organizers employed in all sections of the city.

Come to 1003 W. Madison street, corner Western avenue, Sunday, 10:30 a. m., and bring your voice with you!

The year 1901 promises to be as prolific of new Socialist journals as the past year has been. A new Socialist monthly, The Wage Worker, has made its initial appearance at Detroit, Mich. Sixteen pages of well-selected matter for 5 cents is what it presents to its readers. It stands entirely upon the Socialist platform, and may be expected to do good work in the cause. There's more of the same kind coming, and we say, "Let 'em come." Plenty of room in this land for Socialist papers yet.

A New York politician has declared in a speech delivered at a Civic Federation meeting, that "The workingmen can accomplish anything they undertake if they will make their tool the ballot box instead of boycott."

This is a rather dangerous admission from a capitalist politician, but only dangerous because of its truth.

No bill will ever be sent to any subscriber of this paper. If you did not pay for it some one else did. The number with which your subscription expires is on the wrapper. Watch it and when your time is out, if you like the principles the paper teaches send in your renewal.

ETHICAL PROBLEMS

Central Music Hall Address By Geo. D. Herron.

EXCERPTS FROM THE LECTURE

First of the Series Is Attended by a Very Large and Thoroughly Appreciative Audience.

Last Sunday afternoon at Central Music Hall, corner of Randolph and State streets, Comrade Geo. D. Herron delivered the first of a series of twelve lectures on the ethical aspect of socialism. Despite the inclemency of the weather the large auditorium was filled almost to its capacity. It is conservatively estimated that fully 1,500 persons were present. Comrade Herron spoke for an hour and a half to an attentive and appreciative audience as ever gathered on such an occasion. The course of the lectures which extend through the months of January, February and March will undoubtedly prove of great value to the Socialist movement in Chicago. Socialists should not neglect the opportunity to bring their friends to hear these lectures. Comrade Herron will lecture every Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. Admission is free.

The subject of Comrade Herron's first lecture was the "Need of a New Religious Synthesis." How thoroughly and satisfactorily he handled the subject is shown in the following excerpts from the lecture. The Workers' Call regrets that for want of space it cannot publish the whole address:

"It is in the fragmentary and uncompromising nature of recent reform programs that we must seek their failure. They are not followed because they are not worth following; not worthy of noble faith or thoughtful enthusiasm. No pulpit and no secularism has been so much of late reform effort, that the people have rightly refused its faith and respect. Not because of anything radical in recent programs have they and their leaders been without effective following; but because of their very lack of radicalism. There has been no movement in the last decade when the people were not far and away more radical than any of their leaders; but the leaders were too stupid and unbelieving to know it. We have reached the case in which the sheep have much more sense than their shepherds. It is one of the signs of promise that men will not now be led by tame and tinkering proposals. It means that heroism is becoming scientific; that the spiritual instinct of the common life can be trusted to know what is greatly worth while. When the definite and comprehensively radical program appears, and the interpreter comes who shall speak the right word in its behalf, the people will flock to it full-armed, and will leave no hostages behind them.

"Now if we closely question the different problems of our arising world-crisis, we shall find that we are dealing with what is really but one problem under different phases. Each expresses a form of the growing conflict of the self-governing idea of life against the capitalistic idea from which our laws, customs, springs. By a far-seeing instinct, the self-governing idea now postulates itself upon a democratic Socialist movement for the overthrow of the economic system upon which existing religious, political and moral systems clearly depend. The coercive state, the spiritually coercive religious institution, the economically coercive wage-system, the coercive morality that is so destructive to the growth and integrity of the individual soul, all spring from the same capitalistic root. Pull up that root, and you pull up the whole civilization that grows upon it. Every institution or system that is intrinsically related to capitalism will have to go when capitalism goes. Let us out with the whole truth of the matter, and wince not at the immensity of its issues and consequences. There will then be no confusing the lines of conflict, and we shall be more likely to acquit ourselves as men upon whom rest world-responsibilities. We must not blink the fact that the Socialist movement comes as the most radical and far-reaching revolution ever proposed by man for his emancipation. No more demand for economic reform and changes moves the revolt against the capitalistic system of production and distribution; against the wage system of slavery and stultification, and the predatory and gambling commercial system. It is not reform that socialism proposes, but a wholly new kind of a world; an entirely re-ordered life, issuing in an altogether new human creation. Not because the present kind of world is bad, any more than a coat is bad because it is worn out, but because its possibilities of usefulness and liberty are exhausted, and its institutions no longer fit to care for the common good. And, mark you, just so sure as the Socialist movement is shot through with the fire of a great spiritual passion, as I believe it will be, that

"For deeper than the capitalistic system is the false thought of life in which it is rooted, and from which it draws its nourishment. Not only must the system be overthrown, but the soil that sustains it must be removed. That soil is the thought that it is necessary for some people to use and rule other people, either for the good of the ruled, or for the good of the ruling class. We do not realize it, but our whole civilization and its culture are built out of various forms of private property in man; they are built upon the assumption that the many lawfully belong to the few, in one way or another. THERE IS NOT A HUMAN INSTITUTION WHICH, IF ANALYSED CLEAR THROUGH, WILL NOT BE FOUND RESTING UPON SOME DIRECT OR INDIRECT OWNERSHIP OF HUMAN BEINGS BY HUMAN BEINGS. The capitalist system is merely the enforcement of this world-system of human ownership; that is, the ownership of the economic things upon which people depend in the simplest and surest way of owning the people, or of appropriating their labor-power, and its product, which is the essence of slavery. But the spirit of human ownership runs through every mode of labor and life. We are all seeking some sort of private property in our fellow-creatures; all using one another in ways that practically amount to the ownership of one another. The immorality and degradation that result, both to the user and the used, from the use of our brothers for personal ends, or for impersonal ends that we take to be good, is yet remote from our ethics. Even the most strenuous teachers of liberty are woefully reluctant to grant to one another the liberty they teach. And so far as the issues of life are concerned, it is all one to a man whether it be his labor-power and mind-product, or his conceptions of truth and determinings between right and wrong, that be ordered by others than himself. For to have one's life ordered for him, to have it taken out of his own hands and directed by something else than his own choice and will, is to be a slave.

"Let us not longer be deceived by academic and ruling-class notions of liberty. We are not free, nor have we the spiritual nerve or faith to be free. The meaning of liberty has scarcely dawned upon us, and its power and gladness have not come within our dreams. We are, on the whole, a world of hard-driven and perpetually frightened slaves, whose best manners are still in the cringing stage, and whose religious teachings are thoroughly servile in source and effect. Take a cross-section of human activity, the world through, anywhere at any time, and you will find it to be chiefly slave-activity; whether it be labor of hand or mind, it is labor done under some kind of lash or menace, some kind of fear or coercion. The labor of the world has love at its heart, but it has a slave-bull civilization on its back, and the slave-fear in its soul. Our religious serve our legal and economic systems by training us to slave-habits of mind, and by keeping us in slave-postures of submission. Our thoughts are the thoughts of slaves, and our deeds are the deeds of slaves, and we pray the prayers of slaves. So complete is the environment of tyranny under which labor serves, so all-pervading the slave-atmosphere which life breathes, so poisoned are we all with tyrant-tactics and slave-ethics, that we have as yet no real consciousness of liberty, nor any experience by which to interpret it. Before liberty can become even a comprehensive ideal, it will require a new thought of life in which to source itself, and new institutions and systems as the organs of its expression. And this is not to be wondered at, when we reflect that our institutions, as well as our religious and moral systems, are the product of the long slave-centuries, with their slave-conditions and tyrant habits of mind and activity. Our present kind of a world answered, in a perpetually tragic way, for the long centuries of evolution from slavery, but it is not fit world for free men to live in, and neither its systems nor its faiths will answer for free men to express themselves with.

"The human race has outgrown its methods of work and modes of life, its religious systems and moral codes; where they once uplifted and liberated the race, they now drag it down, and add weights to its burden. It will take a new heaven of free choices and equal opportunities above our heads, and a NEW MARCH OF PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION BENEATH OUR FEET, TO MAKE THE SOULS OF MEN A FIT HOME FOR LIBERTY TO DWELL IN.

"Perhaps we can now see how the economic and religious and political crises are all one, and why their solution must be one. These crises arise, proceed from the increasingly determined and intelligent struggle of man for the possession and direction of his own life; for that self-ownership which is the soil and substance of liberty. That struggle is now putting an unwanted strain upon all our modes of life and society, and that this strain is getting close to the breaking point, merely in-

Comrades attention! In all previous elections the Socialist vote in Chicago has increased in exact proportion to the circulation of the Workers' Call. Don't forget that the party organ is the most important factor in the Socialist campaign. Are you selling any Call Postals?

ASK FOR A VERDICT

Capitalist Journalism Appeals to Posterity.

FUTURE TO JUDGE THE PAST.

Audacity and Folly of Today Hope for Justification One Hundred Years Hence.

The employees of the Tribune had dinner together on New Year's day, and a letter was read to them which is to be addressed to the "Tribune Family," which it is assumed will be in existence in the year 2001. The last sentence of the letter reads, "May those who read the resolutions then and look at the Tribune records of our efforts, enjoy themselves and their work as heartily as we do today." With child-like faith these present signed the letter and it was placed in a safety-deposit vault to remain there until January 1, 2001. If there will be such a paper as the Tribune in existence one hundred years from now and this letter survives, together with the memory of what the Tribune now is, the comrades that will be made on it will be such that could the signers anticipate them they would never have exposed their names for the event. That men should have exerted themselves and their talents to the task of promulgating unwholesome and disgusting occurrences which would never occur but for their abatement; that they should spend their time discussing the methods by which the sails of a few benefactors of a rotten vessel could be trimmed; that they should prostitute the power they have to do good service to all, to the exigencies of the few; that they should fail to grasp the opportunities (open to them) of bettering mankind by pointing out the only possible way to that betterment, but traitorously yield up the confidence of the people, until by the slow process of enforced reasoning brought on by the pressure of their economic conditions the masses of the world turn, as the signers and authors of this letter do, that they should do all these things and find pleasure in the doing, and express the hope that their tactics would continue until their successors one hundred years afterwards might glory in doing the same "work," will be the cause of their being regarded by all one hundred years hence, as creatures low indeed.

No such letter was left by the church of America one hundred years ago to be read at this time, but the Rev. N. D. Hills has risen to tell what a wonderful improvement has come about in church morals. "One hundred years ago," he said, "at a funeral from a Presbyterian church, all of the pall bearers were so drunk before they reached the grave that they had to transfer the task of lowering the coffin to other hands. These pall bearers were all deacons and trustees, etc., of the church, and their disgraceful conduct prompted the ministers to forbid the use of liquors thereafter at funeral ceremonies."

One hundred years from now men will arise to regret the advance made in journalism, and the utter incompetency of those in whose keeping journalism now is, will be brought out. Drunk with the applause and favor of the small slave-driving class, the present trustees of this vessel, which should distribute the waters of intelligence and progress to all, prostitute it to base ends, and when it shall die to its present iniquitous office, to arise again to the purpose of its true usefulness, other hands at the grave shall lower it to its oblivion. Their drunkenness blinds them, and when their eyes shall open, their function will be in other hands more fit to administer that which they knew not how to use.

DON'T WANT PARCELS POST.

Little Business Men "Bear Gently As a Backing Down" Against It, With "Vigorous Petitions."

The parcels-post bill now pending in congress affords another opportunity to the petty capitalist to display his impotence in attempting to retard the triumphant course of the economic development. According to the newspapers he is preparing to offer "vigorous" opposition to its passage by getting out "petitions" against the contemplated measure. A "vigorous petition" may sound absurd, but it is thoroughly in harmony with the other contradictions inherent in capitalism.

It would seem that these reactionaries are intuitively aware of the fact that "congress" is the instrument of their bigger competitors. The small exploiter recognizes this so completely that he even dare not make a "demand." So he approaches the powers that be with a "petition." Instead, to be presented with all the vigor which his class imagine they possess.

The opposition to the bill arises directly from threatened material interests, and the statement put forward as to why the bill should be defeated gives a good illustration of the squeezing-out process now going on in the ranks of the exploiters. It is as follows:

The "small" merchants declare that the passage of the bill would afford department stores and catalogue houses an undue advantage over them, inasmuch as it would enable freight to be sent through the mails at such rates as would give the "big" merchants a chance to pull down their prices to figures with which they could not profitably compete. Moreover, they say that it would enable the "big" men in the large cities to undersell the "small" men in their home towns.

To which the "big men" might retort, "What are we here for?"

Unless the "small men" can influence "public opinion" in their behalf, it is probable that their "petition" will hardly prove sufficiently "vigorous" to prevent the passing of the bill. And the job of convincing the "public" that it is to their interest to pay more for goods than they absolutely have to in no easy task, particularly while the system which buys labor in the cheapest market remains in vogue. When the bill becomes law, however, we may expect to hear dark prophecies of a "bloody revolution," a pastime which has recently become popular amongst disgruntled champions of middle class interests.

Look out for the Chicago Federation of Labor's report on municipal ownership in the next issue.

DOINGS IN "SOCIETY."

Our Best Citizens Hold High Carnival in Brand's Hall on Last Saturday Night.

The third annual Workers' Call benefit ball took place last Saturday night at Brand's Hall, corner Clark and Erie streets. At least one thousand persons were present, and enjoyed themselves as only Socialists among Socialists can enjoy themselves. The Workers' Call balls have become famous for their good natured jovial informality. From 9 o'clock in the evening until 4 o'clock Sunday morning the large hall was crowded with Socialists and their sympathizers. Both old and young availed themselves of the opportunity, which only comes once a year, to "trip the light fantastic" for the benefit of the organ of the militant Socialists of Chicago.

The floor was under the management of a committee of young men from the Socialist Educational club. Great credit is due these comrades for the able manner in which they supervised the affair. Music for the occasion was furnished by Holmberg's orchestra. The Socialist Sangerbund was present and favored the assembled merry-makers with several selections. Especially was their rendition of "The Marseillaise" appreciated by the comrades. The speaker for the occasion was Walter Thomas Mills, who in a few well-pointed and humorous remarks, served to put the crowd in still better humor to enjoy the evening.

At 1 o'clock the dancers took a recess and marched into the supper room where a sumptuous luncheon had been spread by the Socialist ladies. There was all manner of good things to satisfy the palate of man, and jollity reigned supreme. After the supper was disposed of, the merry-makers again betook themselves to dancing, which continued until 4 o'clock in the morning. When it was all over the comrades went home well pleased with the night's entertainment.

The Workers' Call is the organ of the SOCIALIST PARTY.

Union Men Take Notice!

We desire to notify the membership of the trades unions of Chicago and elsewhere that the Workers' Call has been selected to publish the report of the Chicago Federation of Labor upon Municipal Ownership. As it is desirable to give this report the widest possible circulation trades unionists are requested to bring this matter before the members of their respective unions, so that a sufficient number of copies may be provided. Secretaries of unions taking action upon this subject, and ordering a definite number of copies, will please communicate with this office, 36 N. Clark street, stating the number of copies they are prepared to take. A special rate of $3.00 per thousand will be made to Chicago unions, $4.00 per thousand to unions elsewhere to cover postal expenses. Please order as soon as possible as the matter will appear in the issue of the 15th inst. It is necessary that all orders for copies reach this office not later than Thursday, the 15th inst., to make their fulfillment possible.

To Spy Out the Land.

Robert Rives La Monte, the brilliant young Socialist Democrat who toured this state last fall for five weeks, is on the way to New Zealand. He is going to study the labor situation in that much-talked of little country, and will probably put his impressions in book form. La Monte is a keen observer, and whatever he may publish will settle many of the questions that are now objects of more or less heated controversy.

Socialist Pointers

John Collins is a union man and he is the only one who will be nominated.

Not everybody who claims to be a Socialist is one. Actions speak louder than words.

Are you going down in your pocket as hard as you can for the spring campaign fund?

The man who is willing to follow a leader is not a Socialist, no matter what he may call himself.

Remember, we want 10,000 votes for John Collins, and we can have them if each Socialist brings in a man.

California's large vote and splendid organization is a rebuke to Socialists who are divided into hostile camps.

If you want to elect an alderman this spring just get the workmen of your ward interested in the Workers' Call.

The average reform movement soon dies out after the reformers have received sufficient advertising out of it.

One thing the early part of the century will bring will be Socialist harmony, for the signs are all in the air.

No doubt John P. Hopkins would be for municipal ownership along with the rest of them, if he could thus gain his point.

The Sunday-closing laws were not made for the benefit of the ruling classes. No restraining laws were meant for them.

If Mr. Rockefeller is not the government now, he probably will be after he has a few more good days in Wall street.

How foolish of Aguinaldo not to be satisfied with the kind of liberty the black men in the United States possess.

America is now the creditor nation of the world, but that fact does not feed any tramps, at least so that anyone can notice it.

Mr. Bryan is not coming our way so fast that he is running over any small boys or old people who refuse to get out of the way.

There is not half the tragedy in the death of a rich man as there is in the taking away of the head and support of some humble home.

The capitalist who has made a success by accident or otherwise, puts a tremendous amount of stress on brains as a means of success.

The new century will probably produce the usual number of freaks who will want to tell the Socialists just how to run their business.

Com Paul would do well to study socialism which will overcome the British empire after his brave Dutchmen have been defeated and conquered.

Defeated organizations in the building trades have a chance to renew the struggle at the ballot box this spring. One of their own number is a candidate.

The small trader who gets frozen out by one of Rockefeller and Morgan's big deals immediately gets excited and red in the face in advocating anti-trust laws.

The difference between the Altgeld Socialists and the Carter Harrison Socialists is so slight that they will probably be found voting one ticket this spring.

J. Pierpont Morgan is to reduce the cost of producing coal, but the people will have no interest in the reduction, as he will slip the amount into his own pocket.

It must be quite a consolation to the striker who is nursing a broken head from a policeman's club, to know that the city democratic administration has furnished jobs for most of the labor leaders.

Here is an item that goes far to prove the truth of the statement that classes do not exist in this country. A dispatch from Cleveland, Ohio, to the Chicago Record says:

Cleveland, O., Jan. 8.—The feminine portion of Cleveland society is AHEAD at the knowledge that it danced with detectives at Ruth Hanna's coming out party in the Chamber of Commerce building New Year's night.

It appears from this report that fifty of these man catchers were in attendance at this "society" function disguised as guests, which is undoubtedly a striking tribute to Mark Hanna's implicit faith in capitalist "human nature."

A DOUBTFUL "BALANCE."

In reviewing the progress of human society in the century just passed, it is interesting to observe how every capitalist newspaper and magazine attempts to show, as a justification for the present arrangement of things economic, that the condition of the working class has on the whole been improved. While it is hardly necessary to debate this question pro and con, it is easy to see why so much space is devoted to it in the journals which reflect the opinion of the ruling class. No such strained and labored effort is necessary to convince the casual reader that so far as the possessing classes are concerned, the century has brought to them material benefits out of all proportion to what the actual producers have received. But the reviewers evidently consider that they can only demonstrate that to use a phrase much affected by all of them, "while the rich are growing richer the poor are grown less poor."

That the economic development of the century has noticeably affected the life conditions of the working class they in general are ready to admit. But they are careful to make it appear that whatever hardships have been inflicted upon the workers, has been rather more than balanced by compensations in other ways. If for instance the workmen have lost in individual independence, they have been more than compensated by the collective independence and power which comes from the formation of unions—a conclusion which seems rather doubtful when it is considered that the concentration of wealth and the control of whole branches of industry in the hands of small groups of capitalists notoriously tends to place them in a position to ignore the demands of labor organizations, and in many cases to actually destroy them when they attempt to use the collective independence and power, which they are said to possess.

Again, the intellectual loss resulting from the elimination of skill through machine production, where the whole labor time of the worker is spent in an endless repetition of one mechanical operation, is said to be more than offset by the shortening of the hours of labor, the opportunities for popular education, the extension of the press, and the assumption of political responsibilities by the working class. It may be observed that since these things are yet under the control of the exploiters, it is a debatable question as to whether the workers in reality have gained more than they have lost.

Many similar illustrations might be taken at random from these productions, all tending to demonstrate that on the whole the working class ledger for the nineteenth century shows somewhat more of profit than loss, but the above will suffice. These matters are still open to dispute, although it is hardly probable that any socialist will be found wasting his time on arguing the details in order to disprove a favorable balance however small. It is a matter of comparative indifference and for the sake of argument the contention of these capitalist apologists might be admitted. The real question is "Has the working class, whose labor alone made this enormous wealth possible, received in proportion to what their labor has created as much as the workers of the two or three centuries preceding the nineteenth?" This inquiry may be searched for in vain in the columns of the capitalist press. Its very appearance is a prelude to socialism.

The wants of the workers have multiplied, without doubt. But these wants, unknown to previous centuries, were in themselves created by the development of capitalist production, and for their partial satisfaction the capitalist exacted tribute in the shape of surplus value. It is after all, these wants which can only be precariously and partially gratified that constitute the real basis for the progress of the working class in the nineteenth century.

To demonstrate the truth of the statement that capitalism creates the forces which will ultimately destroy it, will form the chief work of the twentieth.

A few months ago Mark Hanna, speaking on the favorite Republican topic, of "prosperity," stated plainly that the working class could expect no more than they were at present "enjoying" unless a total economic change (he didn't specify it), took place. We are inclined to believe that statement from Hanna was exceptional, in that it was absolutely true. And the twentieth century will be devoted to the fulfillment of his prophecy, for the basic reason that the wants of the working class can less and less be satisfied under the present system of production and distribution.

MIDDLE CLASS "REVOLUTIONS."

It has been steadily contended by Socialists, and has often been pointed out in these columns as well as those of other Socialist papers, that the question of imperialism was an economic necessity for capitalism; that it was but a part and parcel of the imperialism which reigns today in the workshop, mine and factory, and which carries with it the imperative need of securing markets for the commodities produced therein. Against this necessity, the outbursts of sentimental oratory, the harking back to abstract principles conceived of as the essence of liberty in the eighteenth century, have proved impotent, and those politicians who satisfy themselves with the assurances of Republican statesmen as to the impossibility of imperialism are only now beginning to see the worthlessness of such assurances.

On January 4 Senator Teller, on the floor of the senate, publicly revoked a former speech which he had made before the same body, assuring the people of this country that there could be no imperialism in the Philippines. He then declared that the government accorded to the islanders was essentially imperialistic. Senator Hoar implored his colleagues to allow "God's law to prevail in the islands," adding that the only crime of the Filipinos was their love of liberty.

Senator Wellington followed in a speech in which he asserted that he had only voted for the Paris treaty because he had been misinformed and misled by the administration, and by the President himself. He then demanded to know the intentions of the administration regarding the Philippines. He was promptly informed that the President could not think of relinquishing authority in the Philippines. To which he retorted that McKinley had already surrendered territory in Alaska to Great Britain. His opponent replied that this transaction was not a surrender but a "modus vivendi." Wellington then declared that unless a revolution or uprising occurred against this policy, the territory surrendered in Alaska would never be reclaimed by the United States.

Within the last two or three weeks these reactionary hints have been heard from more than one public individual. They are only referred to in the capitalist press with short and contemptuous comments attached.

And rightly so. Capitalism has nothing to fear from the vapors of its own unprosperous elements. The menace of revolution lies not with the dying middle class. The working class, which alone carries the potentiality of revolution within itself, cannot be induced to champion the cause of the small exploiter with any hope of success. The revolution which Wellington postulates will not materialize, for the evident reason that sufficient material cannot be procured to carry it through. Yet in the face of the tremendous economic problems of the present, capitalist pigmies are blind enough to hope that revolution can be inaugurated over the transfer of a strip of barren land in the Arctic regions or the retention or relinquishment of a group of islands in the Pacific. The contempt with which the organs of the great capitalism treat this visionary aspiration is thoroughly justified.

Wellington was misinformed and misled—and is delugant about it. He cannot see that this trickery is also a part of the "modus vivendi" of capitalism just as the periodical deception of the working class during election time, and that promises made to those who have no power to exact their fulfillment are worthless. The anti-imperialist ballot which elected him might just as well never have been cast. To use a familiar expression, they were thrown away.

Political and economic supremacy are inseparable and the spectacle of our Tellers, Hoars and Wellingtons vainly attempting to stay its course on sentimental grounds, is perhaps necessary for the instruction of those who imagine that the progress of the world is measured and bounded by the landmarks of a hundred years ago, instead of the economic and material interests of the present.

THE TEACHERS' FEDERATION.

Musical and Dramatic Entertainment to Be Given on January 18th at the Coliseum.

A musical and dramatic entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Chicago Teachers' Federation, at the Coliseum, Wabash avenue and Fifteenth street, on January 18th at 8 p. m. The proceeds will be devoted to the Tax Fund which the Federation is endeavoring to raise, for the purpose of carrying "to a successful issue the people's fight for JUST TAXATION of municipal franchises." The following explanation of the struggle which the Teachers' Federation is now engaged in, is published by request:

This entertainment for the benefit of the Federation Tax Fund, aside from its merit from an amusement standpoint is of unusual interest owing to the great public question underlying its inception and the efforts of the Chicago Teachers' Federation to secure for all tax payers equitable just taxation. This struggle which has occupied so much public attention during the last year has been marked by many new and startling phases. From the first it called public attention to facts that seemed to have escaped notice. For 23 years the state of Illinois has had on its statutes a law for taxing franchises, but for 24 years that law has been ignored.

In 1899 the franchises of the street railway, gas, electric and telephone companies of Chicago, wisely escaped, though the statements of these companies to their stockholders showed the value of these franchises to be upward of 20 million dollars.

To prevent these franchises from escaping taxation this year as last, the Federation, on October 8, instituted mandamus proceedings to compel the assessors to list the property as provided by law.

The assessors listed it, for the first time in the history of Chicago; next the Federation filed a petition in the circuit court of Sangamon county to compel the State Board of Equalization to assess the property so listed.

The State Board disputed the right of the courts to interfere, but on November 21, Judge Creighton decided against the State Board and gave the Board three days in which to answer the petition of mandamus.

Before the expiration of the three days the attorneys for these public service corporations appeared before the State Board and on the morning that the attorneys arrived in Springfield the Board adopted a new rule for determining the value of franchises.

This new rule entirely ignores the basic principle of the old rule which was to base the value of the capital stock and franchises in the net earning capacity. The Board made an assessment under this new rule which recognizes the existence of the franchises, that is they were not allowed to escape entirely as last year, but the assessment was merely nominal. We believe the new law adopted to be illegal and the assessment made under it fraudulent.

It is the purpose of the Federation to test both in the courts. The trial which is to come up in January term of the circuit court of Sangamon county, is for this purpose and the object of the entertainment is to provide funds to defray the expenses of the suit.

Public service corporations have represented that the public does not approve of the teachers engaging in this work, nor of their methods of conducting it. The time has come to determine whether these representations reflect public sentiment or are desirous of moulting it. If the community does not approve, the work cannot succeed. If the community does approve the time has come to express that approval, to be with us in spirit is not enough, we need a manifestation of that spirit, and a very substantial one at Coliseum January 18, 1901.

Though begun by a part of the community this is a work in which the vital interests of the entire community are concerned, and it is a work which should be done with the aid and cooperation of the entire community.

Chicago Teachers' Federation.

We are heartily in accord with the teachers in their effort, and hope that they may be successful in compelling the corporations to disgorge, part, at least, of the wealth they have extracted from the labor of the community. Public money can be put to no better service than the education of the young, and the children should be secured an opportunity to acquire as much knowledge as possible, before capitalism devours them in its sweatshops and factories. In the fight against the robber class, which the teachers are now waging, they will also learn valuable lessons as to the nature and structure of capitalist society, and the prospects which it places before them as workers.

Some of the ward branches have established a regular system of selling Workers' Call postals. This is the most important work a branch can do. If your branch is not already disposing of its quota of Call postals, agitate the matter at your next meeting.

Union men see that your organization secures copies of the next issue containing the views of the Chicago Federation of Labor on municipal ownership.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

"War of Great Trusts to End."
"Coffee and Sugar Men Agree."
"Gets $500,000 From Tin Trust."
"Champion Iron and Steel Sells Muskegon Plant to Combine."

These items which appeared in the morning papers of January 6th would seem to indicate that the new century opens auspiciously for American capitalism. It is to be peace instead of war between the great exploiters. The working class might profitably absorb the significance of this tendency. While the capitalists unite for exploitation, why should not the laborers of America in turn unite for emancipation?

At the same time reports from across the Atlantic state that Europe has almost arrived at the end of its taxing power. The enormous cost of armies and navies together with the rapid growth of American competition foretells that a serious crisis is near. From this dilemma there appears no way of escape, as the demands of the "state," which embodies in itself the fabric of capitalist society, become more exacting year by year. The surplus value extracted from millions of workers is being more and more expended in keeping the system itself alive, and the exploiters in spite of their wishes and desires are compelled to disgorge an ever-increasing portion of the spoils. Yet long before the time that capitalism becomes actually unprofitable, there will be many millions of its victims organized to help it out of existence and who will not be content to stand idly by while it falls to pieces of its own weight.

Union men are especially requested to see to it that their respective organizations are supplied with the next issue of this paper, setting forth the views of the Chicago Federation of Labor upon the subject of municipal ownership. Bring the matter before your union. Orders must be in this office before 5 p. m., on Thursday, 17th inst.

"I want to know why that was done."
The gentleman is out of order.—Point of order, Mr. Chairman.—If the gentleman will sit down—Sit down—I know what you did when you was in the City Hall.—You're a stiff.—Sit down you stiff.—When you was in the City Hall you went after everything in reach.—Put him out.—Put him out!" Motion to adjourn was passed.

The above is a faithful transcript from the press report of the proceedings of the Democratic County Central committee on January 7. In all this "feast of reason and flow of soul" it would be difficult to detect any traces of the "eternal and time-honored principles" of democracy, though it might appear that a "declaration of independence" was being noisily proclaimed by every individual present. It is evidently a very difficult process to secure the "consent of the governed" even amongst the representatives of the party who make the phrase a political fetish, but this was the object aimed at, though it was disguised under the elegant expression of "getting an axe out for the Burke faction." The fact that state-manship of this sort is competent to capture the votes of 200,000 Chicago workmen; goes a long way towards proving the truth of the theories promulgated by the late Mr. Darwin.

Considerably more space was devoted in the papers to speculating upon the quantity of dollars which Mr. Armour managed to accumulate than upon any characteristics of the man himself, which were not connected with money-getting. Conjectures as to its distribution among the heirs is now taking precedence even of the funeral arrangements. Mr. Armour will be mostly remembered as an excellent specimen of an improved machine for the extraction of dollars from the labor of others. Materialistic socialism is a thing to be abhorred, but materialistic capitalism is the highest ideal possible of conception.

It is utterly immaterial whether the dead man is to be regarded as a "friend" or an "enemy" to labor. The method by which his wealth was accumulated will still persist, and the death of a dozen multi-millionaires per day would make absolutely no difference in the life-conditions of the working class. Jay Gould, Vanderbilt, Pullman, and scores of others are gone, but the system of private property in the means of production still survives, and will survive until capitalism receives its death-blow at the polls through the medium of the Socialist ballot.

The re-apportionment bill is perplexing the capitalist politicians. They want to disfranchise the working class and throw the onus upon the other fellow. It will be noticed that the Republicans do not intend to call the southern states to account for the disfranchisement of the colored people. They actually helped to defeat a resolution tending towards that object.

The reasons for this policy are apparent. The Republicans will not interfere with the action of the southern Democrats because they desire themselves to disfranchise the northern working class. We have stated this before, and as the development of this scheme progresses we would repeat the warning, which is also a call to action—Workingmen, Unite!

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Branches should pay the carriage of speakers who address their agitation meetings.

The Second Ward branch holds agitation meetings at Freiberg's Hall, Twenty-second street, near State, every Friday night.

All Socialists residing in the Fourteenth ward are requested to send their names and addresses to F. M. Hull, 34 Thomas street, Secretary Fourteenth Ward Branch Socialist party.

Last Sunday evening the Fifteenth Ward branch held a very successful agitation meeting at Socialist Hall, Armington avenue, four doors east of Milwaukee avenue. Comrade Elgelow addressed the meeting.

All comrades who held Workers' Call ball tickets are requested to make their return to A. Klenke, 36 N. Clark street, as soon as possible. The ball accounts must be figured out right away, and comrades holding tickets will confer a great favor by attending to this immediately.

The Thirty-fifth Ward branch held an interesting agitation meeting last Friday evening at their hall in Masonic Temple, Austin. The speaker of the evening was Comrade Thos. J. Morgan, who took for his subject: "The Historical Basis of Socialism." Comrade Stangland was chairman of the meeting. The attendance was good. The discussion lasted till 10 o'clock.

There was a good crowd present at the meeting of the Twenty-fifth Ward branch last Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at their hall 333 Sheffield avenue, near Belmont. Comrade A. M. Simons delivered an interesting address on the subject: "What the Socialists Would Do If They Captured Chicago." After the address there was a long and interesting discussion. Next Sunday afternoon at the above address, Comrade A. Bisno will speak.

The petitions for nomination of city officers are now in the city organizer's hands for distribution. The comrades should lose no time in providing themselves with these petitions and securing enough signatures to secure the tickets a place on the ballot. This should be done immediately so that the party membership will be able to devote all their time to securing signatures for the ward and town petitions as soon as the matter of redistricting is settled. Petitions can be had on application to A. Klenke, city organizer, 36 N. Clark street.

A great many branches in getting out cards and hand bills neglect a very important matter. The Workers' Call must not be forgotten at any time. Hand bills and cards used in advertising branch meetings should also be made to advertise the Workers' Call. Such an advertisement is valuable because it reaches people who would otherwise never hear of the paper. We recommend the following formula to be used by the comrades on all hand bills, programs and cards: To learn about socialism read the Workers' Call, organ of the Socialist party of Chicago, Office, 36 N. Clark street.

The Socialist Educational club held an interesting agitation meeting last Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at its headquarters, 1123 Milwaukee avenue. The speaker of the afternoon was Comrade Thos. J. Morgan. His subject was: "Law and Socialism." The attendance was good, and enthusiasm and interest manifested by these young Socialists is a matter of inspiration to those who are older in the movement. Next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock A. M. Simons will address the club.

The Thirtieth and Thirty-first Ward branches have secured headquarters at 608½ Halsted street, for the winter. The rooms will be kept open every evening and a regular series of agitation meetings will be arranged in the near future. A good stock of Socialist literature has been laid in, and the party papers will also be on file. Everything is being arranged for the comrades so that instructive and enjoyable winter evenings may be spent in a well-equipped reading-room. New life has been infused into these branches and a steady educational campaign will be maintained during the winter months. The zeal and enthusiasm displayed by Comrade A. Brown in taking steps to push things through, is highly appreciated by the membership of the branches, and is also significant of the new activity which now animates the Socialist comrades of Englewood.

Signs of Decadence.

Under the system as it now exists, the wealth of the world, however created, and irrespective of claims of the producer, is made to flow toward certain centers of accumulation, to be enjoyed by those holding the keys of such situations. The world appears to be approaching a stage at which those who labor, no matter how skilled, how industrious, or how frugal, will receive, according to the "iron law," formulated by Ricardo, only so much for their services as will enable them to subsist and perpetuate their race. The rest finds its way into the hands of a comparatively few, usually non-producing individuals, whom the usages and laws of all countries permit to claim that they own the very sources of all wealth and the right to allow or forbid its production.

These are great, serious evils, compared with which all the crimes, recognized as such, that would be committed if no government existed, would be as trifles. The underpaid labor, the prolonged and groveling drudgery, the wasted strength, the misery and sorrow, the diseases resulting, and the premature deaths that would be prevented by a just distribution of the products of labor, would in a single year outweigh all the so-called crimes of century for the prevention of which, it is said, government alone exists. The vast theatre of war is regarded as wholly unjust, the jurisdiction of government, while the most strenuous efforts are put forth to detect and punish the perpetration of the least of the ordinary recognized crimes. This ignoring of great evils while so violently striking at small ones is the mark of an effete civilization, and warns us of the approaching doom of the race.—(Paraphrase from "The Psychic Factors of Civilization," by Lester F. Ward.)

CORRESPONDENCE.

Submitted to the Membership.

Comrades—The National Executive Committee has received a number of resolutions on the subject of unity from various locals of the party, and it now becomes our duty to submit the propositions contained in the same to a general vote of the members in accordance with the provisions of our constitution. The resolutions referred to are partly original and partly endorsed those coming from Boston, Chicago and other locals, and those adopted by locals Seattle, Wash. and Saginaw, Mich.

In order to give the membership an opportunity to pass upon all questions involved in the said resolutions, we hereby summarize them in the following:

Vote yes or no on each of the following questions:

Question 1. Shall a national convention of the Socialists of the United States for the purpose of effecting a union of Socialist forces and establishing a solid party organization be called for an early date?

Question 2. Shall all locals of the Social Democratic party affiliated with the Springfield N. E. C. be invited to participate in such convention?

Question 3. Shall all branches of the S. D. P. affiliated with the Chicago N. E. C. be invited to participate in the convention?

Question 4. Shall all sections of the Socialist Labor Party be invited to participate in the convention?

Question 5. Shall all Socialist State organizations not affiliated with any national committee be invited to participate in such a convention?

Question 6. Shall all other Socialist organizations, recognizing the class struggle and the necessity of independent political action of the working class, be invited to participate in the convention?

Question 7. Shall the only condition of participation in such convention be a pledge to abide by the decisions of the convention?

Question 8. Shall the basis of representation for all such organizations be one delegate for each local organization, and one additional delegate for each one hundred members or major fraction thereof?

Question 9. Shall two or more organizations be permitted to co-operate for the purpose of sending delegates on the above basis?

Question 10. In what city shall the convention be held? Name city.

Question 11. Shall the N. E. C. be authorized to fix the date and change the place and basis of representation of the convention in conjunction with the Chicago N. E. C., or any state organization if requested by such organization?

Respectfully submitted,
The Provisional National Executive Committee.

Various Reminders From the N. E. C.

—Springfield, Mass., January 5, 1901.

Comrades—With the beginning of the new century we came to the office two new publications started in the interest of socialism and the S. D. P.: one is The Challenge, published in Los Angeles, Cal., Comrade Gaylord Wilshire, editor, and the other the Missouri Socialist, edited by Comrade E. Val Putnam, and published by Local St. Louis.

Both are typographically excellent, and the matter contained in them is of interest to every Socialist; they are in the field to propound the revolutionary principles of scientific socialism and should have the support of all Socialists.

Subscription price of each is fifty cents a year, which can be sent to either E. Val Putnam, 23 E. North street, St. Louis, Mo., or to H. Gaylord Wilshire, 823 S. Hill street, Los Angeles, Cal.

Thus does the movement for the emancipation of the working class march on.

Comrades, don't forget to fill out semi-annual report blanks and have same sent to headquarters before the 15th inst. This is important as we are all anxious to know the exact strength of our party at the present time. Locals and state committees who have not made returns for International Delegate blanks are requested to give this matter prompt attention and report at once. Copies of questionnaires referring to a unity convention will be sent out this week for a referendum vote, which will close on March 1st at 6 p. m., therefore all who desire to have their vote recorded will see to it that same reaches the National Secretary before the expiration of the time set for voting on said proposition.

Any person or organization not affiliated with the N. E. C. can have copies of the above by writing to the National Secretary for them. Notice, advising locals to make nominations for secretaries to the International Socialist Bureau will be sent out at same time; nominations for said office will close on February 9th at 5 p. m.

Comrades, don't forget to also elect your member to the national council, as provided for by the constitution.

Wm. Butcher, Nat. Sec'y.

To Literary Contributors.

The editor desires to return his sincere thanks to the comrades from almost every part of the country who have forwarded articles, press clippings, verses and other literary matter to this office. Much valuable copy and material for copy has in this manner been secured, and it is hoped that the supply of copy from comrades whose matter has not always been utilized will not cease to arrive upon that account. It is hardly necessary to perhaps to remind those comrades who have thus assisted us that it would be manifestly impossible that everything sent in should appear in our columns, when the limited size of the paper and the slowness of the editorial staff are taken into consideration. Also the wielder of the blue pencil is by no means infallible, and perhaps in many cases the most valuable matter has not always been selected for publication, but while the judgment of one individual must be depended upon there seems to be no remedy in sight. In conclusion the editor again wishes to express his obligation to the comrades who have assisted him in making the Workers' Call attractive, and hopes for a continuation of their favors, assuring them that under the circumstances he is doing, as far as he can judge, the best possible.

"Is Saul Also Among the Prophets?"

In its broadest statement the problem of the world's economy is to develop and give scope to individual originality, the benefits of whose exercise are registered in individual character as well as in objective results.

The English economist, Marshall, however, declares that one-half of the power of human initiative is suppressed by the present social order, and it is not difficult to accept the statement. The happy instances where individuals manipulate circumstances, so as to bring out striking results are rendered more conspicuous by the number of other individuals who entirely fail not only of such achievement but of anything comparable thereto. And yet it is known that these others grade only somewhat below the first in capacity.

Of all the stupendous waste exhibited in the physical and moral world this is perhaps the most tragic in character and consequences. Yet it is enacted unobtrusively and with little dramatic effect. It is typified by the circumscribed career of the working class boy who, at 14 years, passes from the influence of the "graded" system of education to "tend a machine" for ten hours a day. The lot of the few who enjoy more elastic and extended educational opportunities and more adequate field of action thereafter is more in the public eye. Theirs, however, is not the lot of the great majority. Among the latter there is no inconsiderable portion whose power of individual initiative is but meagerly developed and whose potential contribution to the world's enterprise is never realized.

There can be no doubt that the dominant aim of the century which has just closed has been commercial rather than humanitarian. It has been the century of wealth-making. It has launched an entire series of world's fairs. It has established free public schools and abolished slavery, both of which are ideas accelerated material development. It has built great cities with their lack of art. It has gone haltingly forward with its newly demanded factory laws. It has neglected persons as conscious objects. It has trusted for salvation to the instinct of gain. It has—perhaps with some twinges of conscience—sifted all men that the current waste of flesh and brain was inevitable and that there could be no better way.

The problem of this century is to work out the higher economy in which there shall not only be a still better directed effort to effect material saving but in which the emphasis be shifted from the material product to the human agent—in which social advance rather than the instinct of profit-making or even of vast organization shall more effectively dictate action. This does not mean the retarding of material progress. Quite the contrary. The better the man the better his product. And of entire whose common effort shall be to make all existing progress converge upon the development of its people and upon insuring hope to their capacities will realize a peculiar quality and profusion of productive expression.

That the spirit of higher social economy—a spirit which is partially a revolt and partially an instance of constructive self-assertion—is moving with great force in Europe and America is not to be denied. It protests against waste in militarism, in industrial conflict, and especially in dwarfed capacities. It finds the trust when kept within its bounds a labor-saving device, but, without losing its demands for efficiency in methods, its chief thought is centered upon persons. It looks for a twentieth century economy which, as one of its far-sighted aims, shall seek to set free that fund of individual initiative which today is so often sacrificed.

No, dear reader, the foregoing article is not a clipping from any of our socialist, or semi-socialist literature; it emanates from a journal which has always hitherto boldly and proudly proclaimed itself to be the capitalist ORGAN PAR EXCELLENCE. It is actually an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

How it ever succeeded in eluding the vigilant eye of the managing editor is matter for conjecture, for it must be that its publication was purely an accident. Why, every line of it is fatally antagonistic to the vital principle of modern capitalism. It may be safely predicted that a blunder of this kind will not be repeated, unless—well, unless the age of miracles is still with us; unless the Tribune's editorial management has experienced a change of heart, or softening of the brain; in short, unless "Saul" is really "among the prophets."

For the editorial in question cannot be regarded by the Tribune's plutocratic patrons as anything short of a CAPITAL OFFENSE, (no pun intended), against the order which supports it. Flagrant ingratitude, (blackest of crimes), rank heresy, foul treason!

What, from the standpoint of capitalism, can be more outrageous than such a statement as this: "the problem of the world's economy is to develop and give scope to individual originality?"

Why, even a babe in a capitalistic cradle (so to speak) comprehends that "the object of the world's economy" is to "give scope" to nothing save financial acumen. Highly conducive indeed to the development of "individual originality" is the process of modern industrialism, in which a man is made a supplementary part of a machine, forced to wear out, in our gigantic "dives of industry," body, soul and spirit, in a ceaseless grind, eight, ten or twelve hours per day, year after year, at the sixteenth part of a trade!

Had the Tribune stated its case this way: "The object of the world's economy is to absolutely crucify 'individual originality' in the interest of capitalist greed," it would have told "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." But the Tribune implies, (and in this implication lies the heresy), that the object of the world's economy SHOULD be to develop individual originality.

Again, "the English economist, Marshall, declares that one-half of the power of human initiative is suppressed by the PRESENT SOCIAL ORDER, and it is not difficult to accept the statement."

Think of this! A grave indictment is preferred against the "present social order" and the Tribune finds no difficulty in accepting "the statement." In other words, the Tribune pleads guilty.

Hitherto the task of the Tribune has been to vindicate the "present social order," whenever it has been charged with "high crimes and misdemeanors"—to show that all such charges were both base and baseless, and to denounce in unmeasured terms those who preferred them, as "crazy" Socialists, dangerous Anarchists, "disturbers of the peace," etc. It has exhausted all the eloquence and ingenuity at its command in the effort to show that the "present social order" is Heaven's best gift to man, a most beneficent and ideal state of existence for "all sorts and conditions of men," including women, and now lo and behold, something has gone wrong, this divinely appointed "social order" is "suppressing one-half of human initiative." "Yes, that's so," says the Tribune, "and it ain't right."

The following sentence shows why "it ain't right": "The happy instances where individuals manipulate circumstances so as to bring out striking results are rendered more conspicuous by the number of other individuals who ENTIRELY FAIL, not only of such achievement, but of anything comparable thereto."

Here is a wholesale admission. The "present social order," it would seem, just sheds light enough to render its darkness visible. Could any of us have put the case much stronger?

Why, it has always been stoutly maintained by orthodox capitalist organs that anybody could succeed if he wanted to. Thrift and energy were all that was necessary. Anybody could become a Gould, a Vanderbilt or a Rockefeller. Just "work like the d—l and don't spend a cent" and you are bound to become a millionaire. This was an easy matter in any land, but in America, "the land of the free and home of the brave," it was child's play. Any pennut peddler, any bootblack, any hock-carrier, might reasonably hope to become a railroad king, a coal baron or a Napoleon of finance, and now all this pretty picture is ruthlessly blotted out, and we are told that the fact simply is that the few who succeed only serve to render the many who fail the more conspicuous. Comment is unnecessary.

After making the above phenomenal admission the Tribune adds: "Of all the stupendous waste exhibited in the physical and moral world, this is perhaps the most tragic in character and consequences."

Another fatal admission, you perceive, Socialists have been calling attention for years to the fact that our "present social order" is characterized by a "stupendous waste" in the "physical and moral world." They have pointed out that our present industrial system is recklessly wasting not only our great natural resources, but that man himself is being wasted, one generation after another being sacrificed on the altar of capitalist greed, but the Tribune and its fellow-organs have alternately denied and ridiculed all such "assertions," though supported by abundant evidence. And now the Tribune says, "Yes, yes, it's all so, and it's too bad. Something must be done about it."

"It is typified"—all this "waste" above noted—"by the circumscribed career of the working class boy, who, at 14 years," (yes, and very often many years younger), "passes from the influence of the 'graded' system of education to 'tend a machine' for ten hours a day."

Why, the Tribune seems to actually deplore this state of things, almost pities the boy, knowing too that child-labor is one of the main pillars which support the present capitalist system—let it be successfully undermined and the whole fabric is in danger.

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not," shrieks capitalism, the omnipotent, to her vassal Legislature, and child-murder, in workshop, factory and business mart, goes ruthlessly on—the interests of civilization demand it—"the problem of the world's economy," which finds it so much cheaper to discharge the father and hire the child, renders it necessary.

"The lot of the few who enjoy more elastic and extended educational opportunities and a more adequate field of action thereafter is more in the public eye. Theirs, however, is not the lot of the great majority." [Why is it not the lot of the great majority? Why is it not the lot of all? Under socialism it will be the lot of all.]

"Among the latter," (that is among the unfortunate "majority"), "there is no inconsiderable proportion whose power of individual initiative is but meagerly developed and whose potential contribution to the world's enterprise is never realized."

Does the Tribune not know that under capitalism it never can or will be "realized"? What then? The fight is on. It is man versus system. Either man must perish that the system may survive, or the system shall be destroyed that man—emancipated, glorified man—shall reign undisputed over his rightful kingdom, the earth. The first means the triumph of capitalism, the last implies the victory of socialism.

"There can be no doubt," says the Tribune, "that the dominant aim of the century which has just closed has been commercial rather than humanitarian."

What! Do you mean the Tribune? "Commercial rather than humanitarian" in spite of all the illustrious, beneficent, noble-hearted philanthropists the century has given to the world? In spite of the myriads of great and good men who have built hospitals, endowed universities, established foreign missions, given away in charity thousands of the millions they have amassed out of the ill-requited labor of their fellow-men and the labor of their fellow-men's children, whose fate the Tribune considers so "tragical"? In spite of all this the "dominant aim" of the century has been "commercialism." The charity was just a little side-show! Well, well, well! If a Socialist had said this—but a Socialist didn't say it. It was said or implied by Plutocracy's Roman friend, the Tribune, and the Tribune knows what it is talking about.

"It has been the century of wealth-making." Yes, this statement is self-evident. Said Martin Chuzzlewit to Colonel Diver: "Oh! There is an aristocracy here then. Of what is it composed?"

"Of intelligence, sir; of intelligence and virtue, sir, and their necessary consequence in this republic—DOLLARS, sir. We sir, a smart people and can appreciate smartness."

Yes, the accumulation of "dollars" has been the "dominant aim" of the nineteenth century generally, and nineteenth century Americans in particular.

A very funny sentence follows a little farther on in this remarkable editorial. "It," (the late century), "has established the public schools," (which it was conceded above that the working class boy had to leave at 14), and "abolished slavery"—that is, chattel slavery—wage slavery is still flourishing—"both of which act mean"—what? Increased intelligence, increased happiness, the triumphant joys of freedom? No, the Tribune knows better, and it is on the witness stand now and proposes to tell what it knows: "accelerated material development." That is what public schools and the abolition of chattel slavery mean. The child is "rushed" through the public school as rapidly as possible and set, as the Tribune expresses it, "to tend a machine." This is the chattel slave in free because the wage slave is a cheaper investment and more work can be got out of him. That is all. There is no philanthropy in it.

"Business is business." "It (the nineteenth century) has built great cities, with their lack of art"—true, it has built Chicago, built it twice over, and is as proud of the architectural monstrosity with all its filth and grime, as angels presumably are of the New Jerusalem.

"It has gone haltingly forward with its newly demanded factory laws." Well, yes, very haltingly—so haltingly, in fact, that it would perhaps be better to say it has gone gradually backward in this direction.

"It has neglected persons as conscious objects." It has trusted for salvation to the instinct of gain. It has perhaps with some twinges of conscience—assured all men that the current waste of flesh and brain was inevitable and that there could be no better way."

When one recalls how persistently and unwearyingly the Tribune has given this assurance (and we are rather doubtful about the "twinges of conscience") this paragraph becomes too amusing to be regarded seriously; but the statement as it stands virtually means "Yes, we said all these things, but we lied and we acknowledge it; there is a better way, or one can be found, MUST be found."

And what is the better way? Here the Tribune is slightly non-committal—"The problem of this century is to work out that higher economy in which there shall be a still better directed effort to effect material saving, but in which the emphasis shall be shifted from the material product to the human agent—in which social advance rather than the instinct of profit-making shall dictate action."

Exactly. This is just what socialism proposes to do. It stands ready to solve the problem, and it will be solved.

"A century whose conscious effort shall be to make all existing progress converge upon the development of its people and upon insuring scope to their capacities will realize a peculiar quality and profusion of productive expression."

It will, undoubtedly—we always said it would. It will not only be a "peculiar"—it will be a finer quality than humanity has ever yet dreamed of and a "profusion" of productive expression of which the best and grandest achievements of all the by-gone ages will be but a hint and a prophecy.

But never can these great results be obtained while even a taint of capitalism offends the nostrils of the man and woman of the twentieth century. No man who works for hire, labor under the lash of starvation, or toils under the direction of a master can achieve his best work. Only with the downfall of wage slavery and the ownership and control of all instruments of production and distribution by those who must use them can the twentieth century rise to the dignity and grandeur which will surely, ere long, crown it as the long-looked for Messiah of time, the monarch of all the ages.

The Tribune remarks that it cannot be denied that "the spirit of a higher social economy—partially a revolt and partially an instance of constructive self-assertion—is moving with great force in Europe and America."

The Tribune does not quite like to say that this "spirit" is socialism—that would be admitting a little too much. It is safer to indulge in "glittering generalities" and call it "the spirit of a higher social economy." But "that which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet," and so long as the Tribune is disposed to concede that capitalism "has been weighed in the balance and found wanting," and that a change is imperatively demanded in which "social advance" shall "dictate action," we shall not quarrel about terms. True, the Tribune's sudden conversion to socialism may by some be looked at a little askance, and many, as in days of old, will stare and mutter among the prophets? But while we concede that the Tribune's socialism is and is not "As deep as a well nor as wide as a church door," we are inclined to think it may "serve"—as a "starter," at least. Who knows but that it will ultimately become our "official organ"? It must be remembered that the "dying thief" only repented of his misdoings as he hung upon the cross, but it may be that nineteenth-century thieves will find it more convenient not to postpone their penitence till the hour of crucifixion, in the hope that crucifixion may thus be finally averted. It is sometimes wise to "take time by the forelock" and the "children of this world" have ever been "wiser in their generation than the children of light." After all, it may not have been altogether by accident that the editorial on "Twentieth Century Economy" found its way into the columns of capitalism's great organ. As in the case of "Saul," there is possibly "method" in the Tribune's "madness," but we greatly fear that there will be "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth" among the rank and file of the plutocracy over its erstwhile champion's new departure, and they too will be asking, with fierce imprecations, the very natural and pertinent questions, "What in the H—ades does it all mean? Can it really be that 'Saul,' our Saul, our staunch ally and 'familiar friend, with whom we did eat bread bathed lifted up his heel against us?' 'Has he wickedly betrayed our trust?' (and our trust), and gone over 'horse, foot and dragon' to the enemy? 'Is Saul,' blasphe'm, 'also among the (socialistic) prophets?'"

What answer will the Tribune give to these momentous queries? We await with bated breath the responsive utterances of the oracle.

Sherille Woodman.

[That Socialists generally keep themselves well posted on the utterances of the more representative capitalist journals is shown by the fact that the writer of the above criticism was by no means the only comrade who detected the very unusual tone of the matter which appeared in the editorial column of the Tribune. The editor had some criticism in preparation upon the same subject, but the arrival of copy from another contributor also dealing with it, determined him to suspend operations in favor of his correspondents. The observations of Comrade Hitch upon the subject in question are therefore appended.—ED.]

MAN VERSUS THING.

In our opinion the author of the foregoing article was writing under restraint. He sees more than his position allows him to express. The idea that legislation should have regard to the needs of persons may be tolerated occasionally in a newspaper editorial, but would be promptly recognized and opposed in the halls of legislature as involving ultimately an attack on property rights. The reason why is a common-places to all Socialists, viz.: "The proletariat, the lowest stratum of our present society, cannot stir, cannot raise itself up, without the whole superincumbent strata of official society being sprung into the air."—(Communist Manifesto, p. 25.)

Let us admit that the plutocracy plies the working class and wishes to help them and make them comfortable and prosperous. They know that if they should do this the workers would have their increased knowledge and power to overthrow their benefactors. Such is the selfishness and ingratitude of human nature. Give them an inch and they'll take an ell. The workers, having once been given political equality, can never more be educated to be satisfied with reasonable prosperity; this would only increase their appetite for more; and the perception of this fact will ever prevent the capitalists from willingly training up under their feet a force certain to overthrow them. It is this selfishness and ingratitude of the working class which will ultimately overthrow all classes and bring about the era of the golden rule in economics. This is a paradox which forms a perpetual stumbling block to Mayor Jones and all others who are trying to bring about socialism in a less offensive way than by the class struggle. The idea that the abolition of capitalism can be sugarcoated so as to become sweet and palatable to the capitalists or that we can steal a march on them and usher in socialism before they know it, is erroneous. The sooner we realize the true nature and magnitude of the task before us the sooner we shall be throwing all our energies in the right direction.

LABOR ITEMS

Opps man tending a nail machine turns out as many nails as a 1,000 men formerly did by hand.

Formerly it required a good workman to spin five pounds of cotton per day. Now two men with a machine turn out 1,000 pounds.

Nearly 14 per cent of the total number of wage earners in Minnesota are women, according to the report of the State Labor Department.

The Workers' Call has been requested to publish the text of the Chicago Federation of Labor on municipal ownership. Will appear next issue. Order at once.

Prof. Henry Davies, of Yale University, says that "socialism is the next great political creed to occupy our attention, and the central problem in this creed is the question of the distribution of wealth."

Up to the present nine unions with over eight thousand membership have withdrawn from the Chicago Building Trades Council. Twenty-three unions with eleven thousand members are still affiliated with it.

The Twelfth Annual Convention of the Mine Workers of America will convene in Indianapolis January 21. This will be the largest labor convention ever held, as delegates representing 220,000 miners will be present.—Ex.

Rev. George Hawes read a paper before the United Presbyterian Ministerial Association of Pittsburgh in which he came out straight for socialism, concluding that it is the hope of civilization. They're coming from all sides.

Eastern railways are experimenting with a new discovery to increase the power of steam. The claim is made that the invention will prove a success and that the saving will be immense in the matter of consumption of coal and water.—Ex.

The Chicago Lake Seamen's union has decided that its members may hold political jobs and still retain their membership in the organization. This decision was passed by a majority of two votes, which was a narrow shave for the capitalist politicians.

At least the boot and shoe manufacturers, hemmed in on all sides by trusts controlling material they use, are forming a trust. Sixteen large firms will combine and it is the intention to wipe out all middlemen and sell all products direct to customers through retail stores to be established.

The big strike inaugurated by many trades in Genoa, Italy, because the government closed the Socialist and labor headquarters has been called off, the ministry having announced that the headquarters will be re-established. In parliament the Socialists introduced a resolution to withdraw all troops from China, and a hot fight is expected.

In her dealing with the poor, so far as mild weather goes, nature seems to be setting our favored classes an example this winter. Yet there has never been such a period of kidnapping cases, burglaries, hold-ups, bank robberies and defalcations. What does it all mean? Why can't people be satisfied when their dinner pails are running over full?—Galesburg Labor News.

Fourteen of the largest steel plate mills in the United States have entered a pool that will be the second largest combine of the kind in the country, the other being a pool composed of three financial houses that now control all the eastern railroads. All commissioned agents who were employed by the firms in the steel pool are being let out, and they will now have an opportunity of contemplating their "full dinner pails," like the iron and steel workers who had their wages cut.

Oh, ho! The Independent glass combine, which was organized to smash the trust, is reported as having entered into an agreement with the octopus to hold up prices and prevent the "demoralization of trade by unprofitable competition." The trust has also played a neat game in insuring watered stock to its employees and electing Simon Burns a member of the board of directors, thus blocking strikes. It is said prices will be raised 50 per cent, but it is not said that those who produce the glass, the workers, will receive a penny advance of the proposed steel.—Cleveland Citizen.

A strike of stevedores in Havana was promptly squashed by Governor General Wood. He issued orders to the chief of police to protect those who took the strikers' places, at any cost. The dispatch states that "his attitude took all the strike fever out of the discontented stevedores and they went back to work." And yet the Cubans do not appreciate the liberty bestowed upon them. They enjoy the same privileges that are conferred upon free American workmen in similar cases, and are not even grateful. But perhaps the action of General Wood meets with the approval of the "better classes" in Cuba.

During the city campaign there will not be much opportunity for open-air agitation on account of the season. However, the comrades still have the Workers' Call. Pushing the circulation of the party organ is the best way to work for socialism. Are you selling any Call postals?

FOREIGN NEWS.

Glimpse of the World-wide Struggle of the Proletarian Army for Its Liberty.

AUSTRIA.

The local Socialist organ at Trieste, the "Lavoratore," is going to appear twice instead of once a week.

That report of the defeat of the Socialists in the Austrian elections which the daily press has been exploding should be received with caution. Ten to one there is a capitalist trick at the bottom of it. It is almost certain that the explanation of what has really happened will come to light in a week or so. The details of the last election in Austria give good reason for believing that a policy of coercion, disenfranchisement or fraud of some other description has been put in operation.

BELGIUM.

The dock laborers strike in Antwerp is reported as having ended in a victory for the employers, who by the introduction of 40,000 outside laborers have been able to continue business as usual, and ignore the strikers entirely. The employers may make the most of their victory, but it is safe to say that the lesson will not be lost on the Belgian laborers when they again go to the ballot box.

FINLAND.

In all respects Finland is a very interesting country. Its people live a happy simple life, and progress has been made in many directions. The latest interesting news is that one of those Maisons du Peuple, that is a building which serves both as a club and a co-operative store, has been opened at Tampere. The Finns, too, are maintaining a brave struggle against Russian oppression. They once counted on the support of Europe. That, however, they will not get, and they will have to work out their own salvation. The country, which has hitherto been peaceful and contented, under Russian rule will become as revolutionary as Poland; but at present the Czar and his advisers are living in a fool's paradise; the awakening will be a sad one.

FRANCE.

At Carmaux Calvignac has been re-elected mayor. It will be remembered that five years ago he was sentenced to five years' deprivation of his political rights, and he had therefore to vacate his post as mayor. The Socialist who was elected in his place, however, resigned in his favor as soon as Calvignac could legally sit again. The strike at Calais still continues; the strikers are receiving substantial aid from English trade unions.

GERMANY.

At the election for the local parliament in Wurtemberg the Socialists have gained three seats. The Socialist party in Bavaria has been holding a congress, the action of the party was approved.

"Postoffice Socialism."

A good example of postoffice socialism is furnished by the registry division of the Chicago postoffice. The advisory board has recommended for removal Henry K. Johnson, the clerk being in subordination. He is a clerk in the registry department, and on account of being made to work from 8 o'clock p. m. on Saturday until Sunday noon, a space of 16 hours, and from 9 o'clock p. m. on Sunday to 10 o'clock a. m. on Monday, he protested to Superintendent Marr, who admitted that an account of the Christmas rush the "energies" of all the "employees" were being taxed, but that he, (Johnson), was not being taxed beyond his strength; so, not getting any satisfaction, Johnson "obstinately refused to return to work," with the above-stated result.

The government, of which this post-office system is a part, while in favor of paying subsidies to wealthy shipowners, does not pretend to conserve the energies of mere mail clerks by providing sufficient help to get out the peoples' gift-matter properly, so Johnson, who thought his constitution as well as that of the other clerks ought to be considered by striking against his chains finds that the blow rebounds and knocks off his official head.

When the people become wise enough to take possession of their own, present-giving will not be a commercial affair but can be indulged in whenever the heart prompts to it. The setting apart of a single day in the year for the purpose of exhibiting "peace on earth, good will to men" spirit, will become a relic of that barbarism which used that spirit as a commercial asset on the one hand and an ignorance persecutor on the other. Postoffice "socialism" may be helping in the direction of that longed-for time, but apparently not as one who rebelled against slavery to the commercialism which socialism must do away with, is dismissed from the postal service forthwith. The postal department, as at present managed is not socialism but a species of state socialism, which gives to the people a little of the benefits of a good institution in order that the ruling class may get great benefits from it. Pay your money for state socialism or take your choice—socialism!

dictates that man is reaching a stage of conscious and purposeful evolution. When a state begins to be resolute in one spot, he soon grows restive all over; let one link of his chains break, and he will try other links. So with the collective man in a world-system of slavery; let one bond on his soul or body snap, and he will tug at other bonds, till at last the whole slave-order is put to the test, when he sees that he must have liberty everywhere or nowhere. Thus the effort for economic freedom is disclosing itself as the struggle of man for standing ground upon which to achieve an emancipation that shall be complete, an emancipation reaching as high and as deep as human feeling and action, and opening the gates through which each man's life may pass into a rich, glad, free song of universal good. The economic struggle is indeed but the last form of the agony of man for the salvation of his soul. Materialistic as it seems to be, a truthful analysis will show this struggle to be more radically and prophetically spiritual than anything that has come to the world since fishermen and slaves hailed Jesus as the Christ.

"The need of a new religious synthesis is therefore identical with the need of a new economic system, or of a new kind of politics. There is really but one great human need, whatever form it may take to express itself in; it does not matter whether we call it economic or religious or political. From whatever point of view we look at the human problem, and however we express our view of it, we all mean the same essential thing, when our expressions are analysed. What we see and feel is the need of a principle and statement of life that shall cover all its facts and forces, and that shall organize these into a working synthesis which shall supply the uttermost human need and liberate every human aspiration and energy. Call the synthesis what we please; it will turn out to be a new and human religion; and that, just because it has found economic and religious and political to a different names for the same effort of the human spirit to achieve its freedom and wholeness."

Socialist Singers.

Every Sunday, 10:30 a. m., 1093 W. Madison street, corner Western avenue.

Music by the Schubert Spring Quartette. Lecture by Fred K. Strickland.

The meeting last Sunday was an excellent beginning for the morning hour. About all the available chairs were in use. The comrades sang most heartily.

The beginning of a Socialist chorus is already accomplished. Comrade Gretchen was present and rendered a very enjoyable solo on the violin.

Each number of the Schubert Quartette was enjoyed. Their playing is exceptionally fine and reflects much credit to the Keller Music school, 523 E. Western avenue, with which they are associated. These comrades are certainly a valuable acquisition to the Twelfth and Thirtieth ward Socialists.

Comrade Strickland spoke especially to Socialists on the value of Socialist meetings in our propaganda. He mentioned the value of simple speech, music, the drama, and social gatherings.

Comrade Brennan presided and introduced this yell, which was heartily given:

What do we want? Socialism!
What will we get? Socialism!
What will we keep? Socialism!!!

PATRIOTISM AND PROPERTY.

"Influentials" in the Transvaal and the Philippines Anxious to Surrender.

The patriotism of the capitalist is much the same all the world over. It is generally bound up with his property interests, or, as the Socialists say, it lies in his pocket. Illustrations of this come almost simultaneously from the two countries where the United States and Great Britain are still engaged in the "benevolent assimilation" process.

Dispatches from Pretoria state that the "influential burghers" of that city recently met to consider suggestions looking to the ending of the war. A proposal to send the burghers who had surrendered, back to their own districts, and at the same time send a proclamation to those still in the field showing the hopelessness of resistance, was unanimously adopted, and will be distributed along with Kitchener's proclamations.

A committee was at once formed to carry this project into effect. It consists of "Mr. Van Rensselaer, president; Mr. Cronje, a brother of General Cronje, both members of the First Volksraad; Mr. Zeederburg of the Second Volksraad, and Mr. De Kock.

General Kitchener assured this body of "influentials" that all who would surrender would receive the consideration due to their rank."

The following extract from a letter written by an officer now serving in the Philippines shows a corresponding sentiment amongst the "influentials" in Luzon:

There are a great many VERY rich men here, and I find them very nice people. WHAT LAND THEY CHURCH DOES NOT OWN THEY OWN, but they are afraid to go out and look after their farms, so the LA-BORERS who live on them run them to suit themselves and incidentally contribute to the insurgents.

Isn't it strange that in both cases the property-owning classes are the first whose "patriotism" succumbs, while the laborers and those who have in reality nothing to lose, continue the struggle even when their "better classes," the "nice people," advise and hope for surrender? Verily the economist who first stated that "capital (the meanest capitalist), was timid, knew whereof he wrote."

The Karl Marx Class.

The 31th Annual Session of the Karl Marx class was opened on January 6th, at Nieme Hall, 725 Washington street, Boston, Mass., and will continue through the season, every Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m. Mrs. Martha Moore Avery, director. The syllabus includes the following subjects: Analysis of Value, Use Value and Exchange Value, Development of Equivalent Value to Money, Raising and Selling of Labor Power, Constant and Variable Capital, and Surplus Value. The establishment of this class offers a splendid opportunity for acquiring knowledge of the laws underlying wealth-production under capitalism.

"Declared Off."

The war between the coffee and sugar trusts has been declared off. The Havemeyer and Arbuckle interests have decided to drop hostilities and proceed to remove the hide from that ill-used individual the "consumer," who has been reaping the benefit of the struggle between the two "betwixxes." It is said that "you can't have too much of a good thing," but the fellows who control the coffee and sugar industries evidently seem to consider that the saying doesn't apply to competition.

WHAT THE CHICAGO WORKERS SAY:

JAMES B. SMILEY, Secretary of the Joint Committee of the Social Democracy, secretary party of Illinois and author of "To What Are Trusts Leading," says:—"This is the best series of lessons or lectures on Social Economics that I have ever known anything about. Those who cannot attend the classes can make no better investment of time or money than to take the course by correspondence."

J. STITT WILSON, of the "Social Crusade," says:—"There can be no better work than yours and you ought to have a thousand students at once."

EDWIN D. WHEELLOCK, President of the "Christian Socialist League," says:—"This is exactly the work which ought to go on and Mills is exactly the man to make it go."

A. M. SIMONS, Editor of the "International Socialist Review" says:—"Socialism needs most of all a large army of effective workers. This course of lessons will be found to be the very best means for training yourself to become such a worker. It will put you in possession of the very facts and arguments you will constantly need in the defence of Socialism."

An Explanation. We regret to state that through the inadvertence or inexperience of those deputed to arrange the program of the ball given at Brand's Hall last Saturday, two advertisements from bakers who are on the unfair list of the union appeared on the program. While the management of the Workers' Call regrets this oversight, they wish to state that they are in no way responsible for the occurrence, and would suggest that closer relations on the part of the unions with the paper, might not improbably tend to render such mistakes impossible in the future. A list of establishments with whom the unions are in conflict would, if regularly posted to this office, furnish an accurate guide in such cases, and prevent the appearance of advertising matter from objectionable firms, on a Socialist program.

A mattress-maker named Filmore, last week endeavored to demonstrate the practical application of capitalistic theory, by allotting fifteen cents per day as the food expenditure necessary for his wife, two children and himself. The experiment ended up by his occupation of a cell in the county jail, where he will have leisure to meditate upon the nature of the justice preached by reformers, who insist that the working class eat too much for their own good—and that of the capitalist class also.

The publication of this work marks an era in socialist propaganda in America in that it places in the hands of every socialist worker the information and material necessary to his work in as attractive a form as the material hitherto only accessible to the capitalist parties, while at the same time this material has been illuminated and explained in the light of the socialist philosophy. This makes of the book at once a store-house of knowledge for the socialist speaker and agitator and the best propagandist work yet published, for it not only presents the doctrines of socialism in clear, convincing form, but accompanies the reasoning with the facts from which it is drawn in a manner that can but carry conviction to any unprejudiced mind.

The table of contents given herewith will give a good idea of the plan and scope of the work. The first two chapters are not simply a recital of isolated facts, but so correlate the historical data as to cause them to form a convincing argument of the trend of industrial development. The chapters on trusts bring out their two-fold character by which they mark at the same time a higher degree of economic development and a more intense exploitation of the producer. In "Labor's Demands and Capitalism's Answers" the efforts of organized labor to secure relief in "labor legislation" through capitalist parties is treated exhaustively and should prove a convincing argument with any trade-unionist for the necessity of independent political action along socialist lines. The chapter on "Wages and Living Expenses" is a careful examination of our present "prosperity" and a complete refutation of the claim that the laborers have shared in industrial advance. The discussion of "How the Working Class Live" is written by one of the foremost students of this subject in this country and embraces much material hitherto unpublished. The last two chapters, on the "Capitalist Political Platform" and "The Growth of Socialism," complete the line of argument furnished by the facts in the preceding chapters, making of the whole work a powerful brief for the cause of socialism.

THE SOCIALIST CAMPAIGN BOOK contains 150 pages and is handsomely printed on extra book paper with an artistic cover. The price, including postage to any address, is 25 cents; 5 copies, $1.00.

REPORT OF THE CHICAGO FEDERATION OF LABOR ON MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

Socialist
Pointers

"Labor is prior to and independent of Capital. . . . Capital is only the fruit of labor and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. . . . Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration."—Abraham Lincoln.

An Open Letter to the Street Railway Commission of the City of Chicago:

Gentlemen: In reply to your inquiries, the Federation of Labor, on behalf of labor interests involved, respectfully submits for your consideration the following suggestions:

First—It does not seem to have occurred to your honorable body that your questions proceed upon an assumption that is false at its basis. For Franchisees Vest in City.

1. When the so-called franchisees expire in 1905, on, WE THEN HAVE COMPLETE MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP OF THE RAILWAYS, without any action either state or municipal, reserving the same in the city. The railways vest as exclusively in the municipality as though no grant had ever been made and this without legislative action of any kind whatever.

Expiration of Grants.

2. A right of way granted for a fixed term must necessarily restore the original status at the expiration of the term. It becomes then as though no grant had ever been made—as though the city had never given the special privilege to the use of its streets. As with a lease to one's premises, so with a right of way—it is merely a temporary tenure for a specific purpose reverting absolutely to the grantor at the expiration of the term. Neither a lessee nor a grantee has any vested interest in nor claim to a renewal of a lease or a franchise privilege except by specific stipulation to such effect, which must be set out in the document evidencing the lease or grant. The rights of the tenant or franchise-holder cease absolutely and for all time the very day their grant or license expires.

Even Judicial Action Not Required.

3. Not even action by the courts declaring the contract ended is necessary. "When the franchise is granted for a specific period of time it expires at the end of such period, and no judicial proceedings are necessary to declare it at an end, nor will a failure of the city granting the right to fulfill any collateral contractual obligation operate to prolong its existence."

American and English Encyclopedia of Law, vol. 23, p. 975.

Railways Property Interests Give No Rights.

4. The courts have already decided that failure to provide for the companies' property gives the railway companies no rights. "It is impossible," says the Supreme Court of Louisiana, "that such failure should operate to prolong plaintiff's right to exercise the right of way by a railroad over the public streets after the expiration of the term for which the privilege was granted; or to prevent the sovereign power of the city, delegated by the state, over the public streets, FROM IMMEDIATELY ATTACHING FREE FROM SUCH PRIVILEGE."

City's Control Attaches Immediately.

"In the exercise of her sovereign right and volition, the city sold to the plaintiff the privilege of this right of way for twenty years AND NO LONGER. The term has expired. The plaintiff has no longer any such privilege. The sovereign rights of the city have re-attached, ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM ANY PRIVILEGE OF PLAINTIFF. HER SOVEREIGN POWER OVER HER STREETS, DELEGATED FOR THE CONVENIENCE AND WELFARE OF HER PEOPLE, CANNOT BE RESTRAINED IN ITS EXERCISE TO WAIT THE SETTLEMENT OF CONTROVERSIES TOUCHING RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS NOT CONCERNING THE FRANCHISE OR PRIVILEGE ITSELF, BUT OTHER PRIVATE PROPERTY."

Canal, etc., Co. vs. New Orleans, 30 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cases, 145.

No Legislative Action Necessary.

5. Hence, municipal ownership of the right of way is a resulting status of the expiration of the license to the companies and not an act of legislation positive. No legislative nor even judicial action is necessary for the accomplishment of complete municipal control.

A City Franchise Merely a License.

6. The franchise, so-called, are, as a matter of fact and law, not franchises—nor grants of sovereign power—but mere licenses for the use of the streets during the term set forth in the license grant. The supreme court sets this forth in emphatic terms in a decision which has become a leading case in this state.

"Corporate franchises in the American states emanate FROM THE GOVERNMENT OR THE SOVEREIGN POWER—owe their existence to a grant. The grant or license given by the ordinance [of a city] constitutes a delegation of a franchise. Hence, a municipal body, it is understood, POSSESSES NO POWER TO CONFER FRANCHISE."

Davis vs. the Mayor, 4 Kernan, 594, Parlin vs. Mills, 104 Ill. 60.

Municipalities Cannot Grant Franchise.

"Being a mere license . . . [the city] could waive a strict performance of the condition as to time. The license [of right of way] granted by the ordinance is no more a franchise than would be the grant of the right of way by a private citizen. . . . There is no authority for the assumption [that] the license to the railway company to construct its road on Indiana avenue is a franchise. Herein consists the vice of the whole argument on this branch of the case. At most it was but a mere license, and comes within no definition of a franchise, nor does it emanate from any source competent to give a franchise."

Railway Companies Rights Gone.

7. From the date the grant expires, therefore, the railway companies not only have no right to the use of the streets, but as a matter of fact and law, they are from that day on trespassers, and they may be indicted as a public nuisance or may be held for rent, storage and damage for every day that their rolling stock and roadbed remain in place thereafter. They have no more rights nor any more "vested interests" than have saloons in the renewal of their licenses upon expiration. There are no interests to be considered other than those of the city itself.

City Has Full Control.

8. The city has the option of compelling the railway companies, at their own expense, to remove every vestige of their property from the streets or to enter into an arrangement with the companies for the use of the property for the public benefit at a reasonable charge (until such time as the legal transfer of the same can be effected) to be legally determined by an appraisal based upon the market value of the material entering into the construction of the roadbed.

Method of Appraisal.

9. This appraisal cannot take cognizance of franchise values, for the companies can give to the city no franchise value; neither should cost of construction enter into the appraisal for the reason that at the expiration of the grant the city has a right to its streets clear of trackage or other property, and in paying for the raw material it saves the railway companies the cost of removing such material from the streets. Even compensation based on the cost of material entering into the roadbed is virtually a clear gift to the companies, for the reason that for them to remove the rails and restore the streets to the required grade and condition would cost more than the rails are worth on the market.

New Franchisees Unwarranted.

10. It is therefore incumbent on those who advocate new grants to show the advantages of such grants—the same as though the question were to turn over the waterworks of Chicago to a private monopoly instead of treating the problem as acquiring a title and rights from another. We will after 1903 have the same rights to the franchise in the railways that we have in the water supply franchise now.

Giving Away Our Waterworks.

11. The question, then, is if we should ask: Shall the city part with the waterworks monopoly in 1903 or with its railway monopoly? It has the same exclusive rights in the one that it has in the other, and they should be considered from a similar point of view, and with equal care. Why should we turn over our water supply to private hands, that favored corporations may wax rich on that which is absolutely necessary to our very existence in a great city? Or the transportation monopoly, which is hardly of less moment in urban life? The interests of the city will be the same in one that they are in the other.

How to Get the Equipment.

Second—The requirement of the necessary equipment to operate the roads is not as difficult as the franchise-holders and other parties in interest are striving to have the public imagine. The means to operate the street railways can be acquired in a number of ways, among which are the following:

The Simplest Method.

1. The simplest way and the one that most naturally recommends itself to public approval under our present legal limitations is for the city to lease the equipment from the present holders for a stipulated time for a stipulated monthly rental, to be based upon a percentage of profits or a fixed payment, as may commend itself to the mayor and the city council, the amount of rental to be based upon an appraisal of the actual present worth of the property to be used by the city.

Companies Powerless to Defraud.

2. If the companies refuse to treat upon a reasonable basis, arrange for leasing equipment from some manufacturer upon a similar basis and negotiate for the construction of power houses to furnish the power.

May Be Purchased in Trust.

3. Or, if it becomes necessary, a company can purchase these or other properties in trust for the city, to be paid for in stipulated installments covering the purchase price and interest, to be turned over to the city upon payment of the principal or at such time as the city shall be authorized to take the same in such manner as hereafter may be provided by law—as by issuance of bonds or otherwise.

Limits of Indebtedness No Bar.

4. Any one of the foregoing plans requires no additional indebtedness and can be entered upon without any action of the state legislature. They place the whole solution of the railway problem in our own hands and put upon the mayor and aldermen the entire responsibility for any ill-advised action that may be taken during the next few years concerning the disposal of these gold mines of public or private advantage as our city officials shall determine.

Plan of Postoffice Department.

The second plan is adopted very largely by the postoffice department in its conduct of its mail system. It leases wagons, cars or trains as established routes of its own just as may be considered necessary or advisable in its operation of the department.

Abuses of the Leasing System.

And while it is entirely practical where the necessity exists, it is inadvisable as a permanent plan because of favoritism in making contracts like, for instance, where the federal government pays for car rental the cost of the car over and over again. Yet while in this way it may be as under franchise holdings, a fruitful source of private profit, the government has demonstrated that it is a practical plan and that its abuse merely decreases the profits of government operation—nothing more.

Abuses in Our Water Department.

The millions of dollars worth of water stolen by public connivance in Chicago is another illustration of abuses arising under public opinion in our water supply system. But these abuses are always capable of being cured in short order by the force of awakened public opinion, as recent events attest the water steals in Chicago plainly demonstrate.

Municipal Operations Profitable Despite Abuses.

We would not, because of these stealings, or perhaps a million dollars, surrender our control of the water supply, which has, notwithstanding this dishonesty of mayors and subordinates, still been a profit to the city of millions of dollars over and above the steals, not to mention the more satisfactory and cheaper supply of water which investments for a short term of years would not warrant.

Issuance of Bonds.

5. We may be authorized to issue bonds to buy the company's equipment and pay both principal and interest from the proceeds of the operation thereof—which must in any event be the ultimate course to be pursued.

Leasing the Franchisees.

6. Or, we may, through leasing the main advantage of municipal ownership, lease out the franchise to the highest bidder for a specified time. This, however, in reality, is not municipal ownership, but merely a shifting of the character of the grantee's tenure. It has the pretense of municipal ownership—a pleasant juggling of words in a half-concealed attempt to satisfy everybody. All grants, whether assuming the character of short lease or ninety-nine year franchisees, are in reality leases, and they may be for a stated monthly or yearly compensation, compensation for a term of years or a lease to be terminated at will, with or without compensation to the city. Hence, to a large extent, leasing the lines is merely a shift in the nature of the tenure, making more frequent the opportunity for manipulation and hoodlums. The only real municipal ownership is the Chicago plan of furnishing value—municipal ownership and operation. This is municipal ownership in fact and is the only solution of the railway problem in Chicago.

Compensation Is Robbery.

Compensation is merely a form of robbery. It is using the street railway companies as tax collectors to extort from those who of necessity must ride on the cars, a charge over and above the value of their ride, to be paid into the public treasury to relieve large property owners from paying just that amount in taxes. Such a procedure is unconstitutional and an abuse of the power of direct taxation (that should not be tolerated for a moment).

Workingmen Pay Landlords' Taxes.

If the working classes, who are mainly the users of the street cars, must needs pay the property owners' taxes, let them do it outright and direct and not under the guise of a public benefit that enables accessories in robbery to pose as public benefactors.

Compensation a Method of Fraud.

The demand for compensation is, under the surface, merely the demand of the downtown landlords for a share in the amount extorted from the people by the franchise holders.

Selling Away the Peoples' Rights.

Compensation, therefore, is a method of robbery under the form of law; and the public official who would give away the city's rights in consideration for the companies paying a few influential men's taxes under the name of compensation, is merely a cheap pretender who, more vile than Esau, would sell the birthright of the people for a mess of pottage and then let another get the pottage.

Deferred Public Ownership.

Four—Deferred public ownership is not public ownership at all. It is a crafty, thinly veiled ruse to grant a franchise to extort money from the people while admitting that it is wrong. It is merely a cheap man's method of manipulating power so that corporate power can more securely trench itself behind the fraudulent pretense of "vested interests." It on the expiration of the present franchisees there are some interests that prevent the people from enjoying their own, upon the expiration of the next franchise these "interests" that must be protected will then be legion. The very fact that the people were cheated out of their rights this time will be a precedent that will the more easily defeat the reversion of the streets to the people next time. It is only the coward or political trifler who would put on his children the performance of the duty with which he himself is charged.

Common Expiration of Grants Impossible.

Furthermore, it is impossible to fix a time, either in the near or remote future when the grants will expire in common. The citizens of Chicago will recall that just previous to the annexation of Austin to Chicago, the council of that suburb met in hurried session and for some peculiar impelling motive granted a franchise for fifty years. Are the railway companies of Chicago to be notified that all that is necessary for them to do to secure their downtown rights of way is for them to get a legal hold for ninety-nine years on some branch line and then the people of Chicago to supinely wait for the expiration of these ill-gotten privileges for them to assert their rights to that which belongs to them? The question gives its own answer. The negligence or dishonesty, as the case may be, of public officials in extending these privileges, as they have, instead of being made a reason for the further grants of privilege, should be regarded as they in fact are, the very best reasons why no further grants should be made.

Political Influence of Little Importance.

Nor is the objection that under municipal operation the political pull would be used to secure employment worthy of any serious consideration. Abuses of this kind coming in close touch with the great body of people everyday would be exposed by indignant public opinion in short order. And any mayor or public official, refusing to give better service than we get now would meet swift retribution at the hands of the voters at the ensuing election. Under public control thousands of voters would not have to ride to and fro, every day packed like cattle in and about ill-equipped cars. Ample provision could be made for the accommodation of the public and yet there be a magnificent profit over and above operating expenses.

Penny Wise—Pound Foolish.

It seems absurd that any public mind should raise the point that a few worthy hangers-on would profit to the extent of a few cents by public control, "at the present stage of municipal development" and thereby the operation be expensive, when under present conditions private operation is a thousand times more expensive with poorer service.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that a million dollars a year went to hangers-on for political pull, when in fact no real equivalent to the city was given. More than that amount now goes to foreign capitalists, who perform no real service for their returns. And, giving more than due weight to the far-drawn supposition, WHY IS IT PREFERABLE TO GIVE THE MILLIONS AWAY TO NON-RESIDENTS WHO IN NO WAY BENEFIT CHICAGO RATHER THAN TO THE HOME MAN WHO AT LEAST SPENDS EVERY CENT OF THE MONEY IN THE CITY? And why give it to two or three barons rather than to the many? If money is to be wasted, which as a matter of fact is not necessary, we submit that it is better to be wasted in Chicago than by foolish codfish aristocrats in an attempt to be somebody in the courts of Europe.

Meaning of Procratizations.

Deferred public ownership means a private grant in perpetuity or else reversion to the people only when by progress in new inventions or by the nature of things the franchise has ceased any longer to be valuable. After the land had been denuded of forests no one would want and there be no advocates of a franchise to cut timber.

Only One Honest Solution.

The only way to secure public ownership is to take advantage of the termination of the franchise. Hold him, who advocates "some other time" as he is—the enemy of public rights—the betrayer of the body politic. At the last majority election all the candidates declared themselves in favor of municipal ownership, even the candidate who was supposed to represent the interests of the traction companies. And, on passage, we presume that the veriest thief would be willing to have stealing stop after he personally could no longer benefit by its continuation.

Ownership Must Come Here and Now.

The Chicago Federation of Labor and its friends are not advocating municipal ownership in any such Pickwickian sense. Nor do we regard the interests of the city of Chicago safe in the hands of any mayor or alderman who does not attempt to safeguard the rights of the public in their title to these franchises here and now. To be betrayed by a professed friend, to be sold by one's own supposed representative, is worse than to be beaten at the polls and suffer at the hands of one's avowed enemies.

Measures to Improve Operation.

Fifth. We are opposed to the zone system, in favor at present of the 5-cent fare and universal transfer, for the following reasons:

Evils of Zone System.

1. A zone system intensifies the congestion of population, crowds people in filthy houses and raises rents for downtown landlords.

One Fare and Universal Transfer.

2. A single fare and universal transfer opens up the opportunity of pretty, inexpensive suburban villas, making a healthy home possible and mitigating the evils of the overcrowded condition of city life.

Hours, Wages and Service Superior to Ford.

3. A fare reduced a cent or two would not materially tend to solve the labor problem. Instead, (a) three shifts of workingmen of eight hours each, (b) payment of guaranteed wages on a fair basis, (c) railway lines to all parts of the city and (d) an improved system and facilities with ample accommodations for all at all hours, and finally (e) amenability to public control by arbitration would do more to solve labor difficulties than selling twenty-five tickets for a dollar or some other questionable makeshift of a similar character.

Tuition Reforms an Irritant.

Unmeaning promises of sterile measures offering pittance to poverty are but a mockery to wage workers. On the one hand stands the landlord, quick to appropriate to himself through increased rents anything that enables him to enhance the rental value of his property. On the other hand stands the employer, equally ready to renege wages to any decrease in the cost of living at his first opportunity—limited only by the effectiveness of the organization of the workers; and against the landlord and employer is the worker.

Employees' Rights a Prime Factor.

But an eight-hour day at an increased wage, will for the time at least enable the employee to live respectably, improve their homes, get some leisure and enjoyment out of life and make creditable citizens, such as the freedom of a republic ought and have right to be.

J. Pierpont Morgan is starting the century right by cornering all the anthracite coal.

The Socialist party does not need any Mark Hanna's, if any earnest seeker after information should ask you.

No doubt Bryan would be coming our way a good deal faster if we had a million votes at our command.

The man in Maine who is 100 years old and cast his vote for McKinley may be said to be enjoying a green old age.

It is said that Rockefeller will start a paper, but what will be the use when he owns so many papers already?

Of course it is the fault of the other members if your branch is not doing what it should towards winter agitation.

This is a free country and the constitution does not prohibit any Socialist who feels he needs leaders from having them.

Even in disease there are classes; the rich people are all having the grip while the poor have to be contented with colds.

Why this kick on Mark Hanna's ship subsidy; haven't the workingmen been subsidized for years by the protective tariff?

Some well-disposed people believe there are no classes in this country because they never come in contact with but one class.

If Socialists do not hew to the line how can they expect muddled middle class reformers to walk in the straight and narrow path?

The workingman who is afraid of socialism does not know what socialism is, but that is not necessarily the case with the capitalist.

J. Pierpont Morgan thinks he will be able to win the next coal strike because Mark Hanna will not care how long he keeps it up.

Workingmen need not worry any longer about the spring campaign; their leaders have met and turned their votes over to Carter Harrison.

The churches that want to drive out vice never stop to ask where the man who contributes to the collection plate got his money, nor how he got it.

Rockefeller does not yet own the earth, but as he owns the courts and congresses it is only a matter of time until he will take possession of the former.

With municipal gas and street car lines some people seem to think that the workingman would have free supper and breakfast in addition to the full dinner pail.

It may be hard work to get subscribers for the Workers' Call, but the Co-operative Commonwealth is not going to fall into your lap if you simply sit down and wait for it.

No wonder New York dukes recognize in Great Britain a more progressive country than their own when the Socialists of that nation elected two members of parliament.

By all means let us increase the standing army; then in the day that is swiftly coming when the emperor of Germany will want protection from his subjects we can loan it to him.

The people who are so certain that socialism will be a failure are probably of the opinion that capitalism is a success, but their opinion is not based on Dinn and Bradstreet's reports.

The Single Taxers are running a city ticket, but they will find the rich man who have been patting them on the back, will be found voting for capitalism where their selfish interests lie.

Mark Hanna thinks the public schools will always be a bulwark against socialism. They certainly should be considering the way the Chicago school teachers are being treated by the capitalist parties.

It is the popular belief that the American workingman is the most intelligent in the world, but in no other civilized country do the workingmen allow the lawyers and Congress to make all the laws for them.

The time is rapidly approaching when the capitalist papers and editors will be obliged to attempt to answer the actual arguments of the Socialists and cease their amendment of knocking down Socialist straw men.

ORGANIZED LABOR OF MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

The complete text of the report of the Chicago Federation of Labor upon the question of municipal ownership will be found in the columns of this issue of the Workers' Call, where it appears by request. The position of organized labor towards this subject will, we think, prove interesting to the readers of the paper from the fact that the question is dealt with as near as possible from the standpoint of the working class. Time and space do not permit of an adequate editorial comment, but it is safe to predict that the ideas suggested in the report will find little favor from either of the great political parties, who have between them taken turns in preying upon the working class of Chicago. These ideas are completely hostile to local capitalist interests and their rejection by both Republicans and Democrats may be looked for as a matter of course. In suggesting measures impossible of realization under capitalist class rule, the rank and file of organized labor will ultimately be brought to see that in the victory of socialism alone can they be enforced.

The movement for "municipal ownership" springs mostly from the needs of the small business and property-owning classes, who see in it an apparent relief from excessive taxation. The enormous dividends now accruing to the owners of the means of city transportation, they wish to utilize for that purpose. That these dividends should be diverted to the uses suggested by the Federation of Labor is a measure which they could not be reasonably expected to favor. The Federation takes the stand that the franchise revert to the city on expiry, without any legislative procedure, and scout the idea that the present holders are entitled to any compensation whatever. They ask that the city street railway system be made self-sufficient, that the dividends earned shall be used entirely for improving the service, increasing the pay of the employees and reducing the hours of labor so that more may be employed. It will be apparent that this disposition of the question lies utterly outside the framework of present society. These demands may be looked for in vain in any capitalist political program, and even supposing that they were enforced, the improvement in the material conditions of the working class as a whole would be so slight as to be hardly perceptible. However, the fact that the Chicago Federation of Labor have taken the position stated in their report, affords a measure by which the growth of class-consciousness and recognition of class interests amongst organized workmen can be judged. It is probable that no great length of time must elapse before the entire truth forces itself upon them, that in the collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution by their class lies their only hope of permanent and considerable betterment of their material conditions of life.

UTILITY OF COMPROMISES.

The search for some common ground upon which laborer and capitalist can meet and adjust their differences seems to be as vain as the ancient quest for the philosopher's stone. No sooner has a new solution, or rather a pretended solution, been ushered in with a flourish of trumpets, than it is shattered to pieces by one or other of the disputants and its worthlessness made apparent to both, though it is only left to say that such result is no surprise to the more keen-sighted individuals on either side. Following the example of the late George M. Pullman, a well-known railroad president has recently declared that he would rather go out of business than arbitrate, and now from the side of the workers the same conclusion is reached and translated into action. A number of expert workmen in this city, though ostensibly bound by an arbitration agreement, have even in defiance of the appointed officials of their union, inaugurated a strike in the workshop where they were employed, and are still out, notwithstanding the declaration of the international president to the effect that they had clearly violated their agreement, and the threat that the shop would be declared an open one if the strikers did not return to work.

The most interesting phase of the situation lies in the fact that the union to which these men belong had entered into an arbitration scheme, similar in many respects to that which was exploited at the recent conference in Steinway Hall as a decided step towards settling the heretofore-unresolved "labor problem." In fact, this particular agreement was autographed in glowing terms at the same gathering, as an example of what should be done to ensure harmonious relations between employer and employee, and abolish that bugbear of both parties, the strike. And yet within a few weeks, at the first contact with material interests, the much-vaunted agreement explodes, leaving the visionaries who regarded it as a preliminary to final settlement, weeping over the fragments.

The so-called "economists" who attempt to harmonize elements which in their nature are antagonistic, bear the same relation to scientific students of sociology as the alchemist of five centuries ago does to the modern expounder of chemical science. Out of the demonstrated failures of alchemy however, came the discovery of modern chemical truths, and so out of the fruitless experimenting of economic quacks, the reality of the class struggle as a truth will emerge, and the strike and lockout will remain as manifestations of its persistence while society is composed of capitalists and laborers, two classes whose material interests compel them to assume an attitude of uncompromising hostility towards each other.

The union men who have disregarded the impossible agreement to which they were a party, and who have ignored the order of their president to return to work, have by their action reached the utterance of the railroad magnate who declared that he would "rather go out of business" than arbitrate. In quitting work, they have actually done so. That they will resume again is of course certain. Their physical needs demand imperatively that they sell their only commodity—their labor power. But nevertheless they have demonstrated the folly of the economic charlatans who insisted that lasting peace was attainable if the parties would only swallow their buns. Both worker and capitalist have speared it up for the reason that they could not keep it down. They may swallow it again, but the result will be ever the same. Arbitration won't "cure all diseases incident to humanity," and least of all, the social and economic ones with which it is afflicted. The elimination of one of the two great discordant class elements is inevitable, and the one that is surely doomed by evolution is the one whose function is no longer necessary. The statement made by Abraham Lincoln that this nation cannot continue half slave and half free, still stands good and is applicable to all. That question was not settled by arbitration; it involved material interests which could not be compromised. And the issue of today between the laboring and capitalist classes in like manner can never reach its solution through mutual agreements which inevitably disclose the impossibility of their observance. They are merely armed truces incidental to the progress of the class struggle.

The game laws of Colorado will be suspended in favor of Governor Roosevelt during his hunting tour, in that state. "Even should he take a shot at a deer," says the report, the act will only be regarded as a "breach of courtesy." Workmen who meditate going on strike in Colorado should postpone action until Teddy finishes his hunting tour. There are no "game laws" to prevent the capitalist from "taking a shot" at them by proxy. In such case the workers are considered "fair game," and Roosevelt has already a reputation as a "mighty hunter" in this field.

It is a strange superstition that makes men regard what THEY KNOW TO BE ELEMENTALLY GOOD as dangerous in practice, and what THEY KNOW TO BE ELEMENTALLY WRONG as practically SAFE. (By George D. Brown, a Whig and a Socialist.)

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

This general clamor over "municipal ownership" has a tendency to make some professed Socialists forget that the object of the Socialist movement is the abolition of the wage system.

"Public ownership of public utilities" in the mouth of the capitalist politician, has no meaning to the proletarian who feels the galling chains of wage slavery, and knows the only manner in which they can be broken. It is only a catch phrase, and the capitalist candidate who represents it as being a part of socialism is simply lying. To the latter, the "public" is the capitalist class alone. "Public ownership" of this sort, can exist along with wage slavery, and actually does in some countries at present.

Our present mayor who is now an avowed advocate of this brand of "public ownership," has been careful to explicitly declare that it involves not the slightest violation of the rights of private property—he doesn't add, "in the means of production and distribution"—but that is what he intends. And just for this reason Socialists regard the whole scheme with indifference.

The little capitalists may carry it out—if they can—but they need not look for the assistance of the militant proletarian, who knows that so far as his class is concerned, their conditions of life would not be perceptibly altered. When Socialists become the public—and they can only become so by acquiring the public powers—then, and not till then, will "public ownership" contain any Socialist meaning whatever.

There is something ludicrous in the efforts of the petty exploiters who feel lacking the necessary capital to attain this object, he becomes a suppliant-working class in their behalf. All their appeals are directed solely to the maintenance of existing conditions, a fact which even if it were possible, would certainly be undesirable from the point of view of any working man who is capable of thinking.

The ambition of the small capitalist is invariably to become a big one. Lacking the necessary capital to become this object, he becomes a suppliant to the workers for political aid. He calls upon them to notice his impotency, and often makes that very apparent fact a plea to induce them to work more cheaply so that he may be still able to compete with those better equipped than himself.

Owing to the skill, enterprise, intelligence and industry (and "abstinence") of the workmen of this country, another striking American success has been achieved. The newspapers point with pride to the fact that the records of visitors at the fashionable European resort known as Baden Baden, show that amongst the hordes of "idle rich" who infest that vicinity, exploiters of American nationality were numerically greater than those of any other nation. We American workmen are surely pre-eminent in "self-denial." We even feel proud of the fact that we can support more parasites than any other nation on the face of the globe, and the capitalist, preying knowing well our object, are always careful to tell us their whereabouts, so that we may rejoice accordingly.

Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, a writer of popular fiction, has been recently denouncing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which he referred to as an "appalling, awful, criminal, mistake." The abolition of any particular form of property has always evoked similar expressions from the owners of such property, and all that Mr. Smith has said regarding Mrs. Beecher Stowe's book has been repeated millions of times before without the slightest effect. If the overthrow of chattel slavery is still referred to in such terms, how will the abolition of wage slavery be regarded forty or fifty years after it has taken place? Probably there will be a few archaic survivals of the Hopkinson Smith type, who from time to time will publicly lament the good old times of competition and wage slavery. Their regrets will be about as effective to change matters as Smith's are now.

A Problematical Victory.

At last the "reformers" have scored a victory. The army canten has been abolished as a concession to the "good" people who find their pleasure in circulating the pleasures of others. This time the so-called "saloon element" in the neighborhood of military posts are elated over this latest move of the morality mongers, expecting, not without reason, that the trade formerly carried on by the canten will be diverted to their establishments. Already, however, the protests against the bill are coming in thick and fast. Military authorities predict that much more difficulty will be found in obtaining recruits for the army in consequence, and that desertions will become more numerous. If there is any truth in these forecasts it looks as if the "reformers' victory may be short-lived, when the increasing necessity of establishing a large standing army is taken into consideration.

The Thirty-third Ward Branch has rented Sherman Hall at 318 Commercial avenue, South Chicago, for meetings during the winter. A meeting will be held each Saturday night. Comrade Kline will speak at the first meeting, January 19th, on the subject, "The Effect of Uncertainty and Unsteady Employment."

A WORKINGMAN'S LETTER.

Comrade John Collins, Socialist Party Candidate for Mayor Accepts the Nomination.

Comrades of the Socialist Party:—In accepting the nomination of your convention for mayor in the approaching municipal election, I take the opportunity to state briefly my understanding of the obligations which devolve upon me through its acceptance.

The platform adopted by the Socialist party in the same convention which conferred this nomination upon me, I accept in its entirety, and shall, if elected, endeavor to enforce its provisions as far as possible.

The Socialist party is essentially the party of the wage working class and I, its nominee, am a wage worker. It stands alone in representing the material interests and aspirations of that class, and emphasizes the necessity of the political supremacy of the workers as the only means whereby its object, the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution can be secured to the workers, making possible the use and enjoyment of the full product of labor by those who perform that labor.

As a member for many years of a labor organization, I shall in the event of election, in all cases and at all times advocate and support the interests of organized labor when engaged in economic strife with the capitalist class, to the extreme limit of such power as I may possess.

Recognizing, however, that the development of capitalism constantly increases the difficulty of effecting economic organization of the working class, and in many branches of industry renders such organization impossible, I shall therefore aid and assist to the utmost the general body of wage workers in their struggles for better material conditions of life.

The Socialist movement is characterized by its frank avowal of the existence of a class struggle, unavoidable and inherent in the present economic system, upon which as a foundation the entire movement of the modern proletariat towards economic freedom is based. With whatever power I may be invested, I shall take advantage of every expression of this struggle, whether economic or political, to carry it nearer to its ultimate object—the complete supremacy of the working class—entailing the overthrow of the present capitalist system, and the establishment of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

The candidates of the various capitalist parties who may be nominated for the office for which you have selected me as your candidate, invariably regard the securing of such nomination as a tribute due to their superior merit as politicians. As a Socialist, I recognize that my nomination cannot be and is not regarded as such, either by those who conferred it upon me or by myself. I am merely your representative, your servant, whom you have chosen to do your will. Should our party be successful at the polls it will be incumbent upon me to see that the public administration is conducted in the interests of the working class, identifying as I do the public interests with those of the entire body of wage earners.

Finally, I recognize your mandate alone as a guide, and comprehend that I am subject to recall at your pleasure. My written resignation shall be placed in your hands previous to election, to hold or enforce, as you may think proper.

Fraternally,
John Collins.

The Herron Lectures.

Central Music Hall was packed again last Sunday by an enthusiastic and thoroughly sympathetic audience, who had gathered to hear the second of the series of Herron lectures, on the ethical aspect of socialism. The audience surpassed in size that of last Sunday week. We regret to say that lack of space this week makes it impossible to publish any large portion of Comrade Herron's lecture. The following excerpts touch the main points of the discourse:

But there is a still more revolutionary service which socialism is likely to render to the spiritual life, though it is not so obvious as the service of the co-operative ideal; and that is the deliverance of religion from the wage system of rewards and punishments. We have come again upon the identity of the economic and the spiritual life. Wherever we take a cross section of the whole human fact, we find the evil principle of the economic system to be the principle of the spiritual life, and the value of every kind of action. This is especially true in what we call religious activity, where our motives touch the law of water-work of immortality. The Christian teaching concerning rewards and punishments is the wage system of production and distribution carried over into the wage-slavery of the human soul. As the economic system in the wage-slavery of labor, so the church sustains itself by the wage-slavery of the spiritual life. As capitalist wages are paid by absorbing the economic output of labor, so the church increases its power by absorbing the spiritual output of faith. As by the wage-system capitalism impoverishes and debauches labor-power, so by its vicious standards of rewards and punishments the church impoverishes and debauches the soul of socialism, even in its materialistic stages, will bring up standards of ethical value that will at least spare us for spiritual decency and be worthy of manly respect.

Your slavery rests on your neighbors' ignorance. Give him a Workers' Call to help break your fetters.

Call postals are furnished in amounts over one dollar, yearlies for 40 cents, and half-yearlies for 20 cents. This offer does not hold good for the premiums.

Rev. H. W. Greenham, secretary of the Church Home and Hospital, at Orlando, Fla., sends us a renewal of his subscription for a weekly bundle of the Workers' Call.

Comrade Fred. Nary, of Rock Island, is still keeping eternally at it. Having disposed of his supply of postals bought a few weeks ago he orders another dollar's worth, splits on his hands and mixes in for another tussle with capitalism.

Comrade Stark, of Bowling Green, Ky., sends us a list of 110 names with the request that sample copies be sent to them. That is right, comrades; send us the names and then follow them up for subscriptions. You can always bag some game.

Comrade Lockwood of Sacramento, California, sends us a bunch of 14 subs and concludes his letter as follows: "With my hearty commendation to the Workers' Call for its sticking to the fundamental principles of scientific socialism, fearing not to test the class struggle," etc.

Comrade J. W. McFall, of Medford, Okla., chairman of the Socialist party for that territory, sends us a club of three subscribers and orders a supply of Call postals. Comrade McFall says: "I regret that I am unable to do more for the paper. I regard it as the best propaganda periodical extant."

The Socialist campaign never ends. The Socialist propagandist is a persistent, cold-blooded, remorseless animal—at least, that is what he ought to be. Go after them boys with rapier and bludgeon. Lifting in those subscriptions no matter how your victims squirm—they'll thank you for it by and by.

Says Comrade Allen of Palmer, Mass.: Enclosed find stamps to renew my subscription for a portion of the century. They say Chicago is the storm center. If so, make the wind whirl! Comrade Allen may rest assured that we are blowing harder than ever. If he doubts it, let him glance over this column.

Comrade Kraatz, of Evanston, renews his own subscription and sends in the name of a neighbor who wishes to read the Workers' Call during 1901. And this reminds us: If every comrade who renews his subscription would go out and get a neighbor for a partner, the number of Socialists in the country would increase handsomely.

Comrade Carl A. Carlson, of Kewanee, Ill., says: "I have received a number of copies of the Workers' Call from friends and I like it very much. Enclosed find 50 cents for 6 month sub. for myself and a friend." All of which leads us to remark: Never forget your friends, boys. Make them see the light just as clearly as you do.

Comrade J. C. Holzer, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who recently subscribed for the Call, writes us a letter of strong commendation and encouragement. Comrade Holzer is so well pleased with the organ of Chicago Socialists that he concludes his letter by asking: "What would be the cost of a complete file of the Workers' Call to October 1, 1900?"

Letters of commendation for the Workers' Call come thick and fast. Comrade Dowler of Longfellow, Tex., says: "Enclosed find 50 cents to renew my subscription to the Call—been reading your paper for past three months—think it is the best of the seven Socialist papers taken at this office. Endorse your views regarding unity. Keep up the good work—dump the obstructionists and play ball!"

Twenty-five members of the Socialist Educational Society, of Rockford, Ill., subscribe for the Workers' Call. Comrade Nervant writes encouragingly concerning the progress of socialism at Rockford. The Workers' Call would suggest that if all local and Socialist societies throughout the state would subscribe in a body to the party organ, it would prove a strong agent for holding the organization together and infusing the comrades with the right kind of class-conscious working zeal. Don't you think so?

Nay, nay, Comrade Rogers, you must not get piqued at your neighbor who says he is just as good a Socialist as you are, but who you say is in a somewhat "muddled" state, resulting from his having obtained his knowledge of socialism from reading certain "socialistic" publications. You should be patient with him. He is in a state of transition—merely cutting his teeth, one may say. Why not give him a little medicine to hasten the process. Make him subscribe to a paper which preaches straight-out, class-conscious, materialistic, revolutionary socialism. Give him a dose of the Workers' Call.

Are you still hustling for subscribers?

THE SHADOW OF FREEDOM.

Unreality of "Public Ownership" While Economic Class Rule Remains in Existence.

There is no surer way to secure the continual enslavement of a man or a class than to deceive them into thinking their slavery does not exist. Once they are hypnotized into this state of mind they are bound by far stronger chains than smith ever forged or jailer ever locked. This has long been the condition of the laborer. He has been deluded into thinking that freedom to change masters meant freedom from masters. In the same way he is deceived concerning the government under which he lives. With the coming of democratic and republican forms of government the laborers have been made to believe that they are their own rulers, not seeing that unless their minds are free they cannot govern themselves.

The result of this is that it is sometimes harder to make workmen realize that they are living under a class government in this country than in those nations where an hereditary nobility and executive are in power. Yet it is beginning to be understood in a fairly indefinite way that the present state and municipal bodies of America are controlled and exercised in the interest of the capitalist class. Many who see this however do not seem to be able to make the logical deduction from this that adding to the power and functions of such a government cannot help the laborers. Many persons who would never think of giving the Trans-Siberian railroad with its fares at less than a cent a mile as an example of a step toward socialism, although it is governmentally owned, and probably furnishes the best services for the money of any road in the world, will still demand that the present capitalist government of the United States nationalize our railways as a step toward socialism.

The error in this position lies in the fact that those so talking have allowed all that the capitalists have told them about the laborers being kings in this country and in some way think that national ownership would mean ownership by the laborers.

They do not see that to place additional power in the hands of a present government is to give greater weight to the instruments of oppression. Hence it is that the Socialists declare that if the laborers wish to receive any benefit from municipal or national ownership of any utility they must first gain possession of the government which is to own them. There is all the difference in the world between voting and working for a capitalist party for the purpose of securing municipal ownership, and working and voting for a Socialist party to secure the same apparent end. In the first case the laborers are but adding to the armory of their enemy; in the second they are gaining new weapons for their own defense.

This is why it is that even if there was any reason to believe that the Democrats were sincere in their demands for municipal ownership it would still be of no interest to the laborers to secure the enactment of such a measure while either of the old parties are in power. It would simply be the old farce of apparent freedom and actual slavery over again. But if the laborers will elect to power the Socialist party, the only laborers party in the field this spring, then they may be assured that not only will municipal ownership be secured, but that all the benefits that are obtainable from such ownership and operation will redound to the workers.

Must Be Met.

Comrades and Friends:—To carry on the campaign, we are in pressing need of money. The bills incurred for printing the petitions, calling of ward conventions, postage, etc., etc., and other urgent expenses, are still unpaid.

The many other expenses that will be necessary to carry on the work, the printing and distribution of literature, pamphlets, and other printed matter, cannot be done without money.

Now comrades you must respond, otherwise we cannot do this work. Hoping to hear from you in response, we are

Fraternally,
The Executive Committee.

That offer of ten, three month subs for a dollar is still good.

Federation Report

Shall Our Millions Go to London?

It is time the people of Chicago ceased furnishing millions of dollars to be carried to London, to install systems of railways there. The ten millions that Yerkes carried away might today be improving our own system were it not for the connivance and co-operation of our public officials who enable the corporations to prey upon the people morning, noon and night, and then, when they have amassed their millions, carry them away to form the basis of a fund with which to corrupt officials elsewhere that they may have a franchise to do a similar work.

Only a Change of Leeches.

And what of Chicago? A new combination of leeches to suck the life-blood out of labor comes here and stealthily crawls into the bed of privilege vacated by Yerkes, and are now vaccinated to fasten their fangs in their blood-sucking operation upon the sleeping people of this great city. The mayor has the power to prevent the wrong—what will he do? The aldermen have the power to prevent the wrong—what will they do? And, finally, the people have the power to prevent the wrong through the mayor and aldermen. What will the people do?

Our Opportunity Is Now.

We today have an opportunity such as will not come again be presented to the city. Will the people of Chicago stop this carrying away of vast millions in private hands? Or will they again extend the special privilege of preying upon the public for ten, twenty or thirty years more?

As to the River Tunnels.

When the tunnels of Chicago are lowered, they should be lowered with reference to being a part of the system for a downtown subway and should not be surrendered to the railways to enable them to mulct the city a few years hence. The city can afford to lower the tunnels a dozen times over rather than to make them the price or even a part of the price of the betrayal of the people of Chicago, the results of which will be felt for ten or twenty years or even a century to come. The one thing for the people of Chicago to do is to pass upon the franchise question by and of itself upon its own merits, without having it become involved with any other problem or problems whatever. Side issues of this kind are dragged in purely for dishonest and fraudulent purposes.

Keep Our Wealth at Home.

The Federation of Labor respectfully requests the street railway commission to lay this matter before the council in its real character and recommend a plan by which these millions of profit may in the future be used in the hands of the city for the improvement of its own service; for the building of a downtown subway, for the paying of fair wages to railroad employees, for the further extension of transportation privileges and for the enrichment of its own treasury, and no longer as a private snap, worth millions in the market, to enrich a few moneyed barons at the expense of the brain and brawn of the citizens of Chicago.

A Review of the Problem.

Seventh—Historically considered, the problem of public franchises, as it is termed, is the outgrowth of our industrial development. With the rise of our complicated industrial system—that is, the concentration of capital in a more economic production and distribution of wealth, there has developed an ever-growing class of dependent wage workers, who are generally propertyless, and on the other hand, a class of capitalists, who, from their position as controllers of the special privileges embracing the instruments of production and distribution, have the community as a whole to a large degree under their Growth of the System.

But concomitant with this development in industry and the consequent concentration of population in industrial and commercial centers, new powers have been born to society. The phenomenal growth of urban life has made necessary a system of transnational transportation. The old lumbering omnibus, often individually owned, has had to give way to our modern and more economical car systems; animal power, likewise, to the more efficient, operated from a central power Necessity for Public Control.

The self-evident social character of the service can no longer be concealed. In the early days of our industrial life we delighted the nation with our services to private corporations and individuals. We vested the rights of the people to all the public in the hands of a few, and who have used the power that money commands to enrich themselves at the expense of the people to their own private profit and a corresponding public loss.

The Usurpation of Special Privileges.

By the common law, the bulwark of Anglo-Saxon liberty, all highways belong to the body politic. And it has only been by the grant of our public officials that have been established by public law virtually to put a toll-gate on every public roadway and then, like the highwayman of old step every man, woman and child who passes and take it. "Stand and deliver!" "What does your name?" "Stand and deliver!" "What does your name?" "Stand and deliver!" "What does your name?"

But none of the petty robberies of order the over large. I possessing the highways with that they are used to the benefit of the people in America. We have licensed the tollmen and the Jack Tutors and they have extorted in honor what the ancient robber extorted at his peril.

Importance of Action Now.

By the reversion of the franchises to the city, Chicago now has an opportunity to retain on behalf of the whole people their legal title in these franchises. They should never again be alienated. On the contrary, because of their self-evident social character, these public functions now delegated to private enterprise should from time to time be reassured by the municipality.

Chicago's Opportunity

Chicago will then lead the world as a city where the common heritage of all the people is sacredly maintained for the benefit of all.

Minor Details Merely Divert Attention.

Taking up any other phase of the question would tend to distract the attention from the fundamental and only question in which the body of people are interested, and we, therefore, decline to enter upon a discussion of them, insisting that the rights of the people shall be protected at this time by retaining what the law regards as the city and the people, and not creating new "vested rights" with the privilege of public extension for fifty years, twenty years, or any other period of time. It matters not what the privilege of extension and license to rob is paid for or not.

We believe that the proposition herein contained would, if submitted to a formal referendum of the people, result in an overwhelming endorsement. The referendum is an effective check against abuses of trust on the part of public representatives and an equally effective power for and in which the people by this means are enabled to give legal expression to their will.

Respectfully submitted,
CHICAGO FEDERATION OF LABOR,

THE PEOPLE'S MARX

THE PEOPLE'S MARX from the pen of Gabriel Deville and in the translation of Robert Rives La Monte, presents to the English-speaking Socialists the most excellent and successful epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital." This luminous epitome, from the last and seventeenth French edition, is issued in the style in every way characteristic of the publications of the INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

The Haverhill Social Democrat, remarks on The People's Marx as:

The Bible of the working class, a Bible whose study is as beneficial to the workman as is the orthodox Bible to the average Christian.

OTHER OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

The New York People on The People's Marx: Mr. B. O. Flower, in The Arena:

Deville, in this abridgement and popularization of one of the profoundest and one of the most difficult economic works ever undertaken, has succeeded admirably in this respect: That he has held close to the outlines of the original work, has preserved its essentials of form as well as of matter, but has considerably reduced its size, and to a very great extent has simplified it and brought it within the understanding of the ordinary reader.

The price of The People's Marx is: one dollar and a half in cloth; seventy-five cents in paper. With order sent in before the 1st of March we will give as premium a cloth copy of the Silver Cross, (price 50c.), with $1.50 edition; or, a copy of the Civil War in France, (price 35c.), with the paper edition.

SOCIALIST REVIEW

This is the only periodical in the English language reckoning among its contributors all the great Socialist writers of the world. Among those whose writings have appeared in its columns in the last seven months are Charles H. Vail, Leonard D. Abbott, W. T. Brown, H. M. Hyndman, Paul Lafargue, E. V. Debs, Job Harriman, Ernest Crosby and Emile Vaaderveide, while Edwin Markham, Kier Hardie, Rev. T. McGrady and Jane Adams have promised articles.

PROF. GEORGE D. HERRON conducts a department each month on SOCIALISM AND RELIGION, containing matter of great interest and value to all students of social questions. It is the only instance in the history of Socialist literature where a regular department was conducted upon this subject by a man who combines such rare natural talents with a thorough knowledge of the literature and doctrines of both Religion and Socialism.

MAX B. HAYES, equally well-known as a writer and speaker in both the Socialist and trade union movement, edits a department on THE LABOR WORLD. This consists of a thorough summary of the happenings in the field of organized labor, with descriptions of the more important mechanical and industrial changes of each month.

The department on SOCIALISM ABROAD is infinitely superior to anything of the kind ever attempted in the English language. In addition to a full and able corps of foreign correspondents, several Socialist dailies of Europe are subscribed for and nearly all the important weeklies and monthlies are received on exchange and made use of in its preparation. With the mass of interesting things that foreign Socialists are now doing, no one who is at all interested in socialism can afford not to read this department.

The department of BOOK REVIEWS is edited with the special aim of making it a continuous and complete compendium of the wealth of material in current literature that is of interest to Socialists. The regular EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT is conducted by the general editor, A. M. SIMONS, who discusses topics of current interest in the light of the Socialist philosophy. An interesting phase is a financial summary of the month, giving the facts as to prices, wages, bankruptcies, financial consolidations and general trade movements that are of interest to Socialists, but which have hitherto been buried in trade and financial journals and inaccessible to the average reader.

With the issue for March, 1901, the SIZE WILL BE INCREASED from sixty-four to EIGHTY pages and an INTENSELY INTERESTING story will be begun to run through several numbers. This story will be of a literary value to accord with the high standard maintained by the remainder of the publication. While written from a Socialist point of view it does not attempt to be an economic treatise, and the literary merit and entrancing plot will gain for it a prominent place among the romances of the year.

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW is the most complete expression of the Socialist movement ever attempted and no student of socialism, favorable or hostile, can keep informed upon the subject without reading its columns.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, single copies 10 cents; no free samples. For twelve one-cent stamps we will mail a copy of the REVIEW and PROF. HERRON'S booklet "Why I Am a Socialist." FATHER MCGRADY'S new 50-cent novel mailed free if you send $1.00 for the REVIEW at once.

PRICE ONE CENT

A TRIBUTE OF ENVY

Capitalist "Democracy" Alarmed for the Future.

SOCIALISM IS NOW A MENACE.

Its "Intolerant" Adherence Repulse the Political Advance of "Good Democrats."

Perhaps the most accurate measure of the progress made by the Socialist movement within the last few years is to be found in the venomous strictures passed upon its advocates by the Bourgeois capitalist press, that decaying and disintegrating portion of the labor class, who find that exploitation can no longer be successfully carried on under the old shibboleths, but must perform ever become more naked and unshamed.

Consequently when the decrepit Chicago Chronicle in a lengthy and foolish editorial of January 15th, attempts to refurbish the stale and mildewed political duties of the Democratic party, known as "time-honored principles," and in the process pours out its vials of impotent wrath upon individual Socialists, and a "socialism" evolved entirely out of the ignorance of duplicity of its hired scribe, it unwittingly testifies to the strides made by the working class movement, which can be measured inversely by the amount of vituperation launched against it. As to the futile spite manifested in this production the Socialist can say "Let the galled jade wince."

The Chronicle endeavors to show that Mr. Bryan went much farther than any Democratic candidate should do, to "please the Socialists," and partially ascribes his defeat to this alleged attempt. Then follows an assertion that "democracy" and socialism are utterly antagonistic, a statement, which, keeping in mind the nature of the "democracy" championed by the Chronicle, will be admitted to the full by every Socialist. Then the usual lay figure labeled "socialism" is set up and pelted with chunks of political wisdom of the vintage of 1800. The dummy is then removed and a eulogy of democratic "principles" follows, in which it is asserted that every step in the "wonderful progress of the great republic" was due to a rigid adherence to those "principles." All the evils existing in the republic are to be attributed to socialism, with which an attempt is made to identify the Republican party. Democracy, it is stated, insists upon a return to "first principles, leaving the individual unhampered by laws devised in the interests of others." The dead and gone Democrats who announced these "principles" are stated to have known more of human nature than any Socialist that ever lived. They knew that socialism was an "exploded fallacy" when the foundations of this government were laid, and after examining all its claims rejected them as "at war with the progress of human society." The ignorance and arrogance of the Socialists is then rebuked in scathing terms, the last and heaviest indictment in the count being that no "Democrat" will be accepted in the Socialist ranks unless he becomes a Socialist—a rank is clear proof of the political narrowness and intolerance of the latter. Taken altogether this ridiculous production is as suggestive of the mental as of the political bankruptcy of the fossilized "democracy" for which the Chronicle stands sponsor.

To state that Mr. Bryan endeavored to "please the Socialists" during his race for the presidency is to do both that gentleman and the Socialists a flagrant injustice. Mr. Bryan, when asked point-blank, if he was a Socialist, answered with an unqualified negative, although the Chronicle did not consider it necessary to dilate upon this matter to any extent in its columns. On the contrary, it preserved silence upon that point, knowing perfectly well that an indistinct impression obtained amongst working class voters that Mr. Bryan was more or less of a Socialist. It would never do to annihilate an impression that might result in a large number of votes. But the Socialist papers, without exception, gave the matter the widest possible circulation, publishing Mr. Bryan's own letter upon the subject, upon every possible occasion.

The Chronicle makes the mistake of supposing that, like the other dupes of capitalism, the Socialists want to be "pleased," and that they hang upon the utterances of capitalist politicians as if political salvation was expected from that source. If Mr. Bryan had been more "radical" he might or might not have secured more votes, but his radicalism or lack of it was and is regarded by Socialists with absolute indifference.

"Democracy" of the Chronicle stripe, is declared to be irreconcilable with "socialism"—also of the Chronicle stripe—which it endeavors to identify with the Republican party. The latter, as is well known, invariably uses for the same charge against the Democrats "Where," says Karl Marx in the 'Manifesto,' 'where is the party in opposition, that has not been decried as communistic by the party in power? where the opposition, that has not been hurled back the branding reproach of communism, against the more advanced opposition parties, as well as against its reactionary adversaries?' Long ago Socialists have arrived at the conclusion that socialism is antagonistic to both.

The "unhampered individual" which the Chronicle says is a product of "first principles," flourishes at present mostly in the Republican party, and is there known as a great capitalist, financier, magnate, plutocrat, or other term of like significance. When "laws were devised in the interest of others," these parties always took good care to be amongst the "others," just for the reason that they were "unhampered" and could get there. The dummy "Socialist" who figured in the editorial columns of capitalist journals is often represented as saying: "Let us all divide up and start fair again." It would seem as if the Chronicle type of "democracy" is willing to appropriate the fantastic garb of its own special "Socialist" marionette. If the Democrats who announced these "first principles" examined every claim that could be put forward in behalf of socialism and rejected them, as the Chronicle says they did, they certainly overlooked the fact that the operation of the "principles" would develop an "unhampered individual" who would ultimately negate them and become "socialistic" (in the Chronicle sense of the word), just because he was "unhampered."

The authors of these first principles "rejected" socialism for the same reason that they "rejected" the doctrine of evolution, the electric telegraph, the telephone, and the X rays. Their ignorance of socialism acquits them of responsibility—the ignorance of the Chronicle (whether real or pretended), upon the same subject, is nothing short of criminal.

But what the Chronicle does know perfectly well and is too cowardly and cunning to declare openly, is that these "first principles" are based entirely upon the right of private property in the means of production and distribution, and that it was to acquire "property" mainly, that the individual was to be left "unhampered." It knows well enough that laws always were, and are now, not evolved from abstract principles, but from the material and economic interests of a dominant class. It is by no means wonderful that the Socialist should appear "arrogant" to the advocates of a philosophy which has wrought its own negation, and which the latter are too ignorant to perceive. There is no doubt but that the astrologer referred to his successor the astronomer, as a very overbearing individual, but his complaint was impotent to rehabilitate the lost virtues of the sign, sign and horoscope, notwithstanding the undoubted fact that astrology had, like capitalism, a more or less successful existence for centuries, to quote the words of the Chronicle.

As for the intolerance displayed by Socialists in debarring from their movement "good Democrats" who are "willing to please," even though the latter approach the arrogant ones in an "honest, manly, and open" manner, it is probable that this policy will be adhered to, at least until "human nature is changed." But why should not the Democratic party, or rather, that wing of it represented by the Chronicle, set us an example of liberality in this respect? Let them approach the Bryan faction in the same manner, and we will regulate our future political hospitality by the reception accorded them there.

In devoting its editorial columns to the discussion of what it is pleased to term "socialism," the Chronicle unwittingly pays a tribute to the growth of the real movement, and at the same time exposes its dread of the economic future, and the unadmitted capitalism for which it has decided to stand, when the inevitable issue becomes distinct. If the farthing it represents is successful in "reorganizing," a few more years of a dummy capitalist party may be expected. If not, a "radical" party will take its place, and the advocates of "first principles" will sneak into the Republican camp, assured that if they are "willing to please," the latter will be less scrupulous about their admission than the Socialists. This they did partially in the last election, and are now preparing in case of failure, to make the exodus complete. In that temple of advanced capitalism they can readily bury their political deities and worn-out "first principles," and go in for whatever exploitation may fall to their share in the general plunder of the working class. The capitalist hon may, perhaps, need the services of a Jackal in the near future.

A German philosopher once cynically referred to an acquaintance as "a young man with a promising past." No better description (young excluded), could be given of the "democracy" represented by the Chronicle, with its stale and shop-worn political shibboleths and its continual harking back to the discredited and antiquated philoso-

"RIGHTEOUS" WRATH

A "Good Man's" Protest Against the Coming of Socialism.

"TRAMPS AND BUSYBODIES."

Cheering of Socialist Lecturer Moves a Sanctimonious Capitalist to Angry Abuse.

The cheering which greeted Geo. D. Herron's statement in Central Music Hall last Sunday, to the effect that socialism is coming, without regard to our liking, has evidently stirred up the ire of that valiant champion of the sweatshop, John V. Farwell, who thanks that socialism is not coming because he doesn't like it. In a spiteful letter to the Chicago Record of January 21st, he scores the audience for their appreciation of the lecturer's remarks by stating that the communism of the early church didn't extend to "tramps and busybodies," which shows that the scriptural knowledge even of a Sunday school superintendent has its limits.

If we remember rightly the parties that Christ sent out to proclaim his gospel were instructed not to take purse or scrip, more than one pair of shoes or one coat, and go into all the world with their message, relying upon the world for their entertainment and support. It would seem that individuals carrying out these instructions might without any particular straining of language, be called "tramps," and doubtless the Farwells of that day did not scruple to designate them as such, or its equivalent, in whatever language they might happen to use. As for the "busybodies," if Mr. Farwell will open his testament at the Acts of the Apostles, he will find the following applied to the communistic Christians even before they had left Jerusalem. "They that have turned the world upside down have also come hither," a clear proof that the respectable, law-abiding citizens of that time did regard Christ's followers as obnoxious meddlers and upstarters of old-established frauds and superstitions by which they profited, just as Mr. Farwell profits by the maintenance of the present order of things.

There were, however, some who were excluded from the Christian fraternity of those days, and we find them variously described as "Pharisees and hypocrites," highly respectable people who "demurred widow's houses and for a pretense made long prayers," gentlemen who blew trumpets in the market place when they gave "alms," and thanked the Lord that they were not sinners like the other fellow. These early Christians indeed seemed, rather particular as to admission into their membership, rigorously excluding all who did not come up to the required specifications. Those who didn't want to assist them in "turning the world upside down" had to business in the community. On the whole, it is questionable if Mr. Farwell himself would not have been blackballed, had he attempted to break into the new society.

It is even related as an instance of the severity of these people, that upon one occasion two converts got themselves into very serious trouble with the community for the trivial offense of returning a false schedule of their property, which "handed property" members and swearing thereto. Even the harmless, necessary capitalist (tax-dodger would have fared badly at the hands of these zealots).

Mr. Farwell doesn't like any mention of the class struggle, and fantasized the defeat of Bryan as the result of pitting one class of citizens against another. He states further that the victorious candidate proclaimed himself "as the representative" and servant of all classes, an assertion which if true, demonstrates that William McKinley possesses ability in a certain direction, of which, according to popular tradition, George Washington was deprived.

It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a man of the Farwell type to see anything outside of the material interests of his class, and neither Dr. Herron nor any other Socialist is surprised that this should be so. If Mr. Farwell doesn't like Dr. Herron's new church, he is at perfect liberty to stay outside—where the waiting and knocking of teeth will shortly be in full blast. And seeing that Mr. Farwell has already commenced this performance, all Socialists will listen with pleasure to his efforts and never grudge him an encore.

The ticket of the United Socialists of Chicago, headed by John Collins, will go on the ballot this spring under the name SOCIALIST PARTY. Comrades should make it a point to impress this on Socialist voters not affiliated with the party. The Socialist Labor party and the Social Democratic party have nominated tickets, but the United Socialist ticket will be headed by the words SOCIALIST PARTY.

Wages in Siam and in the United States Contrasted.

A CONSUL GENERAL'S REPORT.

Siamese Laborer Is Deprived of Everything That He Could Not Possibly Use.

The consul general at Bangkok, Siam, has been adding his mite to help along the pleasant delusion that the American laborer is vastly better off than the laborer of any other country. He cites the daily wages of Siamese workmen as between 25 and 50 cents per day, and then gives a list of prices of certain articles of food in Siam, which, if considered as "necessaries," would prove that the Siamese laborer was bound to perish of hunger in a week or so. Turkeys, bacon, butter, lard, coffee, canned goods, mutton and sugar, are mentioned at prices absolutely prohibitive to the Siamese laborer. The question then arises: how does the latter manage to exist at all?

The consul tells us further on. The Siamese laborer eats rice, fish, eggs, (which are said to be cheap), and simple vegetables. The other things he never gets, and the reader is left to infer that he wants them badly. We are further asked to commiserate his unhappy lot by learning that his only clothing is a loin cloth, that he has to eat his meals without a knife, fork or spoon, that he must sleep on a grass mat in a rough bamboo house, which does not (and this last is a terrible deprivation in the tropics), contain a stove.

As this stuff appears in the capitalist press, it has all the appearance of truth to the unwary reader. When the whole facts are known, however, the deductions which are left to be inferred from it are entirely false. European or American foods are not consumed by the Siamese laborer, for the reason that he does not require them. His clothing and bamboo house are adapted to his needs and to the climate of the country, and knives, forks and spoons are instruments that he has no more need than we need chop sticks in the United States. Like every other wage worker on the face of the earth, he gets the cost of his production on the average. It is safe to say, however, that he gets a far larger proportion of the wealth which he creates, than does the American laborer, but that comparison the consul, with true capitalist wisdom, does not venture to touch upon.

The "Idle Rich" as a Shield.

It will be consoling to the little capitalist who have been hurled into bankruptcy by the machinations of a Standard Oil company, to know that Mr. Rockefeller's daughter was married unceremoniously and without extravagance, and that his course in so doing has received the hearty commendation of the capitalist press. It would seem that capitalism is looking forward to the time when it may be forced to use the "idle rich" as a buffer against popular discontent, just as Uncle Russell Sage utilized his clerk as a shield to protect himself against the Anarchist's bomb. However, the Socialist knows that it is not so much the idleness of the capitalist as it is his greed and industry that is responsible for the hellish social conditions that prevail today. They are not so concerned as to how the capitalist disposes of the wealth extracted from labor. The question by which he extracts it is the question in which Socialists are most interested.

A Phantom Umpire.

In presenting the merits of "compulsory arbitration" as practiced in New Zealand, its advocate, Mr. Lusk, was careful to set off the recent conference at Steinway Hall, that "the conditions" existing in New Zealand were favorable to the operation of this law.

In discussing this question with some of the converts to the theory of "compulsory arbitration," it was asked whether similar conditions exist in the United States which would make the application of the "New Zealand plan" possible. To this inquiry we have never yet received an answer; the advocates of "compulsory arbitration" generally preferring to base their argument upon the assertion that this law should be put in operation because the "public" is inconvenienced by the constant disagreements between capitalists and laborers, and that their interests are more worthy of consideration than those of the two parties directly engaged in the dispute.

Let us see now who this "public" is, and whether it can be considered an impartial judge. Is it not true that as a whole the public must and do take one side or the other? Do not the great and small business men of all kinds and as a rule their direct employees who imagine their interests are the same as their bosses, take the side of the capitalist in these cases? And do not the laborers, especially those organized in unions and those whose employment is precarious generally advocate the cause of the strikers, even when they are inconvenienced by the strike? It is not difficult to see that in reality this "public" must take one side or the other in such controversies.

Let us take, for instance, any particular group of laborers who have a grievance which the employer refuses to redress. They go on strike and defy the man who gives them permission to live. They have wives and families who look to them for bread, meat, clothing, etc. Is it reasonable to suppose that they will resign themselves to inaction because they are told that there is a "public" who must not be inconvenienced, and that they should therefore starve quietly?

The "public" is in reality a bogeyman created by the capitalist press, a mere subterfuge used to excite enthusiasm for any measure which the capitalist class desire, or to destroy it, as the case may be.

The striking laborers correctly consider their wants of more importance than the alleged inconvenience which their action is said to impose upon this fictitious public. Their instincts are as true as those of Vanderbilt, who consigned this phantom to damnation when asked to consider its interests.

No third party labeled "public" exists which stands in an impartial attitude towards the conflicts between laborers and capitalists. The class struggle leaves no residue outside its influence. It involves all society. There is no room for arbitration, compulsory or otherwise, while it rages, as the union men will ultimately discover. If these present demands were conceded it would only stimulate further demands, and just because the capitalist recognizes this, he stubbornly opposes any concession. The militant Socialist knows that there is not and cannot be any permanent middle ground upon which exploiter and exploited can meet in harmony, and never ceases to point out the folly of arbitration in consequence.

The Campaign Fund.

Comrades and Friends:—In response to the call for campaign funds, up to the present no substantial returns have been received.

The fact is now clear that the coming campaign will be carried on from the capitalist side in a most deceptive manner.

The Republican press, representing the large capitalists, being assured of their certain triumph, now claim that ANTIMAN, irrespective of party affiliations, so long as he is the proper candidate—is their candidate—be he Republican or Democrat.

An effort will be made to show that "municipal ownership" is the issue—twenty years from now. We want to discuss the ISSUE OF THE DAY—right now.

To do so properly, that is to carry on a campaign, MONEY IS NEEDED, and YOU WHO BELIEVE IN SOCIALISM must furnish it. Otherwise the campaign cannot be conducted.

Waiting to hear from you promptly, we remain

Fraternally,
The Executive Committee,
Per. H. A. Morris.

Attention, Socialists!

Notice! At the Workers' Call Ball held recently in Brand's hall, a few of the wives and daughters of our Socialist members prepared an excellent supper, which, besides the satisfaction and pleasure it gave to those who partook of it, netted some $20 for the Workers' Call.

Our comrades now propose to arrange an entertainment for the purpose of affording the Socialists a pleasant gathering, and again rendering financial assistance to the Workers' Call. For this purpose a meeting of all wives, daughters, sisters, mothers and friends of Socialists will be held at 33 N. Wells street, on January 28th at 8 P. M.

In publishing this announcement, the management of the Workers' Call takes this opportunity to acknowledge the receipt of the money above mentioned as the proceeds of the supper at Brand's hall, and wish to thank heartily each and every one who assisted therein in any manner whatever. Our co-operation in the future efforts of our lady comrades to aid this paper and the Socialist movement, is assured.

Don't worry about union: as the rank and file favor union, it is only a question of time.

Wouldn't it be a refreshing change if you could elect a Socialist alderman from your ward this spring?

If the workmen can be induced to read the Socialist doctrine we can elect the next president of the United States.

The way the New Jersey comrades are doing business it looks as if the octopus was to be given a run in his home country.

The thing for Chicago to do this spring is roll up a Socialist vote that will make the other cities ashamed of themselves.

Eternal truth is bound to win if you keep shoving it under a man's nose. It is the constant pounding away that makes Socialists.

It doesn't look quite fair to increase the pay of congressmen at a time when the wages of all other trust employees are being cut down.

The capitalists ought to be pointing out about this time that no workingman has a right to kick as long as he can get a job cutting ice.

You can just bet your old hat that Carnegie will not die rich if he postpones his dying until after the Socialists are in control of the world.

It would certainly be ungrateful on the part of the children of workingmen to cry for bread while their fathers were out working for municipal ownership.

California and Florida winter resorts are crowded as never before, but who can blame the workingmen for taking advantage of property for a winter jaunt?

The banker who has a fit every time he thinks about the single tax theories probably would not be able to sleep nights if someone should tell him about socialism.

Does the workingman realize that it is as important that his candidate should bear the union label as that his cigars and his shoes should be so adorned?

A ticket to the Dunning insane asylum will be given as a premium for the best reason why a workingman should vote for a business-man's candidate for mayor.

Of course you cannot legislate brains into the heads of the workingman, but if he would only use those he has you could no longer legislate dollars out of his pockets.

When workmen understand socialism it is not necessary to bribe them with cigars or beer to vote for it, neither can they be bought with money to vote against it.

If 1,000 Socialists would resolve to send in one subscriber a week, they could double the usefulness of the Workers' Call in a few weeks. Will you be one of the thousand?

The fact that a new Socialist paper is started somewhere about every week probably means that socialism is an idle dream and that the present order of things will continue forever.

Probably the reason the Belgian Hare receives better treatment than the average workingman's children, is that the hare uses his brains and takes advantage of his opportunities.

The real campaign against vice, which has for its object the complete overthrow of the capitalist system, is not receiving any considerable amount of attention.

Does it the way to think? If so, don't let the capitalist class know you are tired.

"THESE BE THEY GODS, O HEBRAE!"

No opportunity is ever neglected by the capitalist press to incite the idea that human progress depends upon the existence of a few individuals who are either, to slightly alter a well-known phrase, "born great, achieved greatness or have had greatness thrust upon them." The obituary notices of the aged woman who no longer served as a figurehead for the British nation, afford an excellent opportunity for exploiting this characteristic of capitalism to the utmost. And the opportunity is not neglected. Upon every hand we hear Victoria spoken of as a "ruler" to whom the destinies of the British Empire were mainly entrusted; and, who more than any other person, guided and shaped the course to be pursued by between three and four hundred million human beings. The journalists who pen this stuff and paucity, are not so ignorant as not to understand the complete sham that underlies all these rapid outpourings, but their business is business and men must live somehow.

With the character of any particular individual the capitalist is not specially concerned. For the aged lady who has just passed away he has neither praise nor blame. Attacks upon monarchy as such, he may well leave to those who worship particular forms of capitalist government. The only criticism that may be justly made, centers upon the fact that the upholders of all forms of capitalist government, republican or monarchical, invariably attach an undue importance to individuals, endowing them with powers which rightly belong to organized society—such as it is. In the present case, this characteristic has been pushed to the extreme verge of silliness.

During the illness of Victoria, we were informed that her death would mean an "incomparable disaster" to Great Britain. Now that that event has occurred, are there in reality any more signs of "disaster" now, that did not exist a week ago, or, if so, how can they be attributed to her decease. Is it not strange that no word was heard of this anticipated calamity until her death was almost certain? We have never heard that the British government were preparing for extraordinary afflictions to ensue through the death of the queen, and yet they must have known, in the natural order of things, that this event was not far off.

In order to belter up this false impression of individual importance another must be invented which will serve as a complement to the first. The nation is described as being "plunged in agonies of grief" over its bereavement. Now, it may be admitted that while this mental state might be partly descriptive of the feelings of the nearest relatives of the deceased monarch, and to a lesser extent of a group of intimate acquaintances. It is, when applied to the general body of the people, an exaggeration that is nothing short of falsehood. There are possibly some individuals who regard the matter with absolute indifference, and possibly a few may be found who exhibit a brutal and foolish satisfaction about it, but the great bulk of the English people, while conventionally expressing sorrow, is really not at all affected. To describe this state as an "agonies of grief" would appear ridiculous to all, were it not that the narrative of capitalism have saturated the world with unconscious hypocrisy.

It is not, however, our intention to deny that no sign of grief is to be attached to the death of individuals. That the American nation was more deeply affected by the death of Abraham Lincoln than the British nation is by the death of the Queen, will, we think, be universally admitted. The assassinated president took vastly more part in national affairs than Victoria, and yet history has shown that he was by no means indispensable, and to describe his taking off as an "incomparable disaster" would far exceed the limits of actual truth. How much more untrue such a statement becomes when applied to a comparatively negative sort of individual we leave to our readers to judge.

The ostensible "ruler" of Britain was not responsible for any particular event for either the good or evil which befell the country during her reign. The real ruling class, however, see that their interests in in pretending otherwise, and consequently "agonies of grief" are invented to corroborate the pretence.

The capitalist class understand thoroughly that when society is in a state of anarchy, their interests are imperiled, and they draw to a close. They therefore select some political or legal representative of their interests and invest him or her with the shadow of their own power, at the same time calling attention to the excellencies which it suits them to pretend that it contains. A blind unthinking homage to the individual is inculcated under cover of which the robbery of the working class goes merrily forward. And this delusion is as audaciously fostered in republican America as in monarchical England, and for exactly the same object in each.

THE TWO "DEMOCRACIES"

Not so long ago the henchmen of the capitalist party at parties were wont to allude to socialism as a foreign importation which could never take root upon American soil, and as the working class of this country were carefully trained to view everything outside of the boundaries of the United States as distinctly inferior this assertion was found useful in strengthening the barricade of national prejudice behind which the exploitation of the "home market" could be perfected. During this period the affairs of foreign nations were considered as having little or no bearing upon matters political in this country, and it may perhaps be admitted that this view was on the whole fairly correct.

But as was inevitable, this period was destined to pass away, when the home market, no longer afforded sufficient scope for the growth of capitalist enterprise. There was a world outside whose markets were open to capture by the potent weapon of cheapness in production.

Our "captains of industry" were forced by economic necessity to mingle in the great world-wide commercial struggle, the economic and political institutions of our possible rivals and customers at once became an object worthy of study, and our own economists and politicians immediately discovered that some "foreign" phenomena which heretofore they were able to dismiss with a few contemptuous remarks were in reality matters for serious consideration.

A survey of things political in Europe showed them that an idea of "democracy" existed in many European countries, which was by no means based upon phrases and abstractions, and which differed completely from the thing known by the same name in their own land, which had recently gone down in defeat before the opposition capitalist party. In the attempt to reorganize and rally the broken ranks, they found that "democracy" of the despised European type had already taken root and was spreading to an alarming extent in the very land where they had constantly insisted that it could find no place. They made the discovery that socialism and "democracy" were synonymous terms in Europe, and a well-founded fear that similar tendencies exist here, now brings forth a cry of alarm strangely unlike the confident tone of assurance with which a few short years ago they asserted that socialism had no future in America.

So serious appears the outlook that the would-be reorganizers of capitalist "democracy" at least confess that the question of whether the Democratic party will return to so-called "first principles" or become avowedly "socialist" like the democracy of Europe, must be settled within the next few years. They claim and rightly so, that the question of the reorganization of the Democratic party is of as much importance to Republicans as to Democrats, which is only a roundabout method of saying that the interests of all capitalists as against the working class are alike.

One looking at the situation and thing is at least certain, viz: that the existing state of affairs in Europe is no longer possible and will perfectly natural, the weaker king of political capitalism has been first to make the appeal. As it still appears, however, that the "principles" upon which capitalist "democracy" relies are invincible against socialism, we await with confidence their appearance in the intellectual arena, certain that their advocates instead of rehabilitating them, will in reality prepare their shroud.

Another "Trust" Remedy.

It seems that the theatrical trust is still in its preliminary stages and is yet amenable to discipline when properly applied. This is how Mrs. Fisk, a prominent actress, deals with the immature monster, when it becomes troublesome.

"I have invariably been silent with regard to my most abhorrent personal experiences with the trust and with those New York newspapers which are devoted exclusively to the interests of the trust. The publication of my knowledge of the LOW AND VILLAGER ACTS of the organization could be infinitely detrimental to me. When the TRUST BECOMES TOO IMPUDENT as in its recent attempt to prevent me from appearing in the (City of Denver), MY HUSBAND AND I MINISTERS A REPRISAL. Apart from these occasional outbursts, there is nothing in my stage life which serves to remind me of the existence of the six pulling, pushing, industrious little Hebrews who constitute the trust.

But the cub is still growing, and "how to sign of reform. Those 'low and vulgar acts' which annoy Mrs. Fisk so much, are necessary to secure adequate returns for the capital invested in 'art' by the 'six little Hebrews' and Mrs. Fisk may rest assured that she will beat more regularly and more often from them in the future. 'All the world's a stage,' and is therefore the lawful prey of the 'octopus.' It is safe to predict that about a year from now Mr. Fisk's 'reprimand' will be considerably below par.

A Trained Performer.

It is said that the late E. D. Armour knew the value of an animal as well, if not better, than any other man in Chicago, but of all the thousands which he bought, both tamed and untamed, he never made a better investment than the purchase of the poodle who gave utterance to the following snarl at the Merchants' Club in the Grand Pacific Hotel, on last Saturday evening.

"Seeds of ANARCHY are sown in the school yard, and there is no moving time provided for the masses they will meet in the schools. We will never meet these people until we meet them in the large hall of the schoolhouse. There democracy will strangle SOCIALISM."

The "ass knoweth his master's crib" and that is about the limit of his knowledge, but the well-trained spaniel often develops an intelligence that is positively startling.

Irish Socialist Organ.

We learn that the newly formed "Workers' Publishing Company" have taken over the business of printing and publishing the Workers' Republic, the official organ of the Irish Socialist Republican party. For some time back the journal in question has been produced by the voluntary labor of the members of the Dublin branch of that body, and has in consequence appeared after a somewhat irregular fashion, but it is now established on a strictly business basis, and will, we understand, be published regularly on the first Saturday of every month.

It will be a twelve-page paper, and each issue will contain besides its usual features, a complete work on socialism which will afterwards be published in pamphlet form. The price of the paper will be one penny per copy, or two shillings per annum, post free to any part of the Postal Union. Address, 107 Upper Abbey street, Dublin, Ireland.

A Blessed Vision.

There were two of them says the Record of January 22, and this is what brought them there:

"There were two great audiences at the Illinois theatre last night. Society, comprising only, gathered to see Sarah Bernhardt at the opening of her two weeks' engagement; those on the sidewalk composing the other, gathered to see society and catch the glimpse of Bernhardt and the flame of the rainbow as they trailed from its cartilage into the theatre."

Let us but fast our eyes on "society" (from the sidewalk) and we ask for nothing more.

Another plan for the reorganization of humanity has come to grief. The Chicago League of Chicago organized in 1917, for the purpose of straightening out some of the unfriendly links in our social system by the suppression of the sale of liquor to minors, has decided to surrender its charter and go out of the reform business. The reasons for this action are said to be lack of interest in "the work" among citizens of Chicago, and that the active members of the league have grown old in "the work" and are no longer able to "fight its battles." Verily, the capitalist class is dotted with the floating derelicts of bourgeois reforms.

Some of the ward branches have established a regular system of selling Workers' Call postals. This is the most important work a branch can do. If your branch is not already disposing of its quota of Call postals, get the matter at your next meeting.

Get your neighbor to read the Call.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

Andrew Carnegie is out with another of his usual sermons upon the "disgrace of dying rich." Whether Andrew devalues himself of his property or not, before departing this life, he will at least have the consolation of knowing that his efforts have been fruitful in preventing many of his competitors from dying "disgraced." As for the workmen who made his wealth possible, he has apparently no fear that a like fate is in store for them.

Amongst the many wondrous stories of Roosevelt-hunting told in Colorado the latest to hand is that a pack of wolves compelled Teddy to climb up a tree and remain there for several hours. Hungry wolves or hungry strikers seem to have a similar effect upon the vice-president. In dealing with both he invariably takes to the timber.

We cannot truthfully say that we have noticed any perceptible improvement in the lot of the working class. John R. Tanner yielded the governorship of this state to his successor. And yet one of the capitalist dailies of this city came out every day for a month with a congratulatory verse, drawing attention to the fact that Tanner's term of office was constantly growing shorter. We did not expect the millennium to arrive when that happy event took place, and cannot therefore confess to any disappointment, but we suspect that hopes had been raised which have not been realized now that Tanner is a back number. Capitalist politics are, however, usually "dead-end trails" so far as the working class are concerned. The latter have survived the "fall dinner pail" swindle and will probably outlive this one also.

A clever cartoon appears in the Tribune of the 19th inst. in which the two ex-presidents, Harrison and Cleveland are represented as weeping copiously over the future outlook for the republic. Underneath the following stanza, from Omar Khayyam, appears:

The Moving Finger writes, and, having writ, Moves on, nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

All of which is quite true, but nevertheless the time is rapidly coming when the interests of which the Tribune weeps so helplessly as the two republicans which they now hold up to ridicule. That "moving finger" is writing socialism on the wall, and the capitalist Belshazzar will soon discover that he has "been weighed in the balance and found wanting."

"Municipal ownership" has been made plain by the mayor of Chicago and the business men. The city waterworks which, in spite of the corruption connected with its management, has at least been an illustration of how a public utility can be served at cost it is now proposed to bond for $30,000,000, in order to provide funds for lowering the tunnels and improving the harbor. The waterworks are to be made to yield surplus value which the users of the water will have to pay. The appetite of the capitalist for surplus value is almost as wonderful as the stupidity of the advocates of "public ownership" under capitalist control.

The National Building Trades Council at its recent convention voted to send a committee to Chicago for the purpose of settling the lockout. The contractors insist that there is nothing to settle, now if the members of the building trades would do themselves justice let them elect John Collins as mayor of Chicago, and see how quickly the contractors would reconsider the matter. It would probably dawn upon them that their only salvation lay in a speedy settlement.

The death of Queen Victoria gives her successor a good job, but it is not probable that he will hold it as long as she did. The British workmen may, in the meantime come to their senses and abolish the office.

The indignation of the Czar of Russia against Germany and England for cruelly practicing on the Chinese is a sign that another massacre of "celestial" upon the Russian border is about due, leading to the annexation of another portion of Chinese territory to the dominions of the Czar. The Chinese are up against it for certain.

The fact that the Bible trust has been organized to deny us to any extent as we secured a copy some time ago and feel safe in consequence, but alas! how will it fare with the Chinese and other races who are yet to be "saved."

Alderman Haymer is in favor of city ownership of the railroads and the leasing of the privilege of operating the cars to private enterprise. He fears the corrupting influences of city operation, which is a candid confession from a city alderman.

In the discussion of "vice" which occurred at the recent meeting of the Sunset club, Mr. C. S. Barry very properly stated that "if everybody had work at living wages, vice would disappear. He forgot to add, however, that living wages never will be paid while the instruments of production remain private property and are operated for profit.

Don't run out of Socialist ammunition. Call postals can always be obtained at this office.

CIRCULATION NOTES.

Comrade Knox, of Richmond, Va., sends us a sub and says: "The party is blessed in having such a journal, invariably sound in scientific socialism."

Comrade O'Neal, of Terre Haute, Ind., writes: "Enclosed find 50 cents for one year's sub to the Workers' Call for a comrade who, on seeing a copy, was pleased with its style."

Comrade Max Blank, of Salt Lake City, Utah, sends us a club of seven half-yearly and one yearly subscriptions, and adds: "Four years ago in Utah we polled 50 votes. Last election we polled 730 votes." Comrade Blank is one of the best subscription hustlers in the country. Call again.

The secretary of the Fourth Ward branch, (may his tribe increase), sends us a check for $5.50 to pay for six yearly and ten half-yearly subscriptions—this the result of only a few hours' hustling. It is to be hoped that other comrades will follow the example of the secretary of the Fourth Ward branch, and do similar yeoman service for the cause.

Comrade Price of the Thirty-third ward sends us an order for four Call postals.

The circulation editor has his eyes wide open and does not intend to be surprised any more. The mail from Rock Island Tuesday morning brought in a perfect shower of Call postals. We know all about it. The comrades down at Rock Island have been agitating again, and Comrade Nary has been at his nefarious work of roping in the innocent. But that is all right. We have our eyes on the comrade from Rock Island, and if he sends in another order for Call postals we will see that he meets with a warm reception.

The comrades at Muscatine, Ia., are still campaigning. Comrade Charles I. Breckenridge late candidate for congress in the second district of Iowa writes: "The many readers of The Call may be interested in what we are doing in Iowa and I enclose you two pages of the Journal giving my article and the reply thereto by the proprietor, who seems to have been hit but cannot succeed in hitting anything back. The cause is moving on. Our candidate for congress in this district (the second), polled nearly 1,000 votes, and the work is going on nicely. The Workers' Call is much appreciated here, and we are full of enthusiasm for the cause." We regret that lack of space makes it impossible for us to publish Comrade Breckenridge's article and the rejoinder.

BOOK REVIEWS.

SCIENCE AND THE WORKINGMEN, by Ferdinand Lassalle. Translated by Thorstein Veblen, of the University of Chicago. Paper, 25 cents. International Library Publishing Co., 23 Duane St., New York.

The contents of this work form the defence of Ferdinand Lassalle against a prosecution undertaken by the Prussian government, who arrested the famous agitator on the charge of sedition, inciting the unpropertied classes to contempt and hatred of the wealthy. The occasion of the offense was an address delivered by Lassalle before a working class audience, the address in question being the well-known "Workmen's Program." The trial took place on January 18th, 1863, and the defendant, to the everlasting shame of the Prussian government, was found guilty and sentenced to four months' imprisonment, although Lassalle in his defense literally tore the fabricated indictment to shreds. The wonderful genius of the celebrated agitator is fully brought out in the published account of the speech made by him on this occasion which forms the contents of this work. Those who wish to get a comprehension of the extraordinary talent of Lassalle in oratory, debate, satire, and depth of knowledge, cannot do better than purchase it.

THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO, by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels. International Publishing Co., 23 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal. Paper, 10 cents; red cloth, gold lettering, 25 cents.

We are well satisfied to see another edition of this, the most powerful document in the entire range of Socialist literature, make its appearance. The "Manifesto" we have always contended, was not sufficiently known and appreciated amongst American Socialists generally, and we are glad to see that another opportunity is afforded, by which the merits of this famous pamphlet may become more widely known. The International Publishing company have done their work well, as the pamphlet, both in appearance and typography, is all that could be desired. The work is in every sense complete and the remarkable preface written by Engels forty years after the first appearance of the "Manifesto" is included. Its sale should be vigorously pushed everywhere.

Not So Ignorant.

It is thought that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan may have the entire output of the Atlantic coal region handed through a single agency. And yet Mr. Morgan does not know that he is a Socialist.—Chicago American.

Ed. He knows enough to skin those who don't know enough to become Socialists, just the same.

We will will over be sent to any subscriber of this paper. If you did not pay for it some one else did. The number with which your subscription expires is on the wrapper. Watch it and when your time is out, if you like the principles the paper teaches send in your renewal.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Minnesota Victory.

Editor the Workers' Call:—
At the local election held here on January 18th, Warren W. Morse, who was candidate for presidential elector on the S. D. ticket from this state, in the late campaign, was nominated for alderman by the Socialists of the Second Ward, and elected by a majority of 21 votes, there being 43 votes cast all told.

Seems that the Socialists were not all retired from the field of battle at their glorious defeat on the 18th of November last. You can't make a Socialist ease up a bit; they are no sooner defeated in one political battle than they open up in another spot ready for action again. Perhaps this is significant of the fact that their number is always increasing for "keeping everlastingly at it brings success."

Let this be an example for other towns. Nominate your men on the Socialist ticket, and elect them if possible and do something for workmen of your town every time you get a chance. A city board of officers has many opportunities to help the laboring men in their fight for a sustenance under this capitalist system, and if those officers are Socialists they will do so, and if not they will not do so.

In every town legislation is carried on in the interest of the capitalist or property owners at the expense of the proletarian, just the same as in the higher tribunals, such as legislatures, etc.

Workingmen should unite with the Social Democratic party, which is the only party declaring for class legislation in his favor.

Let the good work go on.
Fraternally,
Warren W. Morse.

West Town Convention.

—Chicago, January 20, 1921.
Dear Comrade:—As secretary of the West Town convention, held at Aqua Park hall, 1856 W. Jackson street, on Wednesday eve, January 18th, I have been instructed to submit a report to you for publication, which follows:

Comrade F. G. Strickland was unanimously elected to act as chairman. A committee on credentials composed of Comrades Smiley, Brennan and Gilbert was appointed. A roll call of delegates present representing nine wards as follows: 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, about 50 delegates in all. The following comrades were nominated by acclamation as candidates for the West Town office:

For Supervisor: Geo. P. Evans, 17 Fowler street (14th ward).
For Collector: Geo. J. Sheldahl, 1193 S. Albany avenue (16th ward).

A committee consisting of Comrades Gilbert, Allen, Strickland, Anderson and Brennan, were appointed to see that petitions were distributed and use their best efforts to get the collection of signatures. A motion by Comrade Smith that a collection be taken up and the proceeds in excess of the hall rent be donated to the Workers' Call, was carried unanimously, and in the collection which followed $5 was realized, which, after deducting $1 for hall rent, left the proceeds $4 for the Call. Comrades Smith and Strickland were appointed a committee to turn same over to the paper, to be acknowledged through its columns. Short addresses were then made by Comrades Collins, Smiley and Strickland, and the meeting adjourned.

Yours fraternally,
John H. Gillespie,
Editor the Workers' Call.

From Springfield, Mass.

To All Socialists of the United States:—
Comrades:—For your information, I inform you that vote blanks on unity proposition have been sent out to all locals of our party, branches affiliated with the N. E. B. sections of the S. L. P., and all neutral organizations of which I had addresses. A copy was also sent to the convention held last week, in order to get the opinion of all Socialists on this question of union. I request all who have received copies of the above to bring same before the meeting of their respective organizations and have same acted upon.

Union is the crying necessity of the times, and the many resolutions I have received to that effect from locals all over the country, demonstrate the desire and wish for it.

At this time I take pleasure in acknowledging receipt of all such communications, in the party press, in order to save time and correspondence.

Any unaffiliated comrade or independent organization who has blanks by writing to me for them.

In behalf of Socialist unity I request all comrades to take upon themselves the duty of seeing to it that Socialist organizations of either of the other parties in the city or town are informed that a communication on unity has been sent out to them, and that they be submitted to the organization at its next meeting, and in the event of any such organization failing to receive a copy, please notify me, and I will send blanks at once.

Now for one grand effort to secure complete unity of all Socialists of this country.

Wm. Butcher, Nat. Secy.

Wants the Name "Socialist."

Editor Workers' Call:—
Dear Comrade:—The action which the Socialists of Chicago and Oklahoma have taken in regard to a party name, seems to me to be a very sensible one. Simplicity is a virtue in every avenue of human activity and in no place could it render better results than in the Socialist movement. Furthermore, the word "Democrat" is used among the workers of this country virtually to include the principles and policy of the Democratic party of this country, which is as much of an enemy to our cause as the Republican party, and I am sure no Socialist would be willing to adopt the name "Socialist Republican party." I think that the Socialists of Chicago and Oklahoma have set a good example by reducing the name to a minimum and if followed by other Socialist organizations the result would be more than satisfactory. The word "Democratic" causes much confusion among the illiterate than the ordinary Socialist is aware of. Personally, I am willing to abide by any name given to the movement, but I do not think that we should cause agitating the subject, and the name "Socialist party" is adopted by the national organization.

Yours fraternally,
Albert Trout.

The Workers' Call is the organ of the SOCIALIST PARTY.

Get your neighbor to read the Call.

OWE HIM NOTHING.

The Rank and File of Organized Labor Are Not Indebted to the Present Mayor.

The following appeared in the Tribune of the 14th inst.:

Under instructions from Robert A. Burke to get organized labor in line for Mayor Harrison in connection with the work of the spring campaign, practically all the City Hall employees belonging to labor organizations had at the Democratic county headquarters and organized "The Carter H. Harrison Workingmen's Club." The following officers were elected:

President—James E. Daley.
Secretary—John Mitchell.
Mr. Daley was elected County Commissioner in the Democratic ticket last fall, while Mitchell is one of the planning men of the city.

Among those present who assisted in the organization of this "Workingmen's Club" were: P. F. Doyle, chairman of the Board of Examining Trustees; Martin B. Madden, steamfitter who is inspector of vehicles; John E. Kelly, plumber and engineer, member of the Board of Examining Engineers; P. F. Dalton, bridge and structural iron worker, inspector of ironwork; Frank Kennedy, plumber, Board of Examining Plumbers; John Mangano, steamfitter, inspector of steamfitters; Patrick Maloney, steamfitter, Board of Examining Engineers; T. J. Elderkin, Seamen's union, Vessel Inspector.

All those representatives of labor made speeches in praise of Mayor Harrison's consideration for the laboring man, and resolutions were adopted calling on all members of organized labor to rally to the support of Mayor Harrison, both at the primaries and on election day.

The gratitude displayed by the office-holders, who owe their places to Carter Harrison, is exceedingly natural. They call attention to the fact that Mr. Harrison has given them good jobs, and they hope, through his re-election, to retain them. They are so much easier than the jobs attainable by the rank and file of labor.

But for what are the latter indebted to Harrison? How much has he done for them that they should "get in line" for him in the spring campaign? Is it not through the corrupting influence of the patronage at his disposal that the distrust has been created which wrought havoc in the Building Trades Council? What do the rank and file of the building trades think of the man who has done even more than the contractors, to destroy the shield which they had constructed for their defense? By whose orders were the union men clubbed away from the Adams and Clark street building, owned by Marsh at Fifth—place where the struggle first openly materialized? Who was it that announced his candidacy at the banquet given by the Inorganic club, where Edward Mandel sat at the same table, a member of the same firm who now having their building constructed by such labor?

It is well that these deeds should be recalled to the memory of the woodworkers and metalworkers, so that when they go to the polls in April, they will vote for their own interests, as represented by the Socialist party ticket headed by John Collins, a union machinist, a man who is and always has been ready to assist in organizing the working class for the development of class solidarity; a man who will not for a moment claim the votes cast for his name as his own property, a man who has no need to bribe a few "leaders" to get the rank and file "in line."

The progress of the working class towards freedom is measured solely by the growth of the Socialist vote. There is no other way. There may be some individuals who will benefit by the election of a capitalist candidate, but they do so at the expense of the working class. The price of their degradation is comprised in the reward which they receive from the enemies of labor for their Judas-like betrayal of their class.

Workingmen, the capitalist, whether he be Republican or Democrat, is always your enemy. His false promises to your class always prove Dead Sea fruit.

B. Berlyn.

A TRIBUTE TO ENVY

phy of the eighteenth century.

This "democracy" has no claim to meet socialism in the political arena of the future. It has outlived whatever "reputation" it might once have possessed, and cannot possibly acquire a new one. The only position which it can fill is to act as a screen for the capitalist giant, known as Republican party, in the coming conflict, and all political signs point to its eager and grateful acceptance of the job.

THE PEOPLE'S MARX

THE PEOPLE'S MARX from the pen of Gabriel Deville and in the translation of Robert Rives La Monte, presents to the English-speaking Socialists the most excellent and successful epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital." This luminous epitome, from the last and seventeenth French edition, is issued in the style in every way characteristic of the publications of the INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

The Haverhill Social Democrat, remarks on The People's Marx as
The Bible of the working class, a Bible whose study is as beneficial to the workman as is the orthodox Bible to the average Christian.

OTHER OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

The New York People on The People's Marx:
Deville, in this abridgement and popularization of one of the most difficult economic works ever undertaken, has succeeded admirably in this respect: That he has held close to the outlines of the original work, has preserved its essential form as well as its matter, but has considerably reduced its size, and to a very great extent has simplified it and brought it within the understanding of the ordinary reader.

Only patient bladders and scholars, with tastes for economic studies, however, are able to master Marx' Capital, and many attempts have been made to furnish the people with a luminous epitome of this great work. . . . Up to the present time no one has so satisfactorily accomplished this work as Gabriel Deville, in the volume before us. His People's Marx was published in France in 1894, and has now been excellently translated into English by Robert Rives La Monte.

The price of The People's Marx is: one dollar and a half in cloth; seventy-five cents in paper. With orders sent in before the 1st of March we will give as premium a cloth copy of the Silver Cross, (price 50c.), with $1.50 edition; or, a copy of the Civil War in France, (price 25c.), with the paper edition.

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW

This is the only periodical in the English language reckoning among its contributors all the great Socialist writers of the world. Among those whose writings have appeared in its columns in the last seven months are Charles H. Vall, Leonard D. Abbott, W. T. Brown, H. M. Hyndman, Paul Lafargue, E. V. Debs, Job Harriman, Ernest Crosby and Emil Vandervelde, while Edwin Markham, Kier Hardie, Rev. T. McGrady and Jane Adams have promised articles.

PROF. GEORGE D. HERRON conducts a department each month on SOCIALISM AND RELIGION, containing matter of great interest and value to all students of social questions. It is the only instance in the history of Socialist literature where a regular department was conducted upon this subject by a man who combines such rare natural talents with a thorough knowledge of the literature and doctrines of both Religion and Socialism.

MAX S. HAYES, equally well-known as a writer and speaker in both the Socialist and trade union movement, edits a department on THE LABOR WORLD. This consists of a thorough summary of the happenings in the field of organized labor, with descriptions of the more important mechanical and industrial changes of each month.

The department on SOCIALISM ABROAD is infinitely superior to anything of the kind ever attempted in the English language. In addition to a full and able corps of foreign correspondents, several Socialist dailies of Europe are subscribed for and nearly all the important weeklies and monthlies are received on exchange and made use of in its preparation. With the mass of interesting things that foreign Socialists are now doing, no one who is at all interested in socialism can afford not to read this department.

The department of BOOK REVIEWS is edited with the special aim of making it a continuous and complete compendium of the wealth of material in current literature that is of interest to Socialists. The regular EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT is conducted by the general editor, A. M. SIMONS, who discusses topics of current interest in the light of the Socialist philosophy. An interesting phase is a financial summary of the month, giving the facts as to prices, wages, bankruptcies, financial consolidations and general trade movements that are of interest to Socialists, but which have hitherto been buried in trade and financial journals and inaccessible to the average reader.

With the issue for March, 1901, the SIZE WILL BE INCREASED from sixty-four to EIGHTY pages and an INTERESTING story will be begun to run through several numbers. This story will be of a literary value to accord with the high standard maintained by the remainder of the publication. While written from a Socialist point of view it does not attempt to be an economic treatise, and its literary merit and entertaining plot will gain for it a prominent place among the romances of the year.

The INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW is the most complete expression of the Socialist movement ever attempted, and no student of socialism, favorable or hostile, can keep informed upon the subject without reading its columns.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, single copies 10 cents; no free samples. For twelve one-cent stamps we will mail a copy of the REVIEW and PROF. HERRON'S booklet "Why I Am a Socialist." FATHER MCGRADY'S new 50-cent novel mailed free if you send $1.00 for the REVIEW at once.

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA ON "SOCIALISM"

The fat has gone forth. The encyclopaedia has spoken. The greatest masterpiece of organization which the world has up to the present ever known, has launched its thunderbolts against "socialism"—and wonderful to say, "nobody seems a penny the worse."

Whether the encyclopaedia is the individual production of Leo XIII or the result of the collective wisdom of the Ecumenical Council, is a matter of little moment. It contains nothing that was not expected by Socialists, and nothing calculated to give much assistance to capitalism in warding off the inevitable.

Like every other reactionary document that has ever appeared the encyclopaedia carefully "defines" what it intends to demolish, and its definition of socialism is purposely contrived to render the demolition easy. The object of attack is described as something "which concerns itself solely with material possessions" and which is "always seeking to establish perfect equality and a common holding of goods." Now, whatever this thing may be—that is if it has any real existence—it is certainly not socialism, and the warning given to good Catholics to avoid it, is to say the least superfluous. Such a bogey as this has no existence, socialism does not concern itself solely with material possessions. Such a definition would fit capitalism with infinitely more truth. Socialism deals with material possessions as a means to an end—capitalism makes them the end.

Socialism does not seek to establish equality, in the sense that the readers of the encyclopaedia are left purposely to infer. It cares nothing for equality in material possessions, and recognizes in the full mental and physical inequalities of individuals. What it does insist upon, however, is equality of opportunity, the right of the producer to produce and enjoy the full product, be that product great or small, and this the Socialists will have in spite of every so-called "religious" institution on the face of the earth.

Socialism cares nothing for holding "goods" in common. It declares that the machinery for the production of these "goods" shall be collectively owned by those who collectively operate them—which is an entirely different matter.

What then has the encyclopaedia to offer? Schemes for the "amelioration" of the lot of the working classes. Why should the lot of the working classes require "amelioration" unless robbery is being committed upon them? Does not their labor produce all wealth? Why then should they not have it? But these "amelioration" schemes are now in full blast under the direction of the robber class, and for no other reason than that the system of robbery may be preserved.

"Almsgiving," "charity,"—never a word of "justice." "Charity" does not degrade, says the encyclopaedia. No, it only transforms men and women into liars, cowards, and hypocrites who "concern themselves solely with material possessions" which are modestly limited to a crust of bread, a rag of clothing and a filthy bowl—but it does not "degrade."

"Justice" will breed men—"charity" can only produce slaves who will be "respectful to their masters" as the encyclopaedia says.

Socialism has not been attacked in this production—on the contrary, it has been carefully ignored. And in this respect the encyclopaedia does not differ from a party of ten years ago. The advice which it gives to the Catholic proletariat is to avoid revolutionary movements.

is being rendered impossible by capitalism itself. They have no more choice in the matter than non-Catholics, for the reason that they are all equally the product of an industrial revolution which has brought them into existence so that they may make it complete.

Against economic evolution the fiat of any group of men is utterly impotent, a statement which can be easily sustained by a glance at the growth of the Socialist movement since the encyclopaedia of 1891 was promulgated, up to the present. And the fact that the present one is devoted entirely to an attack upon a pretended "socialism" is further proof, if such were needed, that the actual movement is more of a menace than ever before.

CAPITALIST ESTIMATES.

The great musical composer Giuseppe Verdi died on January 27th at Milan, Italy, aged 88. He was the son of a poverty-stricken innkeeper who deprived himself of the necessities of life in order that his son might obtain a musical education.

The result was that the world was enriched by a large number of musical masterpieces.

About the same time a distinguished scientific man, Professor Elihu Gray, also departed this life. He left to the world various important discoveries in electrical science, particularly the telegraph, with which his name will be always associated.

In giving notice of these deaths the capitalist journals of this city devoted at most hardly a column of their space.

One week ago at Osborne House, England, there died a queen who gave to the world—nothing.

She lived—and died a parasite.

The world has nothing to remember her by except the poverty and misery that came as a result of maintaining a system of society in which she figured as queen.

For weeks the capitalist journals of this country devoted not columns, not pages even, but often the greater part of their entire space to disgusting laudations of her goodness and greatness. And this is the twentieth century and we boast of civilization. Those who have helped to advance it are neglected. Those who did nothing but lead empty worthless lives are almost deified.

But there were some papers—a few—which did not join in the general chorus of false and hypocritical adulation over the death of this nonentity. They were the Socialist papers. May their power and numbers increase.

A TRIVIAL OFFENSE.

"Divinity" professors of the Chicago university are said to be greatly surprised and grieved at the amount of acceptance displayed by the students of that institution. However, there is no reason for supposing that Mr. Rockefeller will feel so much discouraged over this matter as to withhold the "oil of gladness" with which the machinery of that establishment is lubricated. So long as the students accept without question the "miracles" of capitalist political economy, their attitude toward those of nineteen hundred years ago is of secondary importance, and possibly the "grief" of the "divinity" professors is not quite so poignant as the newspaper reports would have us believe. Over thirty years ago Marx observed that "the English Established church will more readily pardon an attack on 33 of its 39 articles than one on thirty-ninth of its income," and that "nowadays atheism itself is culpa levis, as compared with criticism of existing property relations." His remarks hold good in any part of the capitalist world today, and the Chicago university is in no particular danger from the growing scepticism of the students upon Biblical matters. When it extends to existing property relations there will be real cause for alarm.

"Common People" Classified.

A paper drifted in upon us the other day bearing the uncommon title of "Commoners." Upon looking over this production for some hint as to why this name was selected, we found that a "rich man who has honestly acquired his wealth and is not afraid to intrust his care to laws made by his fellows," might be considered a "commoner," also that a "commoner" is one of the "common people," and that these common people are sometimes called the "MIDDLE CLASS." And then it flashed upon us suddenly that the "common people" are not other than the "commoners" of the "Commoners" paper.

Going to the Dogs.

The Chicago police department has just announced that the law department of the city advised the water works to discontinue the investigations for the purpose of water pollution in the city. This move on the part of the law department would lead to the belief that the police department offered to discontinue the investigation by one of the large

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

The capitalist press of this city in the "fight" against the street railway companies are doing noble work in preparing the way for the use of the trolley, which is 40 per cent cheaper than the cable system, and the capitalists who pocket the dividends are remarkably reticent under the "lash." Capital is always submissive when its profits are to be increased.

Last week a tramp who was arrested on a charge of burglary pleaded not guilty, declaring that he was simply a "bum." Upon being questioned as to whether he had ever worked he replied: "I did work at one time in a rolling mill, but I got wise to an easier kind." This is a far superior record to that of those who "bum" upon the working class and at the same time indignantly deny that they ever worked in their lives. As between the tramp parasite and the capitalist parasite, if there is any difference, it is certainly in favor of the former.

Amongst the crop of stories anent "royal" individuals, which are now going the rounds of the press, it is related that a "patriotic" Englishman whispered under his breath while the German Emperor and the newly created Edward VII were passing, "O, that we might have ten years of the Kaiser's rule in England." Possibly if this "patriotic" had his wish, he might perhaps discover that the results might not be altogether to his taste. If the growth of socialism is in any measure to be attributed to Kaiser Wilhelm's efforts to cope with it, might, from a Socialist point of view, have a similar effect in stimulating the class-consciousness of the British proletariat if the desire of this "patriotic" for ten years of the Kaiser's rule could be realized.

The internal revenue office at Peoria was robbed last week of between thirty and forty thousand dollars worth of gold bullion. As the job bears marks of being the handiwork of an expert, the police are unable to find a clue to the perpetrators. The difficulty of doing so is further enhanced by the fact that the exact whereabouts of Mr. Nelly of Cuban celebrity is definitely known.

On January 20th the batteries of the Vatican aimed fire on socialism. It is thought that only blank cartridges were used, as up to the time of going to press no casualties were reported on our side.

An edible bamboo, it is stated, has been discovered in India, and we are told that it will be an invaluable aid to the famine stricken natives of that country. It will—if they have the price. The natives, it is said, regard the discovery as a "special act of providence" in their behalf. The capitalists of Great Britain may be expected to promptly dispatch that illusion, as a government analysis shows that the new discovery is almost identical with the composition of cane sugar.

It is now being realized that many "gangsters" who were supposed to be "relegated to obscurity" are again emerging from that locality, and are preparing to enter the city council as aldermen next April. The street railway interests are said to be behind these parties, whose aid they require in settling the question of extension of franchises. This alliance between Michigan avenue and the "Levee" promises to give the "good man" candidates a run for his money at election time. Meanwhile municipal ownership is "in the air" and will probably stay there.

According to Dun & Co.'s commercial report for week ending January 27th, business is improving. The number of failures for this week is 304 against 231 for the corresponding week of last year, most of them being failures for amounts less than $5,000. Yes, business is improving.

Madame Sarah Bernhardt, the celebrated "trag-dienne," visited the stock yards the other day, under "proper guidance," and declared that the packinghouses were not the horrible places she had been led to believe. It is not to be supposed that the polite officials would permit anything of a "horrible" nature to intrude itself upon the gaze of the distinguished visitor. All the same, if Madame were to visit the locality popularly known as "back of the dump" and which is a direct factor in the operation of the packinghouses, she could learn more about "tragedies" in an hour than a whole lifetime on the stage could teach her.

Combustion and consolidation goes merrily on amongst the large industrial interests in the United States, and large casks of water are being emptied into the thick pudding of stocks so as to make it turn out a finer stream of dividends. It is so coarse, don't you know, to put a large portion on a small plate. The good people must not be shocked so the movement goes on to provide plenty of plates to hold all of the pudding, putting out a respectable quantity on each plate.

A few weeks ago a small paragraph caught a collection of "items of news" which announced that the law department of the city advised the water works to discontinue the investigations for the purpose of water pollution in the city. This move on the part of the law department would lead to the belief that the police department offered to discontinue the investigation by one of the large

CIRCULATION NOTES.

A club of ten subscribers from Comrade Minnegan, of Chicago.
A couple more yearlies from Comrade A. Prince, of Chicago.
The Twelfth Ward branch takes $2.00 worth of half-yearly postals.
There are no files floating on that premium offer—it is winter time.
Eight Call postals go to Comrade Raur of the Twenty-first Ward.
Comrade Dretz of the Seventh ward sends in a club of four half-yearlies.
Comrade Robbins of the old Fifteenth Ward takes $3.00 worth of yearly and half-yearly postals.
Twenty-five half-yearlies go to Comrade Strickland, organizer for the Twelfth and Thirtieth wards.

The German branch of the Socialist party at South Chicago takes five yearly and eighteen half-yearly postals.
The poorest Socialist in the land can possess a library of Socialist literature. Our premium offer makes it possible.
Comrade Martin turned in a club of four yearlies and took away with him ten yearly postals and ten half-yearly ones.

Comrade Ferguson has put on his war toga again and is making things lively around Elwood, Indiana. He begins his depredations by sending in a couple of half-yearlies.

Comrade L. Anderson, organizer for the old Fourteenth (now the Fifteenth) Ward branch still keeps plugging away at the enemy. Four yearlies and eight half-yearlies is his latest item.

Comrade D. A. Roswell, of Herrin, Ill., sends us a bunch of half a dozen subs, and informs us that Local Herrin is making preparations to put a municipal ticket in the field for the spring election. That's right. Whoop it up boys!

A club of three yearlies from Comrade Gott, of Mystic, Iowa. Comrade Gott informs us that Local Mystic is holding a very successful series of agitation meetings, and that from one to six new members are admitted on each meeting night. Arrangements have been made to have Comrades Geo. D. Herron and J. Ritt Wilson address agitation meetings at Mystic in the near future.

A correspondent writing from Minnesota says: "May I here make a few remarks as to the Workers' Call. I have been reading it for a long time, and am getting to like it more and more. I am glad to see that the Chicago comrades have dropped the name 'Social Democratic,' which in this country is about the most meaningless, absurd and misleading name that could be adopted."

We told all about it last week and gave fair warning. Comrade Nary of Rock Island sends us an order for another supply of Call postals. Suppose we will have to send them, but will get even all right. We have it all planned out. Comrade Herron will speak in Rock Island some time next spring. On that occasion we will send Comrade Nary a great big bundle of Workers' Calls. We can stand this thing just about as long as he can.

Last Saturday's postal business was a record-breaker. One hundred and eighty-nine postal cards, yearlies and half-yearlies, left the office on that day. One comrade took thirty six-month postals; another ten yearlies and twenty half-yearlies. The Fourteenth Ward branch plunked down $3.25 to pay for thirty-seven half-yearlies. Comrade Becker of the Sixteenth Ward brought in a list of subs and took half a dozen six months postals. The old Sixteenth Ward branch, having put on the fighting harness at their last business meeting, took fifty half-yearly postals. Comrade A. Eisenman came next with ten half-yearlies. Another comrade took half a dozen of the same stripe. Comrade Dunkelberg wound up the day's postal business by taking ten yearlies and ten half-yearlies.

Socialism in Connecticut.
A public meeting will be held February 7, 1901, in room 27, Platt's Block, east Main street, Waterbury, Conn., to take action on resolutions submitted by the N. E. C. of the S. D. P. of Springfield, Mass. All persons recognizing the class struggle and the necessity of independent political action of the working class, are invited to attend.

A. E. Bablin, organizer, get your neighbor to read the Call.

Great Premium Offer

It is with pleasure that the Workers' Call announces to its friends and patrons that it has completed arrangements with one of the largest Socialist publishing houses in the country, whereby it has obtained a quantity of the best Socialist books published in the English language to be given as premiums to its subscription holders. The terms upon which these books have been obtained make it possible for us to extend to active workers the best premium offer that has ever been made by a Socialist publication. The books which we offer are the very cream of Socialist literature, and should be in the home of every active comrade. With a little hustling—in a good cause—it is possible for every comrade to obtain them free of cost. This remarkable offer is as follows:

With every two dollars' worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the rate of 40 cents for yearlies and 25 cents for half-yearlies, we will give a copy of "The Peoples' Marx," an excellent epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital," translated from the French of Gabriel Deville. Retail price, 75 cents. Or "A History of the Commune of 1871," by Lisansky; price, 25¢.

With every one dollar and fifty cents' worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, we will give one copy of Eugene Sue's "Silver Cross," or the Carpenter of Nazareth, cloth bound, price 50 cents.

With every one dollar's worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the same rate, we will give any two of the following classics of Socialist literature: "Socialism from Utopia to Science," by Frederick Engels; "The Workingman's Program," by Ferdinand Lassalle; "The Right to Be Lazy," by Paul Lafargue; "The State and Socialism," by Gabriel Deville; "Socialism, Revolution and Internationalism," by Gabriel Deville. Retail price of each of the above books, 10 cents.

Also with one dollar's worth of subscriptions we will give any one of the following 25 cent books: "The Civil War in France," by Karl Marx; "Science and the Workingmen," by Ferdinand La Salle; "The Socialist Campaign Book for 1900."

It is unnecessary for us to dilate to any extent upon the merits of the books which we thus place within the easy reach of every comrade in the country.

"The Peoples' Marx" has been introduced to our readers in previous numbers. It contains all the salient points of the parent book, "Capital," and presents them in a form more readily understood by the average mind. "Kapital," in its original form is a book for the student. "The Peoples' Marx" is a book for everybody. The other books which we offer are familiar to all Socialists.

In taking advantage of the above offer comrades are requested to make use of the following blank application. Fill it out and send it with your letter:

The Workers' Call, 36 N. Clark St., Chicago.

Comrades:—Enclosed you will find to pay for subscription on the names elsewhere enclosed or to pay for Workers' Call postals of which I advise you in this letter. You may put my name on your roll of agents and may depend upon me to do all I can for the cause of socialism and the success of the Workers' Call. Please send me the following books to which I am entitled as premiums on the above remittance:

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Recommendation.
To the Socialists of Illinois.
Greetings!—From our meeting of December 23rd, 1900, we issued a call for a state convention of the Socialist forces of Illinois. Since that time a national convention of the S. D. P. with headquarters at 128 Washington street, has been held, and a call for a unity national convention issued therefrom.

Viewing this fact, and since, also, the S. D. P. with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., is now taking a referendum on the same proposition, it appears that the Socialists of the United States will soon have complete national unity. This being true, a state convention to more perfectly organize and unify the movement at this time, becomes unnecessary, and if called its work could at best be only tentative, awaiting the outcome of the national unity convention.

Therefore we recommend that the date of said convention be postponed until the first Saturday in June, 1901. Expressing our sincere wish that complete organic unity may be speedily accomplished, we are,

Joint Campaign Committee.

January 26th, 1901.

The National Council.
Comrades—Your attention is once more called to election of members of the National Council by each state, which must be done in January, and the names and addresses of the members sent to the National Secretary immediately after the first of February. Any state failing to send in the name of its member of the National Council by February 1st, will be considered as not caring to participate in the deliberations of said council.

Voting blanks on unity proposition have been mailed, and all organizations who have received a copy, whether affiliated with this committee or not, are requested to vote and send the report of said vote to the national secretary.

All locals who have not yet made returns on semi-annual report blanks are requested to do so at once, as it is desired to ascertain as soon as possible, the numerical strength of our party. Now is the time for the locals to do active propaganda work and distribute literature, so as to educate the workers to know how to vote right next election. For this purpose we have on hand a supply of leaflets "Why American Workingmen Should Be Socialists," which we are selling at $1.25 per thousand. This is an excellent propaganda leaflet and every local should have a supply on hand for distribution. All orders will receive prompt attention.

Yours fraternally,

Wm. Hutscher, Nat'l Sec'y.

—Springfield, Mass., Jan. 23, 1901.

From Oklahoma.

[The following letter from Oklahoma, in reply to that from Local Chicago, published in The Call of January 12, has inadvertently escaped publication in our city. We congratulate our Oklahoma comrades on the work they are doing.]

To the Secretary of Local Chicago, Socialist Party of Illinois.
Dear Comrade:—On behalf of the Oklahoma comrades, allow me to express our appreciation of your kindly greeting of December 23, 1900.

Our convention met as per call, with delegates present from two-thirds of the counties. The party name "Socialist" was adopted, and the local is to be a union of all the Socialists of the United States into one party. A copy of said resolutions was furnished The Call and Herald of Chicago, and the Socialist press generally.

Let your neighbor to read the Call.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

SECOND YEAR.—WHOLE NO. 101.

CHICAGO, ILL., FEBRUARY 9, 1901.

PRICE ONE CENT

IF THEY "DO GOOD"

Why the Minister Was Put on the Factory Pay Roll.

"RELIGION" FOR THE MASSES

Capitalist Believing to No Church Is Willing to Pay for Promoting Piety in His Wage Slaves.

If the great "religious revival" which is to mark the beginning of the twentieth century is to materialize, it is evident that capitalism is determined to exploit it as far as possible for the preservation of existing conditions. Several instances of this tendency may be observed in the daily press. One of these comes from Washington, Indiana, where the owner of a stove factory has decided that his wage slaves shall line up in the morning before their daily exploitation commences, to listen to fifteen minutes "religious" service from a Presbyterian pastor. If the sermons have the desired effect, the minister will be kept on the factory pay roll indefinitely. The dispatch naively ends with the statement that the owner of the factory is a member of no church.

Why then it may be asked, does he exert himself for the salvation of the souls of his employees. Here is a man who thinks as little of his own salvation that he does not consider it worth while to identify himself with any of the communities specially organized for that purpose, and yet he is willing to pay a representative of one of those bodies on condition, as the paragraph says, that "the services do good."

What is the meaning of this? Why does this factory owner expect "good" to result to his employees from listening to the preacher, when he is indifferent about the matter as it concerns himself personally? Does "good" mean the same thing to laborer and capitalist? He would probably answer that it does, and would strengthen his assertion by repeating the old saying that the interests of laborer and capitalist are identical. What then is the solution of this apparent contradiction? Is this factory owner a fool?

By no means. He is an intelligent capitalist. He understands "religion," probably far better than the man he has hired to preach it, and it is yet more probable that his knowledge upon the subject outclasses that of his employees in a still greater degree. For "religion" has its uses in producing the greatest possible amount of barrel staves with the least possible amount of resistance. It is, or at least it can be used as a helpful adjunct to the improved machine. It can be used, not so much to increase profits as to secure their continuation—which is an object well worthy of striving for under the present system. And for this reason the minister goes on the factory pay roll and the employees get fifteen minutes of his time every morning. The capitalist never makes any innovation in "business" without an eye to ultimate profit, and that in the last analysis is what "good" means from his standpoint.

All this may at first glance not appear very clearly. Let us attempt to make it as plain to our readers as it undoubtedly is to the owner of the stove factory in Indiana, and others. (For he is not alone in this matter), who strive to "do good" to their wage slaves in the same manner.

The capitalist class are observant—they never overlook the effects produced upon the workers by the manufacture of "issues"—(that is mainly the reason why they own the wealth of the world to day), and are always on the alert to use these things so as to distract the attention of the fellows whose labor piles up wealth for them. In the political field, these "issues" have been used with much success, and the working class have been utilized as a sort of a shattercock to be battered around between protection and free trade, imperialism and anti-imperialism, trust and anti-trust, etc., and during this time they were producing wealth for the parties who were thus playing with them in the political field, and were under the delusion that they themselves were the players. All this was of course very satisfactory, but it didn't prevent them from quarrelling with their masters as to the terms on which they should produce. Politically, their credulity was all that could be desired, but economically they after made trouble through their labor organizations, strikes, boycotts, etc. Consequently if this tendency to revolt could be smothered down all would be lovely, and just here is where "religion" comes into the game.

Now let us state, that there is religion unconnected with profits, although its adherents, who are known as Socialists, are yet in the minority. There is also a bogus "religion" which is part and parcel of the system of exploitation by which the wage earner is robbed and enslaved by the owners of capital, and it is this sham that the latter always utilize when they submit to the in "doing good" to the working class. They have observed that the workingman who imbibes (honestly enough it may be), a considerable portion of this brand of "religion" tends to become docile, obedient, and respectful to his masters. They have noticed that he is prone to consider rebellion against the present order of things as wicked and evil, and that he therefore looks upon militant trade unionism and its strikes and boycotts as things which are to be avoided by every "good" man. He regards this world as a place of probation or "a vale of tears," to use a popular phrase, and looks upon heaven as his home, and in consequence striving after earthly things is not only evil but a waste of time. The evils which afflict him here are but sent as trials which he proves his fortitude by enduring in silence. If anything is to be done for the workingman it must of course be inaugurated by his lawful masters, the property owners, the people who give him employment. The bare mention of the class struggle fills him with horror; he thinks such a thing "should" not exist and therefore it does not. His philosophy inculcates non-resistance to evil, turning the cheek to the smiter and believing that the powers that be are ordained of God. He has a reputation to sustain as a "religious" person, and this can only be maintained by allowing his interests as a workingman to become secondary to the interests of the party who employ him. The employing classes have noticed these effects produced by this sham "religion" and see in its spread and influence a long vista of peaceful and uncomplaining wage slavery, and uninterrupted profit. Naturally enough, therefore, they want this type of workman, and are willing to place upon their pay rolls those whose teachings tend to produce it.

Not infrequently this ideal workingman reaps some material advantages from the mental attitude which his "religion" imposes upon him. When the boss promotes him to some petty position of trust in his employ, he imagines that his intrinsic piety has procured him this favor. He does not see that the quantities which he displays on account of this piety fit him for being "diligent in his master's business," which means that the "religion" he professes is conducive to the profits of his master and that for this reason alone his promotion takes place. Yet this is exactly the same reason why any individual worker finds favor in the eyes of his employer, though in every case it is disguised under the pretext of a reward for being "good."

Let us suppose that this Indiana minister told these employees the truth, if he informed them that the labor of their class produced all wealth and that it rightfully belonged to the producers; if he questioned their wisdom in making ten barrel staves and giving nine to the boss while keeping one themselves; if he told them that they could secure the full product of their labor by making themselves owners of the means of production and distribution; that hunger, cold, want, nakedness, crime, prostitution and vice were chiefly results of the present social and economic system; that heaven was not away off somewhere in the clouds but could be brought here on earth; if, in short, he preached a real religion to them. How long do you think his name would stay on the pay roll of the factory owner?

And yet he would be "doing good" from the standpoint of the employees, but it will be readily seen that this conception of "good" is not that of the man who engaged his services. Real religion will make men free; the preaching of the sham "religion" will only tend to make them content with the present economic slavery. Real religion has no connection with the capitalist profit system—on the contrary it will destroy it. Sham religion is inseparably bound up with capitalism and will perish with it.

There will be a "revival" of religion in the twentieth century, but it will not be just what the glib-tongued servants of capitalism prophesy. It will be a "mighty awakening" of the working class to a knowledge of the fact that the social problems, with which reformers and so-called "religious" people are eternally tinkering, cannot be solved without a complete economic revolution, and that upon their class falls the task of making the change.

In the meantime, as "self-preservation is the first law of nature," the sham will endeavor to perpetuate itself, and the Indiana episode is but an illustration of the struggle for existence in this respect. The services of the Presbyterian minister are in request only because his employer sees in them a possible perpetuation of profit-making. His efforts may perhaps result in the production of a few non-resistant individuals of the type we have described, but to the working class as a class he has no message—nothing to tell. If he had, his services would not be required. Nevertheless the capitalist must make use of every possible weapon to maintain the supremacy of his class, and it is for this reason that he insists that "religion" must be preserved for the people, though his class stand in little need of it for their personal use, as is well illustrated by the attitude of the Indiana factory owner.

A COMPLETED "DEAL" IN MUTUAL DEFENCE

"The Anthracite Coal Situation Is Settled."

MORGAN & CO. ACQUIRE STOCK

Just Keep Thinking What This "Deal" Really Means—It May Perhaps Concern You Somewhat.

A special dispatch to the Chicago Record says:

J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. announce that they have acquired the stock of the Pennsylvania Coal Co. having paid therefor 73 1/2 per cent of par.

As 100 per cent is par, 73 1/2 per cent is 63 1/2 per cent above par, which means, that what all of us pay for coal is hereafter to be "divided up" on a basis of paying interest on 63 1/2 per cent more than the original capital. As the actual capital of the Pennsylvania Coal company was $2,000,000.00 and they have been paid 73 1/2 per cent of par then it follows that the amount paid to the coal company for their (?) property was $2,700,000.00.

The miners employed by this coal company, the men whose labor makes it possible for most of us to keep warm, what about them? They struck recently for higher wages because they claimed that their small earnings compelled them to live like animals, allowing in it since their employers, these good (?) men who have just received $2,700,000.00 more than their property was worth, were assuring us, on their honor, mind you, that they were paying their miners more really than they could afford to? And how long ago is it since Mr. Curtis, the able correspondent of the Chicago Record, was using the two first columns of that paper to prove a whole lot of things which this transaction contradicts.

Notice that the special dispatch says: "The Anthracite Situation Is Settled." Who put coal in the earth and for what purpose is it there?

To whom did the Creator intend that the coal should belong. Is "The Anthracite Situation Settled." Have all of us been consulted. Do we consent that for as long a time as we expect of hope to use hard coal we are willing to pay six per cent on $2,700,000.00 more than the original, the necessary capital, meanwhile agreeing that our fellow beings who dig the coal shall live like animals?

The great and good (?) men who are the beneficiaries of capitalism, the present plan of "dividing up" accuse the advocates of socialism of "wanting to divide up." They are indignant at the mere suggestion that if all of us were to set about it some better way for all of us to share what all of us produce might be invented. With all of the advocates of socialism pleading for the privilege of inventing such a plan, these merry, great men nudge each other and solemnly declare that socialism would do away with invention and with all incentive to progress.

Claiming to believe in progress, which means change if it means anything, our so-called "better classes" assert that the present plan of "dividing up" must always prevail because it always has prevailed; that we cannot adopt any new plan, any just plan, any Christian, humane, brotherly plan, because to do so "we must change" human nature, and you can't "change" human nature you know, any these pretending believers in progress.

While the present system is transforming cities and villages in the factory districts into what is called "shantytowns" by the employment of women rather than men, compelling husbands, sons and brothers to leave home in search of work, the factory owning class is heard loudly asserting that "socialism would tend to break up family relationships."

When all of us really believe in progress, in invention, in right family relationships, we shall be willing to apply the science of mathematics to our social and industrial problem and we will then discover to the delight of all of us, the present rich and the present poor, that it is a heap easier to change our human nature than it is to try to live along against the odds which now prevail.

When all of us get the true meaning of the injunction "work out your own salvation," and each of us is not ready not only to talk and brag and pray about it but to actually "work" out "our" own salvation, then it may be said in truth "The Anthracite Situation Is Settled."

—From February "Mixed Stocks."

"The statistics show that in many of the New England factory towns the women outnumber the men nearly two to one, while in some sections of the West where the New England husbands, sons and brothers have gone in search of work there are ten men to one woman."

The "last tribute" to Queen Victoria has been paid. The first to King Edward will soon become due.

Get your neighbor to read the Call.

World's Parasites Justify Each Other's Plundering.

ROYALTY IS NOT AN EXPENSE.

Republican Paper Says Victoria Was Underpaid and That Edward Should Get 50 Per Cent More.

Not so long ago it was an article of faith with believers in republican institutions that the monarchs of Europe were useless, parasitical creatures, who drained away the resources of the nations over which they ruled, without giving any adequate returns therefor. Any allusion to the expenditures involved in maintaining these people was generally made for the purpose of comparison, and the workingman, with lived under republican institutions was prone to congratulate himself upon the fact that he was free from the demands of these bloodsuckers, who were represented as taking advantage of the folly and stupidity of their subjects, to plunder them. This view was always held as a good republican doctrine until a few years ago, but now it seems that it is destined to undergo a complete revision.

For example, speculation on the income of the late Queen Victoria has furnished many columns of matter for the most prominent English journals during the last two weeks, but never once has it been hinted that this accumulation of wealth was only made possible by the folly of the British people. Had Victoria died twenty years ago these same journals would have been filled with diatribes upon the useless expense of royalty, and contemptuous sneers for the political ignorance of those who supported it. There would also have been columns devoted to showing the superiority of republican institutions.

But the quiet march of events has caused a complete reversal of these once popular criticisms. "Society," as at present constituted, has grown so distinctly parasitical, that it is no longer good policy to call attention to any one particular form of a species. The royal parasite is overlooked so that the still more voracious industrial parasite may also escape notice.

So distinctly has the necessity of revision in this matter forced itself upon the attention of Queen Victoria, that she is actually represented as being in need of an expense, an actual source of revenue to that most worthy person, the British "tax payer." It seems that at the beginning of her reign the Queen made a bargain with parliament, by which, in consideration of a "civil list" of $1,000,000 annually, she conceded to the state the major portion of the crown property during her life. Commenting upon this transaction the Tribune of last Sunday prints the following:

It was not the Queen or her family who made the best of this bargain, but the state—that is to say, the tax payer. For owing to the careful management and extraordinary development of the crown property, coupled with the amazing growth in the value of building land during the last sixty years, the treasury has during the greater portion of the Queen's reign managed to net profits of $600,000, and during the last quarter of a century of over $1,000,000 a year, from the proceeds of the crown property after all the expenses of its management, the civil list of the Queen, and the allowances of the royal princes and princesses had been deducted. SO THAT INSTEAD OF GIVEN VICTORIA AND HER FAMILY HAVING BEEN A SOURCE OF ANY EXPENSE TO THE NATIONAL EXCHEQUER, IT IS PROBABLE THAT THEY HAVE BENEFITED THE STATE TO THE EXTENT OF AT LEAST $1,000,000. THAT IN NO WAY THEY HAVE BENEFITED THE TAX PAYER FROM THE AMOUNT OF FISCAL RICHES, thanks to the bargain concluded by Queen Victoria with parliament some four-and-sixty years ago.

What other meaning can be attached to this extraordinary flip-flop than that the world's parasites are plainly the common necessity imposed upon them of defending the robbery and plunder of the working class irrespective of the form it may take?

But not content with justifying the institution of monarchy from a financial point of view, the Tribune calls attention to the singular virtues of the royal family in being satisfied with the amount of plunder extracted, and managing to exist upon it. It says further:

It will be admitted that not only was the late Queen Victoria SINGULARLY MODEST in the demands which she made upon parliament for the maintenance of the royal family, but that the latter likewise DESERVE AN IMMENSE AMOUNT OF CREDIT FOR HAVING MANAGED TO LIVE WITHIN THEIR INCOME.

The "singular modesty" of her Majesty's demands is attested as follows further on in the article:

Victoria was saluted with $2,000,000 per annum, which sixty years ago purchased double the purchasing power that it does today.

This confession of the difference in "purchasing power" is of course brought in to show that Her Majesty was in reality underpaid. When a capitalist statistician expatiates upon the vast increase of workmen's wages since that time, he conveniently ignores this fact.

The article concludes with an intimation that King Edward should be able to exact 50 per cent more than his predecessor and shows that the difference wouldn't cost the "tax payer" anything. It says:

Under the circumstances it is probable that if King Edward decides upon surrendering the crown property to parliament he will stipulate for a civil list of at least $3,000,000 a year, which the state can well afford to pay and still retain a surplus of the crown revenues in its hands. That is to say, it will be able to pay him this amount without taking a single penny out of the pockets of the British tax payers.

Not a word, however, about the laborers, who produce this wealth. The "tax payer," the "property owner," is the only thing to be considered. But the reader need not harbor the delusion that in thus justifying the exactions of British royalty the Tribune dares anything for the institution of royalty as such. Its real object is to help in erecting a shield for the capitalist robbers of this country, the Carnegies, Rockefellers, Morgans, etc., whose exploiting powers are beyond all comparison greater than that of the combined royalty of Europe. Just as the peasant proprietors of France are used as a bulwark by the privileged classes of that country so the royal parasites can be utilized for the security of the large industrial vermin in all lands.

The Campaign Fund.

Conradson—The "man of destiny" has stated recently that the "municipal campaign cannot be run on wind," and he knows what he is talking about.

We want to ask you if you think the Socialist campaign is an exception?

If you think not, then you must supply what is needed and that is money. It is needed more than any other thing. If Harrison admits that even "timid" honored principles cannot be supported without money, you will see that it is impossible to support any sort of campaign without it. Money must be forthcoming, and there are none besides yourselves who should supply it. The propaganda of socialism depends upon the who want socialism—not upon its enemies. Let us see your names on the list next week.

The "Morality" Market.

Chicago aldermen are clamoring for more pay in the interests of "morality." They want $1,000 per year instead of $1,500 and a petition to that effect will shortly be forthcoming. This is how one of them puts the case:

"Many a poor boy has gone wrong and has taken something from a corporation because he could not live on the salary the city pays. Raise the wages and the MORALITY of the Council will be brought up."

This plan is absolutely correct. People who get only $1,500 per year cannot be expected to be as "moral" as those who receive $3,000. Money and "morality" go hand in hand. This is proved by the fact that those who have the most of it are the most "moral," and the capitalist press, which cites the Rockefellers, Carnegies, Wanapakers, and Armour as patterns of "morality," attest its truth. The only place where this theory fails to work is perhaps in the case where members of trades unions make a concerted demand for higher wages. That is distinctly "immoral." But then there are exceptions to every rule.

Little Judas Wants a Job.

So far as the Republican politicians of the banner sort are concerned, the full dinnerpail promise has not been deemed to any great extent. Governor Yates it is said is being driven to a sick bed by the job-hunters who lusted for his candidacy in November last. This is how a daily paper describes the perseverance of these "out of work" men:

Seasoned politicians say that, not in years has Springfield seen such an unseemly exhibition of office-seeking. The men who want places and ordinary jobs sit on the mayor's doorstep waiting to get at him the instant he wakes in the morning. They waylay him on his sidewalk to the statehouse, they lurk in nooks and corners ready to dart out and butt-hole him while he is passing. They crowd the executive office and all the passageways of the executive mansion. The politicians who refer to this as an "unseemly" are no doubt already provided for. The wretched little creatures who helped dupe the working class with bogus "prosperity" are now better able to appreciate the humor of the Republican fairy tale as to "the job seeking man."

Couldn't the little business men induce Mrs. Nation to go up against the department store when she visits Chicago?

Count Boni Castellani thinks a Franco-American alliance would be a good thing. He doubtless speaks from personal experience.

The spring crop of "me too" Socialists already shows a "promising" growth.

Socialist Pointers

City hall politics will bring no bread and butter to the rank and file.

If time hangs heavily on your hands get a nominating petition and circulate it.

Even if we elect no candidates, the work we do this spring will count some day.

Just to counteract the cold weather let us make the campaign warm for a few weeks.

Five thousand party members would mean a Socialist daily in Chicago. Ever think of that?

Are the people of England men or only children, that they take King Edward seriously?

Of course we still remember the Maine; that is what the contractors told us we went to war about.

The legislature of Illinois was elected by the votes of workmen and they should be ashamed of it.

Are you posted so that you can meet the enemy in an argument? If not, why not? Literature is cheap.

We might as well utilize this spring as any other time to teach that municipal ownership is not socialism.

Call postals are the same old price. Don't you think you could sell a few? You will never know without trying.

The Workers' Call likes to have a banner week with every issue, and its readers can make each one that way.

The little fellows who are being frozen out of the railroad business will soon be howling for government ownership.

You did not read the names of any workmen in the recent army appointments. They neglected to have industrial fathers.

Josiah Flynt who discovered that Harrison is a friend of the tramp, might have looked farther and found that the tramp has a vote.

It is hard to see how Socialist unity is to be prevented when everybody wants it. Let us then drop the subject and make Socialists.

Where did all the men come from to shovel snow? Those who did not have jobs, you know, were only in that state because they would not work.

The ship subsidy bill is not even claimed to be in the interests of the laboring man. Gold standard and tariff were for him alone, you know.

The fact that aldermen want increased salaries goes to show that they feel they represent the commercial classes. Workmen do not get $1,500 a year on an average.

The people of Massachusetts are beginning to realize that Socialists do not wear horns after looking at Curry and McCarthy, and John Collins of Chicago is as handsome as either of them.

The World Making Motive

Some Extracts From Professor Herron's Lecture in Central Music Hall on Sunday, February 3d.

Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather on last Sunday, a large audience gathered in the Central Music Hall to listen to the address of Professor Geo. D. Herron, who took for his subject: "The World Making Motive." Several extracts from the lecture are here reprinted:

"The bottom fact of this age is its faith. It is the age of faith just because it is the age of doubt, because it takes nothing for granted and takes nothing on the word of authority; and its faith is the cause of all its seeming unfaith. The time of revolution is always the time of faith; and the world is today full of revolution, and every institution in danger of judgment and dissolution, while professional faiths are being swept off the board—faiths religious, faiths political, faiths scientific. Ours is the time of daring, in which deep calls and answers unto deep; in which the gods stand with sneaking phras of defense before the judgment-seat of the downmost man; in which the soul of labor is about to challenge the soul of the universe to come forth and show itself; in which the human earth is getting ready to defy the heavens to interfere, while it finds within itself a principle of being by which it may justify the tragedy of the history that has been, and proceed to make a history according to its liking and without tragedy. All this is faith—the faith that will not submit to take orders from gods, priests, and politicians, but venture to get truth first-hand, out of the raw materials of life and work; the faith that will not support the parasitic system of religious and political middle-men—the system that lives upon the common life, and that gives adulterations and discolorations of truth to men for the price of their souls and their liberty. It is when men set their sails upon unknown seas, when they make ventures that involve risks greater than they can foresee, but which they willingly take as they come, when they laughingly accept death on any terms it may dictate, because of the sweetness and freedom of the quest for truth—it is then that there is faith in the soul. And when men count truth so precious that they are ready to fill all that they have for it, and dig under the foundations of institutions for it, without minding the ruins that fall about their heads, then it is all up with the authorities; for a world-making faith is abroad, and according to their faith will the world be unto men."

Many of our specific problems will not be solved; they will be swept off the road by greater issues. Before we have passed upon the question of public ownership of certain utilities, the utilities will be obsolete. If we listen to the academic caution of the economist, and have a little sense of truth or of humor as the religious newspaper, we may be traveling to other planets in air ships before we have spiritual nerve to decide whether the people shall own their public highways. A lot of the things that we talk about reforming will be out of use before we are through with our talking. While Louis XVI was exhausting himself in trying to decide incidental matters, the people decided such weightier matters for themselves that the king was out of a job. I imagine we shall have ceased to have any possible use for our American constitution long before the politicians have decided whether we may touch so sacred a capitalistic thing, long before our solemn supreme court shall have decided whether the constitution belongs to the people, or is a mere instrument of government, to be used or discarded at the pleasure of our governors and probably long before this same supreme court discerns what an ancient and humorous specter it also has become in the eyes of the people.

Nor can we of today construct systems that will solve the problems of tomorrow, and we ought not to if we could. We have no right to impose our will upon those who come after us, as our fathers imposed upon us their will. The government of the living by the dead is the chief of social follies and tyrannies. Most political reformers are jumbling and falling because they are trying to solve twentieth century problems with eighteenth century phrases, fastened upon us by the armed and guarded institutions in which we are imprisoned by our fathers. To believe only in the God of the dead, to believe that God was in Moses or in Jesus more than us, to believe that political wisdom was in Hamilton or in Jefferson more than in the common life of today—this is the mother of all the atheisms. And it is the atheism which we strive to perpetuate when we think to construct a system that will rule the future and solve its problems. We but lay up for our children the tragedy of ignorance, the tyranny of atheism and the slavery of superstition, when we try to bind them with laws and systems we think liberating ourselves.

A far-reaching ideal is commonly objected to as a motive, on the ground that human nature is unchanging and that it is not idealistic. And that you cannot change human nature is the most vulgar and unscientific of all objections to human progress. It is the cheapest and most indolent form of the old fatalism that makes men the victims of something outside of himself. There is nothing outside of human nature as mighty as itself, on that can prevent it from being what it longingly and persistently wills to be. The nature that is in us and for us is greater than any so-called natural laws of human tendencies and habits that are against us. Human nature is not some abstract and fatal thing other than ourselves. We are human nature, and we have power to change our lives any and every moment, as in fact we are all the time doing. Human nature is utterly different now from what it was a decade ago, and it will be very different a decade hence from what it is now. The changing of human nature has been the sole business of history. You are not startling the idealist when you say to him that he must change, for man, nature—as though that means meant something—before he can get his ideal realized. Certainly, that is precisely what his ideal is for—to change men into the likeness of the divine reality which he really is, and which his ignorance and servility never wholly hides.

When this commonplace objection to progress is analyzed, it nearly always turns out that by human nature is meant that which is mean and selfish, treacherous and unreliable. And it is assumed that these qualities must be reckoned with as fundamental, and made the basis of appeal and motive in practical undertakings. But what would you think of a man who should order his life on the assumption that the highest attainable health could come to him only through keeping disease in his system, because disease has always been present in the world? Yet he is acting any more irrationally than the civilization which bases its production and distribution on the assumption that safety and prosperity lie only in economic and legal coercion, because men have always been kept in some form of slavery? Is he acting with any greater madness than the society which forms its faiths and its institutions on the plan of a penitentiary system, because some men are bad and shiftless? Is he acting any more strangely than the church which unconsciously insists on keeping the devil in the world, in order that it may find perpetual employment in saving men from him? We can never build a free and just society upon faith in what is evil, as we are practically trying to do; or upon unfaith in the good, which is the worst form of faith in evil. We can build wisely and enduringly only when we make the highest good we know the foundation of our building. But before we can so build, we shall have to deeply repudiate our religions, and be moved by the kingdom of heaven from our salvations; for these are at bottom largely a fearful devil worship under the superstition that they are God-worship; that is, they are a gross faith in the power and presence of evil, and a terrible unfaith in the presence and power of the good.

Again, a revolutionary or reconstructive motive is always objected to on the ground that it seems destructive to the old or existing order. And in this case, things are just what they seem. The idea and the friends of Jesus seem destructive to the idea and the friends of Caesar; and so they are. The rise of free individuality seems to smother the end of the high priest; and so it does. When viewed from the monarchical or representative basis of interest, the coming of democracy seems to be the overturning of law and government; and so it is. The man who takes a free look at life seems to authority to be pronouncing its doom, and that is just what the man with the free look is doing. Capitalism sees in socialism the destruction of what it regards as orderly and sacred, and capitalism sees right. But the idea of Jesus does not back out of the world in order to leave it in the possession of Caesar and his robber friends; democracy does not retreat before the king or legislature, the free human spirit yields neither to the menace of the church nor to the assault of authority, and socialism does not stay its course at the combined bidding of all sorts of world-powers.

The Socialists have gained a seat at Kornburg, where Seitz was elected in opposition to the anti-Semitic candidate. This victory is particularly important because it is not a case in which the votes were directly given to the candidate but he was elected indirectly; it is the first time that this has occurred. This makes the Socialists members in the Reichstag.

The Brussels Socialists are in a fight. They are always doing something at the Maison du Peuple, the building which was built with the profits realized by co-operative trading. They have just organized an exhibition there, a technical and artistic show, which is a great success. "INCENTIVE OF GAIN."

The Reward of Gains and the Reward of Capitalism Illustrated and Contrasted.

The argument, that socialism, by removing the spur and the lash of the struggle for existence, would destroy progress and that the incentive of gain is the well-spring of ambition and of advancement, have been an often exploded, that the subject might be dismissed, to make way for other and more pressing questions. In the realm of literature, invention, art, astronomy, and all the branches of science, it has been shown that the greatest progress has been made where the size of gain has been about, and that poverty appears not as a spur but as a hindrance to advancement. It must be admitted, however, that in the arts of adulteration of goods, swindling, tippling, false ideas, corruption, judges and legislators, and discovering new forms of vice, the incentive of gain has been predominant.

He who is passing the subject to your more distant observation, in a recent copy of a standard music journal, appears an article on "The Origin of Famous Songs." Says the writer:

"Song writing today is quite an art. There are more publishers and more singers than in former years. You've got to buy a P. M. S. (Publishers' Music Society) card, or you can't get your songs into the hands of the publishers. The song must be accepted by the publishers before a publisher will take the trouble even to read the manuscript."

Of course you remember poor Charles Graham? No. He died a few months ago, a subject of poverty, though he was one of the most famous of song writers. He wrote "Light and Day" and his composition was much sought after by publishers. If the Waters could sing as "Thy Flow," "Two Little Girls in Blue," "The Picture that Was Told," "The Picture that Was Told," and other popular songs. After writing the song "Two Little Girls in Blue," Graham went from one publishing house to another, and tried to secure the manuscript of "Light and Day" for a song. He failed to get an engagement. No one seemed to want the song. At last, in despair, he decided to publish it himself. He sold it for $2.00. Well, I guess you know the rest. The song was one of the biggest hits in years, and is probably sung somewhere tonight. The publisher who bought the composition says he made nearly $5000 out of it.

The article goes on to say: "The Picture that Was Told" was the song which made Graham famous. The song was published in the "Picture that Was Told" magazine. The song was published in the "Picture that Was Told" magazine. The song was published in the "Picture that Was Told" magazine.

From the foregoing it will be seen that Graham had genius and died in poverty. He lacked capitalistic instincts. Genius gets $25. Capitalism, the "encourager of art," gets $49,999. The genius which produces the gem, "If the Waters could sing as 'Thy Flow,'" did not have the "up-to-date" shown by some "clever" song writers of the present day, who know how to procure "high prices" by educating the nation in a due appreciation of "Ma Carmina Ruc," "Ma Rag-time Flo," "I'm Living Easy," "Take Your Place and Go," and "The Certainly is Sweet." Such high-class art is produced by the incentive of gain.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

A re-organization of the Socialists of the new Eleventh ward will take place next Monday night, at the headquarters of the Socialist Educational club, 1123 Milwaukee avenue. All Socialists in this ward are urged to be present.

Comrade J. H. Hard spoke last Thursday evening to a large audience, at the headquarters of the Thirty-first Ward branch, 608 S. Halsted street. The agitation meetings which this branch have arranged for every Thursday night are very successful. The crowds which attend these meetings increase every week.

The Twenty-sixth Ward branch held an interesting meeting last Wednesday evening, at their headquarters, north-west corner of Southport and Belmont avenues. The speaker of the evening was Comrade Walter Thomas Mills. A good crowd was present, and the meeting was enlivened by an interesting discussion.

The Twenty-fifth Ward branch will give their second entertainment next Tuesday, February 12th, at Prohibition Hall, 561 Southport avenue. A good program has been arranged and a good time generally is promised. There will be plenty of good refreshments furnished at the meeting. In fact the refreshments are one of the good parts of the program. Admission will be 2 cents a person. Everybody is invited to attend.

"The Ethics of Revolution" was the subject of an address by Comrade J. H. Kerr, last Sunday evening, at the commodious headquarters of the Twenty-fifth Ward branch, 561 Southport avenue. The lecture was well attended and the almost impossible condition of the streets on account of the heavy snow did not deter a good crowd from attending. The address was very instructive and made a deep impression upon all present. Next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock at the above address Comrade P. W. Knox will speak. His subject will be "The Ethics of Crime."

Comrade A. Sherman addressed the German comrades of the Thirty-third Ward last Friday evening at their headquarters, 919 South Chicago avenue. The subject of his address was "The Ethics of Capitalism." The lecture was very interesting and made a deep impression upon all present. At the meeting of the (new) Eighty-third Ward branch at Sherman Hall, South Chicago, Saturday evening, Comrade J. H. Kerr gave an address on the subject "The Future of the Trusts." The speaker reviewed the progress of concentration in industry through the forms of partnership and corporation, and showed that it was due to the natural law of evolution. And just as surely as the trust gave way to the industrial revolution, and for the people as a whole. The address was enthusiastically received by the audience which consisted largely of persons who were unacquainted with the subject. The speaker spoke on the subject "The Ethics of Socialism."

THE GAME OF CHESS.

An Old Story of Its Origin Containing an Analogy to the Present Work of Socialism.

In an old book on the "game of chess," a letter is inserted in the introduction, written by an Englishman who spent several years in China for the purpose of getting some clue as to the origin of that incomparable game. In that letter the investigator tells of his acquiring knowledge of the Chinese language and the use he put it to in furthering his purpose. He learned, in conversations with Chinese scholars and through reading Chinese books, the Chinese claim to the invention of chess, and he repeats the tale whose substance is about as follows: A great Chinese general who lived and died over 5000 years ago, led his army into the cold country to the north of his native land and conquered the peoples as he proceeded. But winter overtook the conquerors and they had to quarter themselves until the cold weather should pass, being unable in their winter quarters to do anything but wait. The general that such a life would be detrimental to the morals of the soldiers and lead to dissipation which would undo them for the task before them, the winter broke, so he bused himself to produce an amusement to take up their time and train their minds. The result was the conception of the game of chess, which was founded on military and strategic principles, and so well did it take with the soldiers that they occupied the whole winter in its study, effecting the double purpose of shortening the winter and disciplining the army for its future conflicts. When the summer opened in the following summer it was victorious on every side.

Whether this story is true or not is so far as the chess game feature is concerned, it nevertheless contains the kernel of wisdom which, being mingled, makes the present vice-rules now being carried on in the large cities of the United States, futile. For, aside from the poverty, want and wretchedness the one great cause of vice as it exists at the present time is the state of suspense in which the world is held in other words it is now a case of "waiting." The conquering march of progress in "winter quarters" as it were, and the armies are occupied in waiting for the advance. The "winter" which closes them in is the system within which they are confined, and until it breaks, they cannot advance but must pause, and during that pause they will either deteriorate, or busy themselves in acquiring the vigor and knowledge necessary to advance when the bonds of the old system have been burst asunder or rotted out.

The same winter which closed in the Chinese army from the South operated against the army of the North but they being acclimated perhaps held their antagonism in contempt. This analogy can be applied to the present case of the world. The system which binds the producers is hardest on them because they do the work, while the capitalists look upon their aspirations with contempt, and having tradition and the system behind them, they feel sure of victory. But the general who sent forth the call to the workers to unite provided them with the "game" to train their minds for the successful carrying out of their mission. It was founded on the principles and history of industry and a thorough study of its intricacies would fit the workers to take intelligent part in the industrial struggle before them. The "game" is the Socialist theory.

And the great general (Mars) succeeded well. The army of workers which he called together is busily engaged during this period of winter quartering, in the study of this theory while the enemy, the capitalists and their armies of retainers—is breaking out with the blotches of vice and disease, the symptoms of deterioration caused by the backing up of advancement.

The attempt of capitalist reformers to remove these surface indications of their decaying policy, shows that their employers are content with the waiting tactics and willing to let the old thing rot out. But the old thing must present a clean surface, at least in the spots where the capitalists cast their lines, and in order to effect this partial cleanliness, the decaying elements must constantly be removed from their sight. In passing along, however, the odors which arise from the massed masses of corruption are scented on all sides, and its constant repetition causes more and more of the adherents of the abandonment to abandon it and seek companionship with those who aim to abolish its food, let it die or kill it, and then bury it deep down into oblivion. The workers are well equipped for this purpose and the trend of events is revealing to an ever-increasing number that it is their mission. Then why stay on the outside, you workingmen who have not yet joined your "jars in revolution"? Why help to lengthen the waiting game of your oppressors? Come into the quarters of your comrades who are bent on shortening the time of oppression and take up the study of that which keeps their spirits up, and trains them for the final conflict—take up the study of the Socialist theory. You will find that it gives an answering answer to your doubts as to the future of the workers, that it will hold you in absorbing interest while you are in this period preceding the transition of the world's development, that that interest will shorten the time of your misery both apparently and really, apparently by catering your attention, and really by making of you a mover towards advancement instead of a "waiter" on evolution.

SMOKE UP THERE!

Peculiar Conditions in Zion Render Imported Wages Debatable, but Dowie Blames His Time.

A volume of smoke ascending from the hills of Zion has been waited to the sensitive nostrils of John Alexander Dowie, to the infinite disgust of that great and good man, who is now called upon to decide between piety and profit. Fifty imported lacemakers, with fifty "bulldozers," pipes are responsible for the nuisance.

The founder and owner of the sacred city to the north of Waukegan, has positively forbidden the use of liquor, pork, and tobacco, within his domains, and yet these aliens, imported at great expense, are now dominating the atmosphere of the heavenly city with the fumes of plug cut, in defiance of the rules and regulations laid down by John Alexander Dowie for the preservation of law and order in Zion.

Moral suasion has been unsuccessfully tried to induce them to abandon the abominable practice. Prayers and entreaties have been alike in vain. The lacemakers have expressed their determination to continue smoking despite of the "public opinion" of Zion, and when threatened with dismissal have remained unmoved and unterrified. And yet they have no organization, no union, no "sympathy," or "moral support" from outsiders. But they know that John Alexander Dowie is up against the real thing, just the same.

They have informed that gentleman that if he sends them away he will have to supply their place with other lacemakers from England if he wishes to carry on business, and that if he decides upon that step he will have paid fifty passages for nothing. Like most pious men, John Alexander has a good "business" head on his shoulders and at once saw the point.

Lacemaking is to begin in March. The factories have been built, the machinery purchased and installed, everything is ready for the production of surplus value. Will "business" be deferred until the smoke question has been settled? Not hardly. John Alexander, like a prudent capitalist, has compromised. Orders have been given to the faithful to devote a "short season of prayer" to the end that the ungodly smokers may see the error of their ways and voluntarily abandon their "bulldozers" and plug cut. But lacemaking will begin upon the 1st of March as per schedule.

There are several carpenters in this capitalist heaven, who, it is said, indulge in the filthy habit of chewing tobacco. They will be brought before the general overruler and asked how about it. It is not likely that they will be able to put up the same front as the lacemakers, with a like success. Carpenters don't have to be imported.

In the meantime it is safe betting that the sweet taste of profits will offset the villainous smell of tobacco smoke. In the opinion of the reverend exploiter, the lacemakers may enjoy their temporary victory, but when the industry is fairly established and other lacemakers appear on the scene, John Alexander will get even, and the smokers will be expelled from the heavenly city to find a job elsewhere. All things come to him who waits.

ONE COMMON PRINCIPLE.

The Bond Which Will Ultimately Unite the Different Socialist Bodies in the Near Future.

Five distinct races of people inhabit this planet, but all of them are human beings, differing only as regards color and creed. There are five different continents on the earth, all essentially the same in composition, and differing only in location and extent of surface. And so it is with Socialists at present. There are many different kinds of Socialists, yet without exception they all believe in the same fundamental principle, viz., the collective ownership of the means of life. There may be a dozen different parties or leagues calling themselves socialist and believing themselves to be independent of each other, and yet they are in reality the same.

If all these different bodies of Socialists were brought together under one roof and asked what the fundamental principles of socialism were they would with scarcely an exception answer: "the collective ownership of the means of life."

And yet we find these Socialists holding one principle in common, and differing only in their methods and tactics in bringing their cases before the people, quarreling and exchanging angry glances with each other.

The question then naturally arises: "Why are there so many different socialist parties?" It may be answered by saying that every movement at its commencement and during its early stages of development necessarily has its factions and divisions, just as every new society or organization evolves from a smaller scale. While an organization is immature, the elements competing it are more or less in a state of confusion, but once a permanent organization is formed, the different factions and divisions naturally tend to come together, bound as they are with common interests.

And so it will be with these different socialist bodies. The different socialist bodies are all working towards the same end, and as the movement develops, the different factions and divisions will naturally tend to come together, bound as they are with common interests. It is necessary always to bear in mind that it is a certain conception of socialism that makes the individual claim to be a Socialist, and that it is the recog-

Apex of Capitalist Exploitation Reached by Chicago.

CLASSES CLEARLY DEFINED

Socialist Victory Here Would Mean the Immediate Overthrow of American Capitalism.

The very fact that capitalism has reached its climax in this city lays new duties upon those who are conscious of the tendencies of that capitalism. There is no city on the face of the earth where the spirit of greed is so orthodoxy observed as in Chicago. At no other point is the rule of mammon more absolute, the hideousness of capitalism more obtrusive. Countless foreign observers have told us this. The killing of pork and the hoglessness of the "yards" have become typical of Chicago life, and the most appropriate device that could be suggested for a city seal and coat of arms would be a "hog rampant" with "out for the stuff" as a municipal motto.

There are no divisions of birth, intellect or breeding in the social march of Chicago. There are only the eaters and the eaten. Her geographical democracy prevented the appearance of any natural superiority of elevation in different portions of the city such as have made aristocratic "heights" and "hills" in other cities. Here the best that could be done was to put a little better pens around a portion of the population that were least useful to society and thus transform a section of plutocracy into an aristocracy. But in spite of all precautions new intruders were constantly climbing over the wall and no one dared to ask whether these newly-nude "aristocrats" had arisen through pork, beer, brothels or hotels.

But the hydra influence of capitalism wiped out differences among capitalists, it prevented their formation among laborers and quickly eliminated any original lines of demarcation. From the very fact of its heterogeneous and ever-changing population the nationality line could not be drawn and maintained. With the old Nineteenth ward speaking seventeen languages in as many different colonies it would be a good racial surveyor who could run the curved and twisted line necessary to show the racial divisions. The fiercest exploitation the world has ever known made short work of intellectual lines of demarcation between producers, until the Western Electric works have any quantity of college graduates among its employees working for no more than it pays its porters and less than it is forced to give to teamsters, while Armour Institute graduates in chemistry are working in the Armour packing houses for very much less than their master finds it necessary to pay those who clean intestines for sausage covers.

One of the first things that strikes a Chicago man when he visits the great cities of this or any other country, is the very much larger number of small producers that still remain, compared with those in his native city. It comes as a surprise to one who has been accustomed to see the long lines of "To Rent" signs that act as memorial tablets to the deceased middle class of Chicago, to find that in New York, London, Paris or Brussels, this class is still flourishing in almost countless numbers.

Plutocracy in Chicago stands face to face with exploited democracy with no buffer class between them and no disintegrating strath within their respective ranks. This gives rise to the sharpest class antagonisms known to modern society, and the person who in Chicago talks of "no class distinctions" or of "bringing the various classes together" is either a designing knave, or a philanthropist too hopelessly idiotic concerning social phenomena to be taken seriously.

Read the lives of the class struggle as no sharp that all who look can see that it only remains for the workers to enter in and take possession of their inheritance through the political overthrow of their exploiters. It is no less true that the appointed time is at hand for a downward march of socialism. Read the lives of the class struggle as no sharp that all who look can see that it only remains for the workers to enter in and take possession of their inheritance through the political overthrow of their exploiters. It is no less true that the appointed time is at hand for a downward march of socialism.

All this leads to the conclusion that the progress of socialism in Chicago will be like wildfire among the prairie grass when once its principles have been well understood by even a few men in each of these great industrial centers. Furthermore there is not a shadow of a doubt but what if this city should once fall into the hands of the Socialists that the existence of capitalism would be terminated so far as America is concerned. It has often been said in these latter days that no nation can declare war without the assistance of the packing houses of Chicago. The transportation lines of the greater portion of America focus in this city and their present concentration in a few hands lays all that territory under tribute to those few owners.

What then would be the effect were Chicago to be captured for socialism? It would mean the possession of the vantage point of American capitalism, and the consequent almost immediate downfall of the whole system. It would permit the formation of an industrial unit, not only sufficiently large to be economically independent but large enough to economically dominate a large portion of our present society. It would mean the possibility of the immediate application of the principles of socialism to a greater extent than would be attained by the capture of any other city on earth.

These positions, if true, lead to the conclusion that not only is Chicago the easiest city to capture for socialism, but to the somewhat contradictory position that it is the most important stronghold of capitalism, the key, so to speak, of the industrial situation. All this means increased responsibility and also increased encouragement for Chicago Socialists. It means that every class-conscious worker has a more pressing need than anywhere else on earth to see that his knowledge of socialism is increased and its propaganda more widely spread.

A. M. Simons.

On the Steel of Repentance.

The Chicago Chronicle, organ of the "first principle" Democrats, is desperately trying to convince the capitalist class that there is no taint of socialism in the element which desires "reorganization," a la Grover Cleveland. To this end they make editorial comment upon the failure of a so-called socialist "colony" in Zoor, O., as a proof of the impracticability of socialism. The Chronicle evidently supposes that a continual attack upon things "socialistic" will help retrieve the old reputation of the party and induce the capitalist, business men to entrust them again with office. It is a rather shallow trick at best, and it is hard to believe that it will have the desired effect, for the great capitalist journals could pick a "colony" scheme to pieces with a neatness and dispatch which the Chronicle never dreamed of. But still imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

Mud Throwers Tell Tales.

In a dispute between Mahon and Sulzer upon the floor of the congress a few days ago a glimpse might be obtained of the profound wisdom with which we are governed. Mahon taunted Sulzer with the notorious Boer fund transaction, which left a residue of $18 for the Boers, after expenses amounting to nearly $1,700 had been deducted. Sulzer asked Mahon if he contributed to it. Mahon replied in the negative, giving as a reason the fact that he knew the gang who were running it, and claimed that their benevolence was mostly hypocrisy and cant. Sulzer then "recounted" the Republican who circulated the charges as lies and falsehoods, claiming that he had nothing to do with the disposal of the funds in question. "As there is a disposition to throw mud," said Sulzer, "I'll throw a little myself." He then read a letter which he had received, charging Heath, the secretary of the Republican campaign committee, with being concerned in the appointment of Neely, the Havana post-office thief. Another member moved to appropriate $5,000 for an envoy to the Boer republic, and upon being turned down, another Solon arose and read a poem on the "Man With the Big Mouth," which was received with shouts of laughter.

If the warning poem had not been read at the opportune moment it is quite probable that several other anecdotes would have been related by the disputants. What a mass of round-dribble and rascality could be uncovered were there only some effective method of making our legislators unfold the stores of learning they have acquired in politics.

The Trust Lifts Business Ethics to a Higher Plane.

EVOLUTION OF "MORALITY"

Competition and Speculation Become "Unethical" When They Are No Longer Possible.

Last week a discussion took place at the Women's Club in this city in which the opinion was expressed that "business" was "unethical." This harmless verdict, however, was not permitted to pass unnoticed by that part of the press which is charged with looking after the interests of the great capitalist class in particular, and it at once started in to mould "public opinion" by shifting the accusation upon the shoulders of that stupidly hopeful subject, the little "business man."

So, after a preliminary confession that "business dealings have never embodied the higher ideas of the ages," the "public" is duly informed that one of the most significant tendencies towards making business more "moral" is to be found in the elimination of waste due to competition. The conclusion that Rockefeller, Morgan, and others of that ilk are really engaged in elevating "business" to a higher ethical plane is left to the reader to infer.

The next great aid to this uplifting process is seen in the introduction of uniform prices and terms and the extinction of much of the favoritism, deception and bargain-driving which was characteristic of small competing business establishments before the great moral wave of concentration set in.

Again the "public" is assured that "morality" has gained since "manipulation" in Wall street has succeeded "speculation." The immorality of the latter form of exploitation is only now apparent, since the entrance of Mr. Rockefeller upon the scene of operations has made it all but impossible.

The small exploiter will doubtless find little consolation in the alleged improvement in business morals which has resulted in his elimination, but it is to be hoped that he will now recognize the fact that what is yet left of his class are now considered as an obstacle in the way of business "reform," a hindrance to the coming of the capitalist millennium. It is not alone the pious of the great capitalist class that thus stigmatizes his efforts as immoral, but even the language of the ordinary financial journals convey the same idea. Only recently one of the most influential of these, in reviewing the business of the preceding month, stated that while the number of failures for less than $5,000 showed a large increase, yet the outlook for LEGITIMATE business was good.

The ruling ideas of every age are invariably the ideas of the ruling class, and it is not strange that the more successful exploiter declares that his efforts and methods tend to produce a higher standard of "morality" in business. Lacking economic and political power to restore the "morality" of the earlier period of competition, the disappearing middle class as such, must accept the dictum of their more successful brethren as to what constitutes sound ethics, and while they still uphold the capitalist mode of production they may vainly strive to set aside the verdict. In vain they appeal to the "public opinion" to restore their vanishing status, in vain do they assemble in "anti-trust" conventions to attempt the impossible task of blocking economic progress. The evolution of capitalism is the evolution of "morality." Now that the period of competition is fast passing, now that "speculation" is becoming all but impossible, those whose growing economic power has been instrumental in making them so, do not hesitate to declare them unethical and immoral because they are no longer needed in "legitimate" business. The era of the trust has evolved a "morality" suitable for its own preservation.

There is but one power on earth that can in turn supersede the new business ethic of today, and it is to be found only in the working class, the proletarian, who have nothing to lose by the utter disappearance of capitalism, but on the contrary everything to gain. The "morality" of the trust will survive while economic and political power remains in the hands of its upholders, in short, while the latter remain the ruling class. Socialism, which will raise the working class to that position, is the only power that can finally and effectively declare the present system immoral and unethical, by abolishing it.

When the means of production and distribution are collectively owned by the workers, people will remember with amazement that the Rockefeller-Morgan combination was once considered "gigantic."

ONE STAFF ALONE REQUIRED

Superfluous Employees Will Now Have Opportunity to Get Acquainted with Socialism.

No capitalist transaction has occurred in many years so fraught with educational significance as the great railroad-consolidation deal recently engineered by the Morgan-Vanderbilt-Harriman syndicate, and a class who have heretofore rejected socialism as visionary, are now in a fair way of seeing that the things they have been accustomed to look upon as permanent and "practical," are in reality the vision, while a little more experience will show them that socialism is not only a reality, but the only reality of the present.

The control of transportation having now gravitated into the hands of one group of exploiters, the revolutionizing of this instrument of production may be expected to proceed at once, and incidentally the life conditions of those dependent upon its previous mode of operation will be similarly affected. A host of presidents, directors, traffic managers, freight and passenger agents, superintendents, and other officials, will find that their services can be and will be dispensed with, and that the disturbance of existing relations will ultimately pass downward through every grade of labor employed in operating railroads, leaving as a residue a multitude, who dreaming permanent situations, will waken to find themselves in the "reserve army of industry" amongst the unemployed.

The consolidation took place for the express purpose of saving expenses, which will now appear in increased dividends for the group of shareholders composing the syndicate. A dozen different lines, each with separate staffs of officials and operatives, are now controlled from one central office.

The separate management and operation of each, at once becomes an anomaly, a source of needless expense, which reduces gross profits and must at once be eliminated.

One complete staff is alone required, and can be readily composed of the materials of the dozen old ones, leaving a surplusage with whose future the syndicate are not in the least concerned.

So instead of promotion, those who are even fortunate enough to retain employment, must prepare to step down to a position which they had occupied years before and which they were accustomed to regard merely as a stepping-stone to the positions which they held just previous to the advent of the enterprising syndicate. And even in this they may consider themselves favored, as above the others whose services are no longer required.

These people have in reality no good ground for protest against their apparent evil fortune. They had set their faces sternly against those who advocated a society in which each toiler could be guaranteed absolute security in making a living, the right to produce and own and enjoy their product. They regarded socialism as dangerous—they were "practical" men and looked upon untried innovations with dislike, and now comes an untried innovation which has no respect for their opinions, but considers them merely as a useless expense, and prepares to hurl them into the street.

It is entirely probable that very many of these people, when socialism was brought to their superior attention, hastened to declare that it "wouldn't work." They need have no doubts upon the working efficiency of the new order of things which has declared that they "won't work." Men more "practical" than themselves have assumed the helm.

It is by successive economic revolutions like the above, that the necessity of the great social revolution is impressed upon the minds of men. Whole sections of the middle class forced into the proletarian from time to time, are events which preach socialism louder and with far more conviction than the efforts of a thousand agitators. In acquiring control of, and consolidating the railroad transportation of the country, the syndicate, while reducing expenses, will as certainly increase the number of Socialists. Their action, in which they have no choice, will compel a certain number of men to face their real conditions of life and learn from the past what the future has in store for them. When these men have learned from personal experience that the beneficiaries of the profit-system today may be its victims tomorrow, they will see the necessity of joining with the Socialists for its abolition.

A MODERN "IRON-CLAD."

How the Stockyards Wage Slaves Are Rendered Powerless for Mutual Defence.

The cold weather of last week tended to emphasize the discontent of many of the workmen at the stock yards with a condition imposed upon them before they are accepted in the slavery of the big packers. Little enough at any time are the wages they receive but in the cold of the winter their scantiness makes a smaller showing than ever against the wants which cold weather increases. Therefore it is that the holding back from each man of fifteen dollars in accordance with the provisions of the "iron-clad" as it is called, is a severe hardship to them. The "iron-clad" works in the following manner, viz: In any week in which the laborer works four consecutive days or more, one dollar and fifty cents is withheld from his wages of that period, if he gets less than four consecutive days' time in a week nothing is taken out (he couldn't live and work if it were), this process is followed until the company has fifteen dollars ($15.00) of the worker's money held out against him. Now, if he quits the company without giving ten days' notice, he forfeits the fifteen dollars, but the company may fire him without a moment's warning by paying him his wages and the amount held in the iron-clad. Death comes like a thief in the night. It is at once seen that this deposit of fifteen dollars is practically useless to the worker. If he gets it at all it is accompanied with a notice that his means of life have been severed until he can find service in the slavery of a new master, or if he finds a new master who will impose a less galling yoke, and before going to him gives ten days' due notice so that his place may be filled with a properly picked slave. Of course if a man is driven by sickness or distress in his family to supplicate his master for the deposit he may turn the stony heart to yield the favor, but the "iron-clad" must be put into operation at a future time, gain, to protect the master.

The whole arrangement was put into operation to keep the men from forming unions and striking. The men are now scrambling about it but they can do nothing. No industrial organization, no political union, and the laboring-man's friend, the Chicago American, has not even taken up the case. Therefore the only thing left for them to do is to form an "iron-clad" of their own by uniting politically and at the ballot box showing their power. If such action had no other result, they may be sure it would knock on the head any such tyranny as the "iron-clad" in the quickest possible manner.

The Campaign Fund.

Comrades:—Again it is necessary to call your attention to the financial state of the party, as regards campaign funds. Although subscription lists have been sent out over seven weeks ago, the returns have been exceedingly small, in fact utterly insufficient to make even a pretense at running a campaign.

You are earnestly requested to bend every effort towards securing the necessary funds, as the need is pressing and the campaign cannot be neglected without entailing severe loss to the Socialist movement.

We recognize of course that capitalism leaves you with scanty funds to spare for anything outside of physical necessities. Nevertheless the effort must be made by your class. The poorer you may be, the more need for socialism. Your exploiters are always ready to put up money so as to maintain your slavery. You at least should do proportionately as much for your freedom. Get your names on the list.

The Church Militant.

For thorough-going brutality and a downright lust for blood and rapine, commend us to your sanctimonious man of God, and his journals. Amid all the jingo hooligan howling of the past eighteen months no voice, have shrieked louder than those of the people and press which are supposed to be devoted to the "Prince of Peace." The most outrageous atrocities in South Africa and China have met the hearty and enthusiastic approval of both parson and paragonical press, and many of our readers will doubtless remember the incident narrated by Dr. Conan Doyle of a parson who expressed his indignant impatience because the soldiers were not quick enough to setting fire to a Boer farm. The following from the "Church Times" fairly represents the clerical sentiment with regard to warfare: "There are nambypamby individuals in our midst today who think to build by pen and inklet the New Jerusalem in England's green and pleasant land." He who would learn to love must first learn to hate; and the man who would shrink from using shot, shell and bayonet is a poor fellow who will become extinct by the operation of the law of the survival of the fittest."—London "Justice."

J. W. C.—Your inquiry regarding socialism and atheism can perhaps best be answered by referring you to the opening paragraph of Professor George D. Herron's speech at Central Music Hall on February, 1st. It can be found in the Workers' Call, date February 1st, on the third page, and will, we think, be accepted by most Socialists as generally correct. The entire extract may also be profitably read as throwing additional light on the subject. Towards what is usually termed "free thought," "secularism," or "atheism," with which the names of Ingersoll, Bradlaugh, and others, are frequently connected, socialism stands in an attitude of indifference—it is neither hostile nor partisan. Socialism has no time to devote to the "Mistakes of Moses," or the arguments pro and con relating to "inspired books," or infallible popes and churches. It deals primarily with economics as the basis upon which human society is built, and seeks the overthrow of the capitalist system by the united political action of the working class.

DEATH TERROR OF COMPETITION.

Because the rubber trust and the independent rubber manufacturers are to engage in a competitive war, the editor of the Times-Herald vents his satisfaction and points out that competition is not stifled by trusts. Even these monster industries will have competitors if better machinery and methods are secured and taken up by enterprising business men, and in the cutting of prices that follows, who benefits? Certainly not the manufacturers; for they often sell at a loss, and although we know it is not done from philanthropic motives still the consumers benefit by it. Thus discourses the learned editor. But who are the consumers? Why the producers of course form the largest number of consumers. Then the producer, when he turns consumer, in buying something in the rubber line while this price war is in progress, will get the full product of his labor as far as his purchase of such goods is concerned. This action is not philanthropy though, this allowing the producer such a great boon as to get his rubbers at cost; no, this is done to keep the other fellow from getting profits, and as long as he can't get profits he will be forced out of business by the stronger competitor, who will then be able to add a per cent of profit to his selling prices and make the consumer dig up for the past benefits. The Times-Herald of course says nothing about that part of the matter. "See what you are getting now; forget about all of your troubles; don't think about what is to come; but look at the benefit you are receiving from the rubber war."

Once in a while something happens that gives the patriotic editor a chance to show that the country is not going to the dogs yet awhile.
But to the Socialist, the fact pointed out is evidence that the last stage of competitive production in the rubber line is about to end. The smaller or weaker of the two large fish is about to be devoured. The victor will see to it that any "better machinery" will come into its possession, and thereafter the economically ignorant editor will have to scan the field for some lagging industry to show that competition is not dead.

A TWELVE MONTHS STRUGGLE.
After a struggle lasting over a year the building trades lockout comes to an end, and in all probability the same fate awaits the Building Trades Council. It would be useless to conceal the fact that on the whole the forces of organized labor have been thoroughly worsted in the struggle, and that the Contractors' association emerges victorious from it. The capitalist press, although alluding to the repeated successes of organized trades from the central body, as compromises, do not hesitate to speculate with unbecoming satisfaction upon the approaching dissolution of the organization through which the workers carried on the long and bitter struggle.

The agreements made with the contractors as to wages, hours, etc., may be maintained, at least while the rush of the building season lasts, but when the slack time arrives the loss of the central organization through which the workers mutually supported each other will make itself felt. It is folly to suppose that the contracts signed by the bosses' association will remain valid when employment becomes scarce. It is only necessary to recall the various contracts signed during the year of the World's Fair and what happened to them when the rush was over. In this recent struggle the united action of the contractors forced free competition on the market. No workmen of average intelligence needs to be told what use the bosses will make of their victory, when they are called upon to deal with individual trades.

It has been charged with much truth that politics played an important part in connection with this disastrous lockout, but it is well to remember that it was CAPITALIST politics alone that weakened the ranks of the workers and created distrust and dissension amongst them, and in doing this it was fulfilling the law of its existence.

Let the workmen of this city adopt workingmen's politics in their unions and their economic organizations will grow stronger and better able to resist disruption, just in proportion as they become more permeated with class politics. A vote of forty thousand organized workers cast for the mayoral candidacy of John Collins, the union machinist, would indirectly do more towards strengthening the labor organizations of Chicago than any other conceivable measure.

To keep capitalist politics out of the unions would augment their strength enormously and render their defence more easy; to adopt working class politics would at once place the capitalist union smashers on the defensive themselves. The spectacle of one hundred and fifty contractors enforcing their demands upon twenty-five thousand workmen would have been impossible were it not that the latter unknowingly weakened their ranks by permitting the political tools of their enemies to disrupt and disorganize what had been built up by the labor of years. But the dissolution of the Building Trades Council, though a severe blow, by no means presages the end of the conflict. The contractors can only make use of their victory to still further reduce the amount of labor product agreed upon as the workmen's portion, and this will inevitably mean a re-opening of hostilities after the activity of the building season has passed its maximum.

COMPLETELY SUCCESSFUL.

Socialist Festival in Kensington Turner Hall Breaks All Previous Records

The comrades of Pullman, Kensington and Roseland made a great success of their concert and ball at the Kensington Turner Hall, Sunday.
The concert and lectures of the afternoon held a full house. Mr. Julius Vahlteich, who was the secretary of the German Workingmen's Association when LaSalle was its president, and was afterward a member of the German reichstag, was the speaker in German, and Walter Thomas, Miss Vahlteich in English. Comrade Vahlteich was warmly greeted by the turners and other German-speaking listeners. He was closely listened to and frequently interrupted by applause.
A very large share of those present were not Socialists, and Comrade Mills undertook to state and explain the demands of the Socialists.

After showing at length how the private ownership of the coal and the land rested on no better foundation than would a similar claim set up as regarding the water of the lakes and rivers, he proceeded to prove that none of these natural resources could even have been developed and used except by co-operative effort.

The first three could not have been made nor kept burning, the first animals could not have been caught and tamed to give us the cow, horse, sheep and hog, except by co-operative effort. Even the human language itself could never have been developed except by men meeting and working together. The machine of the great shops cannot now be used except groups of men, use them nor can a wheel be turned except steam, or electricity or the internal explosion of the gas—all natural forces—shall furnish the power to turn them. He contended that all that is sturdy or good in all our life depends either on the gifts of nature or the united efforts of men. Socialism asks that those free gifts of nature shall belong to all men and that the whole body of society shall be organized in such a way that in the use of the land and the machinery of production the full products of the workers shall go to the workers only. His address was continuously interrupted by applause, and at its close a large number of the workmen present declared themselves for socialism. There were over four hundred tickets sold for the ball, and the singing, music and dancing was greatly enjoyed.

Comrade Denne declared when the day was over that it had been the greatest day for socialism that end of the city has ever seen, and the financial returns were large and will all go for the propaganda work of the party.

A "deserving employee" in the Carnegie Steel company at Homestead has received $150,000 of stock from the company "as an incentive to greater effort." The lucky recipient does not actually labor himself, but is content in seeing that others do so. It is not stated where the "incentive to greater effort" on the part of the latter comes in, but they will undoubtedly have to supply the "greater effort" just the same. That $150,000 is bound to bring returns.

Send in a club of ten this week.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

A professor in the department of political economy, speaking to a body of students in that institution who had not formed themselves in government club, reported in the daily press to have informed his audience that "politicians have a right to run this city just as much as students have a right to run this university." He forgot to add that this "right," in both cases, was only recognized so long as the running was performed in harmony selected and adjusted by the capitalist class.

In taking up the record of Croker, the Tammany king, it has been discovered that in an election held in 1865 he voted no less than seventeen times in one day. If the disfranchisement contemplated by the capitalist class does not miscarry it is thought that the working classes, at least will not be corrupted by this example.

The Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway company was defendant last week in a suit brought by a workman for the loss of a leg through being struck by one of the company's trains. The defense alleged that the man was entitled to no damages, for the reason that the cork leg which he was now using gave better service than the natural member.

Mr. Franklin McVeigh declares that Chicago is destined to become the great educational center of the United States. Who says that the capitalists are not watching the growth of the Socialist movement?

Newspaper biographies of Mr. Andrew Carnegie have appeared in almost all the capitalist journals, but none of them in recounting the exploits of the "great spangled Scotchman" make the least allusion to the building of the stockade around the Homestead works, or dwell in any extent upon the "business" ability displayed in inducing the government to accept defective armor plates.

Those high-priced railroad officials who are slated to lose their jobs when the Vanderbilt-Harriman-Morgan syndicate takes hold may perhaps find some consolation in the recent remarks of the ex-controller of the treasury, Jas. H. Eckels, to the effect that opportunity never was so great as at present.

The purchase of the Carnegie interests by J. Pierpont Morgan and the consolidation of the iron and steel industry will perhaps be hailed by some as a step towards socialism. If the evidence of capitalist concentration were in themselves steps towards socialism we could afford to take things easy, for the new order would arrive without any effort on our part.

Steps toward socialism are only manifested in the development of class-consciousness amongst the workers, and this demands the activity of every Socialist. Capitalist development certainly furnishes us with our best arguments, but we must be able to make the workers realize its application to the conditions of life in which they as a class exist. The result of this understanding will manifest itself at the ballot box, and the amount of the vote cast for the candidacy of John Collins will be the test of what we have accomplished since November.

Hearst's Chicago American wants "municipal ownership" and its editorialists strongly oppose any modification which falls short of this position. But it will nevertheless support, during the pending campaign, those candidates who are pledged to an extension of privileges to the street railway companies. Just wait and see.

One Jacob Rile, an alleged sociologist, attended a ball, given recently by the political bosses of the First ward, at which "Hinky Dink" and "Bathhouse John" were perhaps the two most prominent figures, representing, as they do, the wealthiest ward in this city, perhaps the wealthiest in the nation.

Mr. Rile viewed the proceedings and admired the character of the band, in respect of mingled cynicism and cynicism. He admitted that these present were the ruling political element in the ward and deplored the fact.

This "sociologist" then reproaches the "better element" with refusing to join in the politics of the ward, for fear that it would have to work in conjunction with the elements represented at the ball. Mr. Rile is mistaken. The better elements do not consider their interests in danger from the present state of affairs. If they did, their scruples about association would vanish instantly. When the time comes that a possibility exists of defeating Hinky Dink and Bathhouse John at the polls with Socialist candidates, Mr. Rile would immediately witness a political activity amongst the "better classes" that would astonish him. They would stand shoulder to shoulder with the "statestmen" in question and the latter would instantly become the acknowledged champions of law, order and property, despite the unsavory reputation which has been fastened upon them by the capitalist press.

Perhaps Mark Hanna wants the ship subsidy bill passed so he can contribute to the Socialist campaign fund, but is it better not to rely too much upon this opposition.

Next to Davenport, Iowa, Sacramento, California, holds the palm for Workers' Call subscribers. This is largely due to the activity of Comrade W. F. Lockwood, who is as steady as clockwork in soliciting subscribers. It never rains but it pours when a letter comes from Sacramento. The last one arrived last Tuesday and contained a bunch of twenty-two subs.

If the Twenty-fifth Ward branch does not carry off the palm in the coming municipal election, it will not be the fault of the indefatigable comrades who are devoting themselves to subscription hustling. The record for this week is eighty-five subscribers. This places the Twenty-fifth Ward in the front rank on the subscription list of the Workers' Call there being now nearly five hundred subscribers in that ward.

A club of eight yearlies from Comrade A. S. Montgomery, of Monmouth, Illinois. This is another comrade who finds that it is just as easy to get yearly subs as any other. Comrade Montgomery writes encouragingly of the propaganda work being done by the comrades at Monmouth. He says: "Here in Monmouth we are very anxious to see unity accomplished in the Socialist ranks. We hope all workmen will soon realize what the name Socialist means. Then the capitalists will find out what it means to have a full dinner pail. We all think the Workers' Call is THE PAPER. This is my first bunch of new subs, but I do not think it will be the last."

At the last meeting of Local Erie, of the Socialist party, the foregoing appeal to the brewery workers was read and a resolution at once adopted that an "unfair" list be instituted and the product of the concerns involved placed thereon. This action was supported by all who took part in the discussion on the ground that as the Socialist party was the political movement of the working class it was incumbent upon the party to co-operate with them in the industrial struggle for betterment of condition at all times, and as the capitalists in these breweries were antagonistic organized labor in the manner complained of, it was our duty to boycott their products as effectively as possible. Request was also made that all party papers make note of the proceedings and that all organizations take note of it. In this way the Socialists can make their support of organized labor most appreciable.

Down with child labor! So say the organized workers; so say the Socialists. Down with it by the boycott, down with it by the BALLOT.

Great Premium Offer

It is with pleasure that the Workers' Call announces to its friends and patrons that it has completed arrangements with one of the largest Socialist publishing houses in the country, whereby it has obtained a quantity of the best Socialist books published in the English language, to be given as premiums to its subscription hustlers. The terms upon which these books have been obtained make it possible for us to extend to active workers the best premium offer that has ever been made by a Socialist publication. The books which we offer are the very cream of Socialist literature, and should be in the home of every active comrade. With a little hustling—in a good cause—it is possible for every comrade to obtain them free of cost. This remarkable offer is as follows:

With every two dollars' worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the rate of 10 cents for yearlies and 25 cents for half-yearlies, we will give a copy of "The Peoples' Marx," an excellent epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital," translated from the French of Gabriel Deville. Retail price, 75 cents. Or "A History of the Commune of 1871," by Lissaguy; price, $1.00.

With every one dollar and fifty cents worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, we will give one copy of Eugene Sue's "Silver Cross, or the Carpenter of Nazareth," cloth bound, price 50 cents.

With every one dollar's worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the same rate, we will give any two of the following classics of Socialist literature: "Socialism from Utopia to Science," by Frederick Engels; "The Workingman's Program," by Ferdinand Lassalle; "The Right to Be Lazy," by Paul Lafargue; "The State and Socialism," by Gabriel Deville; "Socialism, Revolution and Internationalism," by Gabriel Deville. Retail price of each of the above books, 25 cents.

Also with one dollar's worth of subscriptions we will give any one of the following 25 cent books: "The Civil War in France," by Karl Marx; "Science and the Workingmen," by Ferdinand LaSalle; "The Socialist Campaign Book for 1900."

It is unnecessary for us to dilate to any extent upon the merits of the books which we thus place within the easy reach of every comrade in the country.

"The Peoples' Marx" has been introduced to our readers in previous numbers. It contains all the salient points of the parent book, "Capital," and presents them in a form more readily understood by the average mind. "Capital," in its original form is a book for the student. "The Peoples' Marx" is a book for everybody. The other books which we offer are familiar to all Socialists.

In taking advantage of the above offer comrades are requested to make use of the following blank application. Fill it out and send it with your letter:

Resolved, That we respectfully urge the Chicago and Springfield committees to call a convention at or near Buffalo, N. Y., on the birthday of American political independence, July 4, said date being the most appropriate for the drafting of the new declaration of economic independence and the launching of the party that is to carry it into execution—and leaving ample time for the reorganization necessary to get into perfect working order for the ensuing campaign which will be made memorable in the history of American socialism.

Resolved, That copies of the foregoing be sent to the Socialist press and that all organizations be solicited to endorse the name and forward to their respective national or state executives. Unanimously adopted without debate, February 3, 1901.

FOR SOCIALIST UNITY.

Waterbury, Conn., Socialist Club Submits Plan for Visiting the Separate Socialist Societies.

Whereas, It is evident to thoughtful people that the time is nearly fulfilled when, in the evolution of society the Socialist state will become an inevitable if humanity is to go forward.

Whereas, The present political situation demands a united front of all Socialists against common enemies, but we behold a condition of disunion among us, being divided into jealous, petty factions, quarreling about leaders and small matters.

Whereas, Economic conditions are rapidly bringing home to the hearts of the people the fact of the class struggle, causing class lines to be consciously drawn as they never before have been drawn in America's history and thus causing a disruption of old party ties and a new alignment of forces; therefore, be it

Resolved, That a national convention be called of all Socialists, without regard to previous affiliations, party ties or factions, who accept and will firmly maintain these two fundamental principles:

First, The fact of the inevitable class struggle between the working class which produces all on the one hand, and the capitalist class which owns nearly all on the other, yet this is without hatred of individuals or exclusive blame of either class, but simply scientifically recognizing the results of the struggle.

Second, That assisted as it may or may not be by individuals of other classes, it is the mission of the working class to establish the public ownership and control of all the means of production and distribution.

Resolved, That the purpose of this convention shall be to accomplish the organic unity of all Socialists.

Resolved, That the basis of representation in this convention shall be the combined vote of the S. L. P. and the S. D. P. in each state or territory, using the highest number cast for any candidate, each state or territory to have one delegate for every five hundred votes cast or major fraction thereof, provided however, that each state and territory shall be entitled to at least one delegate.

Resolved, That each delegate shall have only one vote.

Resolved, That these national delegates shall be elected by the state or territorial convention or by a referendum vote taken as the state or territorial convention shall prescribe.

Resolved, That said state or territorial convention shall be constituted after the following manner, to wit:

(a) A call shall be issued in each election district, town, city, or county, as the case may be, for a caucus of all Socialists who will subscribe their names to the two fundamental principles declared above. All persons of legal age who attend said caucus and sign said declaration shall have equal voice and vote without regard to race, nationality, sex, or previous party affiliation.

(b) The call for this caucus shall be issued by a combined committee of all the local Socialist organizations or as many as shall be willing to act, or by any one of them in case of failure to meet or to agree. Provided, however, that in any locality where there is yet no organization or where the local call to issue said call within a month after receiving the same, any Socialist who shall send his subscription to these resolutions to the nearest committee or authority issuing the same, he by that act, empowered to call such a caucus.

(c) Each local caucus shall elect delegates to the state or territorial convention, one delegate for every fifteen or major fraction thereof, signing the declaration.

(d) Each local caucus shall elect a permanent committee to communicate with all other caucuses and decide by a referendum vote of such committee the time and place of the state or territorial convention. The number of such committee shall be twice the number of delegates. Each local caucus shall pay the expense of its delegates and devise ways and means to raise the same. It may also effect a permanent organization, adjourn from time to time, and transact any other business which it may deem good for the Socialist cause. Provided, however, that nothing in this movement shall be construed to supersede or be inimical to the interests of existing Socialist organizations until the national convention shall have been held.

(e) The call for a caucus shall be before the call?

Resolved, That the national delegates elected in each state or territory arrange with the other state and territorial committees, similarly constituted, the time and place of the national convention.

Resolved, That upon the closing of this national convention all Socialist parties thereby cease their previous separate existence and that all Socialists thereafter order and combine themselves as such convention shall have determined.

Resolved, That no national officer of any Socialist party or faction existing previous to November 6th, 1900, shall be eligible as a delegate to this national convention, but any such officer may be present at the same and, by a three-fifths vote of the convention, be given the privilege of the floor at such time and duration as the convention shall permit.

Resolved, That Socialist shall be our simple name, and solidarity our aim and watchword.

Resolved, That such local organization or unaffiliated Socialist who endorses these resolutions shall forward one copy of their action on the same to the secretary of its state committee, one to the secretary of each national executive committee, if there be any, and return one to this committee.

Waterbury, Conn., January 9, 1901.

Comrades:—The foregoing resolutions have been adopted by the members of the Waterbury Socialist club, who, recognizing the present unsatisfactory condition of affairs, are desirous of securing organic unity of forces in the United States. We urge all Socialists to give this matter the gravest consideration, believing that the time is come when the Socialists of this country must see the folly of being divided among themselves and that to insure success we must create a solidarity of forces.

THE PEOPLE'S MARX

THE PEOPLE'S MARX from the pen of Gabriel Deville and in the translation of Robert Rives La Monte, presents to the English-speaking Socialists the most excellent and successful epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital." This luminous epitome, from the last and seventeenth French edition, is issued in the style in every way characteristic of the publications of the INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

The Haverhill Social Democrat, remarks on The People's Marx as

The Bible of the working class, a Bible whose study is as beneficial to the workingman as is the orthodox Bible to the average Christian.

OTHER OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

The New York People on The People's Marx: Mr. B. O. Flower, in The Arena:

Deville, in this abridgement and popularization of one of the profoundest and one of the most difficult economic works ever undertaken, has succeeded admirably in this respect: That he has held close to the outlines of the original work, has preserved its essential form as well as of matter, but has considerably reduced its size, and to a very great extent has simplified it and brought it within the understanding of the ordinary reader.

Only patient plodders and scholars, with tastes for economic studies, however, are able to master Marx' Capital, and many attempts have been made to furnish the people with a luminous epitome of this great work. Up to the present time no one has so satisfactorily accomplished this work as Gabriel Deville, in the volume before us. His People's Marx was published in France in 1900, and has now been excellently translated into English by Robert Rives La Monte.

The price of The People's Marx is: one dollar and a half in cloth; seventy-five cents in paper. With orders sent in before the 1st of March we will give as premium a cloth copy of the Silver Cross, (price 50c.), with $1.50 edition; or, a copy of the Civil War in France, (price 25c.), with the paper edition.

The Chicago School of Social Economy

WALTER THOMAS MILLS, A. M., Principal

Night School in Chicago.

Correspondence School for all points outside of the city or for those who cannot attend the night sessions in the city. The course is given in twenty lessons, and covers the scientific, economic and historic argument for socialism.

READ WHAT THOSE WHO ARE TAKING THE COURSE ARE SAYING ABOUT IT.

"This course will greatly help anyone who wants to do effective work for socialism."
John Peterson.

"These lessons are not only interesting and instructive, but they unfold to us our own life's meaning in this study of socialism. The whole world is made so beautiful and our own relations to it so direct and simple that we cannot help but understand; and it is so presented that we FEEL the truth as surely as we understand it, and so it cannot be forgotten."
Louise Mittlacher.

"Anyone of average intelligence can take these lessons, as nothing could be more simple or more lucid than are his explanations."
Geo. R. Rosenberg.

"These lessons are dealing with topics which I have studied before, but some way the whole world is being transformed before my eyes. Things which were familiar to me are put into such new and unexpected relations as to produce results of which I have never even dreamed before. I am only half way through the course, but life must always mean to me more than it has meant before, and socialism is simply the means by which real life is revealed and made possible for all."
Dr. Herbert E. Phillips.

"These lessons are showing to me how each stage of human progress grows of necessity out of the previous ones. They make one want to find out to what the world is growing now, and then try to help it along."
G. Andersen.

"The logical reasoning of these lessons is so clear and so connected that the points cannot be missed or misunderstood, and the lessons derived from them will be of lasting benefit to those who wish to work for socialism."
James Hunt.

"Every workingman who wants to find the way out can find it here."
Peter Horsley.

"It is amazing when you come to study, as we in these lessons, to see how everything in life is bound up with every other thing and how all together are bound up with socialism."
A. Rasmussen.

If you live in Chicago and want to join in the work of this school come to the Schiller Building any Tuesday night.

But you can get the same lessons by correspondence anywhere. Mr. Mills will send you the lessons in printed form, then he will examine your report on the study of each lesson, correct your work, answer your inquiries, and help you on in your study in every way possible. THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW

This is the only periodical in the English language reckoning among its contributors all the great Socialist writers of the world. Among those whose writings have appeared in its columns in the last seven months are Charles H. Vail, Leonard D. Abbott, W. T. Brown, H. M. Hyndman, Paul Lafargue, E. V. Debs, Job Harriman, Ernest Crosby and Emilie Vandervelde, while Edwin Markham, Kier Hardie, Rev. T. McGrady and Jane Adams have promised articles.

PROF. GEORGE D. HERRON conducts a department each month on SOCIALISM AND RELIGION, containing matter of great interest and value to all students of social questions. It is the only instance in the history of Socialist literature where a regular department was conducted upon this subject by a man who combines such rare natural talents with a thorough knowledge of the literature and doctrines of both Religion and Socialism.

MAX E. HAYES, equally well-known as a writer and speaker in both the Socialist and trade union movement, edits a department on THE LABOR WORLD. This consists of a thorough summary of the happenings in the field of organized labor, with descriptions of the more important mechanical and industrial changes of each month.

The department on SOCIALISM ABROAD is infinitely superior to anything of the kind ever attempted in the English language. In addition to a full and able corps of foreign correspondents, several Socialist dailies of Europe are subscribed for and nearly all the important weeklies and monthlies are received on exchange and made up of in its preparation. With the mass of interesting things that foreign Socialists are now doing, no one who is at all interested in socialism can afford not to read this department.

The department of BOOK REVIEWS is edited with the special aim of making it a continuous and complete compendium of the wealth of material in current literature that is of interest to Socialists. The regular EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT is conducted by the general editor, A. M. SIMONS, who discusses topics of current interest in the light of the Socialist philosophy. An interesting phase is a financial summary of the month, giving the facts as to prices, wages, bankruptcies, financial complications and general trade movements that are of interest to Socialists, but which have hitherto been buried in trade and financial journals and inaccessible to the average reader.

With the issue for March, 1901, the SIZE WILL BE INCREASED from sixty-four to EIGHTY pages and an INTENSELY INTERESTING story will be begun to run through several numbers. This story will be of a literary value to accord with the high standard maintained by the remainder of the publication. While written from a Socialist point of view it does not attempt to be an economic treatise, and its literary merit and entrancing plot will gain for it a prominent place among the romances of the year.

The INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW is the most complete expression of the Socialist movement ever attempted and no student of socialism, favorable or hostile, can keep informed upon the subject without reading its columns.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, single copies 10 cents; no free samples. For twelve one-cent stamps we will mail a copy of the REVIEW and PROF. HERRON'S booklet "Why I Am a Socialist." FATHER MCGRADY'S new 16-cent novel mailed free if you send $1.00 for the REVIEW at once.

DELUGE OF WEALTH

Plenty, Not Poverty, the Cause of All Our Sufferings.

"EVERYBODY" AND "NOBODY"

Some Contradictions Which Can Only Be Solved Through a Knowledge of Socialism.

It is all a mistake. Let the charity organizations disband at once, let those who devote their lives to "elevating the poor," suspend operations immediately; there is no poor to elevate, no poverty, no lack of good things. The trouble lies exactly the other way. WE have too much. OUR superfluous commodities are smothering us. EVERYBODY is so loaded down with extra wealth that life is becoming a burden solely on account of our possessions. WE have too much furniture, too much clothing, too much food, and don't know how to get rid of it. Plenty, not poverty, is making the earth wearisome to us.

Now, reader, don't go and say that this is not so. It is true—because we saw it in a newspaper, and whoever knew a newspaper to lie? There was in black and white, and moreover the newspaper in which it appeared is a special friend of the working people, and relies for its circulation mostly upon them. As a further proof of what we say it may be mentioned that the writer was a woman, a "clever" woman, and that it appeared on the editorial page of the paper in question—Hearst's Chicago American, of February 13th. Perhaps it would be as well to reprint the stuff and then you will be able to see that we have exaggerated nothing. Here it is:

WE are overloaded and oppressed with paraphernalia and baggage. Houses are crowded with furniture, lumbered up by the gewgaws and gimcracks. Too many pictures on the walls, too many rugs on the floors, too many hangings at windows and doors, too many tawdry books on shelves and tables, too many gilded clocks (that don't go), too many dishes and too much glass and silver on the dining tables, to say nothing of the bewildering array of knives, forks and spoons and little spears and harpoons and swords laid at each plate.

EVERY woman is covered with feathers, furbies, beaded, embroidered, gold lace, attached bands of velvet or something like cloth encrusted with mock jewels and gold and silver. This overabundance shows EVERYWHERE. OUR bills of fare are three times as long as drawn out variety in food and the manner of preparation, three times from a modern dinner a torpid, satiated being, unfit for conversation, for reading, for music, for any form of social amusement.

Even the concerts and the plays, the lectures and musicals are wearisome in length. EVERYBODY seems to be striving to see how much in the way of amusement or instruction can be crammed into an hour. And the result is that EVERYBODY gets tired before half of the programme is over.

So it would seem that the millennium is already here, and EVERYBODY has not only abundantly and to spare of the good things of life, but is actually in danger of surfeit from abundance. This would be the evident conclusion if you didn't read any other part of the paper.

But if you were curious enough to turn over its pages you would drop across some rather contradictory items, such as an account of preparations being made for a charity ball to provide clothing for the children of the "poor," (remember EVERY woman has more clothes than she really knows what to do with), a story of an old man deliberately forging a check for the avowed purpose of getting into jail, because he had no home, no clothing or food, and didn't like to starve or freeze to death, (don't forget that the clever lady stated that EVERYBODY had not only houses, furniture, and clothing, away beyond their needs, but that there was such a variety of foods that the bills of fare were actually wearisome). A noble speech from Senator Hoar in which he "scored" the millionaires most unmercifully, for bribing legislation in order that their operations in acquiring "property" from the public might proceed at an increased rate, though it might seem that in so doing they were really public benefactors, philanthropically engaged in relieving "everybody" of their superfluous accumulations. A record of half a dozen robberies, burglaries and hold-ups in the city for good measure.

What then? Can it be possible that the clever writer is mistaken in saying that "everybody" is thus overloaded? No, she is quite correct. She is using figurative language. People that have more than they can use are generally referred to as "everybody." The others don't count—they are nothing. From the painter this clever lady gives, you will be able to judge exactly just how much you amount to.

You may ask then why "everybody" doesn't stop producing things of which they have more than enough. But you will understand that they are only "everybody" just because they produce nothing whatever. In this well ordered capitalist world the "everybodies" produce nothing and the "nobodies" produce everything, and it is this matter of production alone that determines upon which side any particular individual belongs.

The "nobodies" then have produced an abundance of things and given them to the "everybodies" in such quantities that the latter now complain of having so much that it becomes a nuisance and hindrance. The "nobodies" have built the houses, overloaded them with furniture, pictures, rugs, silver, knives, forks, spoons and little spears and harpoons and spoons until "everybody" is "bewildered," as the clever writer states.

The "nobodies" have also produced the feathers, the gold embroidery, the sumptuous clothing and the jewels with which "everybody" is overburdened. They are equally responsible for the bills of fare and varieties of food which renders the latter "torpid, satiated and unfit for conversation." They build the theatres, concert halls, and lecture rooms, when the others find "gearisms," and their labor provides the musical instruments, costumes and all other appendages used in them.

And while doing this they have never had for their own use proper houses, furniture, clothing, food, or amusement in anything like sufficient quantities. They die from living in unsanitary houses, they are frozen for want of clothing and fuel, starved from lack of food and brutalized for lack of wholesome and agreeable recreation, yet still they persist in pestered the others with such an enormous quantity of these things that the latter cry out against the avalanche of plenty that threatens to surfeit and smother them by its volume.

Do the "nobodies" then take a malignant pleasure in this work? Are they really evil disposed persons? No, they are only stupid—just common, ordinary, everyday fools. But the "everybodies" tell them that they are intelligent and brainy and levelheaded beyond all people on earth, and they believe it, because what "everybody" says must be true. They are also told that they are the most industrious and skillful of all peoples, which is really a fact. They are industrious—to the verge of criminality.

Of course there are some among them who maintain that the "nobodies" are united for that purpose could keep all the things they make for their own use, but the "everybodies" declare that if such did really occur, the "nobodies" would become "torpid and satiated" like themselves. If it is necessary to have "marriages of plenty" they are willing to sacrifice themselves so that the "nobodies" may have a "horrible example" constantly before their eyes.

And so fully appears wisdom, and wisdom folly. "Everybody" waxes fat upon what "nobody" makes, and "nobody" starves because "everybody" has too much. And "everybody"—but what is the use of pursuing the contradiction farther? If you want to take the knots out of it, better get some Socialist literature or subscribe for a Socialist paper, and you will find the key to the solution in what is known as the class struggle.

Vote for John Collins, candidate of the Socialist party for mayor.

Don't Know Where He's At.

A reverend gentleman attached to the McCormick Theological Seminary in this city evidently feels that he has a kick coming and is thus reported as airing his grievance at the Forty-first Street Presbyterian church last Sunday.

"There is a leveling in the United States of the Holy of Holies. There is a leveling of everything, and people reverence neither gray hairs nor the ministry. When I walk in the streets of Chicago my pupils whom I meet do not look upon me as any better than they are themselves. The country has run mad with democracy."

If this clerical grumbler really wishes to know just why this disagreeable condition exists, we would draw his attention to the fact that as capitalism has degraded his profession to the same status as its ordinary wage slaves there is therefore no good reason why he should be thought better than anyone else. But will he attack capitalism in consequence? Not likely. In that case the McCormick Seminary would quickly conclude that they didn't require his services any longer. Some people never seem to understand just where they belong.

These mysterious fires which occurred half a dozen times daily in some of the Chicago hotels last week are no longer a mystery. It now appears that they were merely the result of "business" enterprise. Several up-to-date individuals who were interested in introducing a new and improved fire extinguisher to the public notice, found themselves in a very awkward position when a welcome opportunity to test the merits of their commodity. And so the first supposition that the fires were the work of "anarchists" proves to be correct after all.

Get your neighbor to read the Call.

As a result some of the wards appeared with credentials of reorganization, and others, whose boundaries remained practically the same, made no change in their representation. Credentials for the following delegates from reorganized wards were presented and accepted:

Second Ward, L. Kesselbaum and M. Becker. Ninth and Tenth, H. Schlesinger, E. H. Smith, D. H. Smith, and Paul Haerwaldt. Thirteenth, D. H. Daly and Walter M. Kennedy. Fourteenth, J. F. Brennan, E. H. Twenty-seventh, John Nelson and Thos. Laumann. Twenty-eighth, Sam Robbins, J. M. Stewart, Geo. J. Kemp, John N. Bielewski and Chas. H. Kuhnert. Thirty-second, Chas. F. Lewis and G. Anderson. U. H. Evans from the Sixteenth and Herman De Hoer from the Thirty-third were seated pending presentation of proper credentials. It was decided that G. A. Johnson and R. U. Olson, representing the old Tenth Ward be seated as delegates from the new Twelfth.

The executive committee reported that the first campaign leaflet may be obtained in quantities at the Workers' Call office. This is the first of a series of three leaflets which the party will distribute throughout the city during the coming campaign. The first one contains the municipal platform of the Socialist party and Comrade Collins' letter accepting the nomination for mayor. It is a four-page pamphlet, with pages four by six inches in size, and will make an instrument for propaganda. One hundred thousand copies have been printed. Branches and individuals will be supplied at the rate of forty cents per thousand. It is hoped that branches will take hold of this matter immediately and get the first leaflet well distributed, so that the second one can be issued.

The organizer, Comrade Klenke, made an interesting report concerning the state of the party and the progress of agitation throughout the city. The West and North towns are solidly reorganized under the new redistricting ordinance. The Sixth, Seventh, Twentieth and Thirtieth wards will be reorganized this week.

The organizer also reported that up to date only about 1,500 signatures on the city petitions have been turned in, 10,000 being necessary to get on the ballot. Only about two weeks remain in which to secure signatures, so if the Socialist party is to appear in the political field this spring, it will be necessary for the comrades to devote all their energies to this matter.

A supply of tickets for the Commune Festival to be held at Brand's Hall, Sunday, March 15th, were turned over to the delegates to be sold by the branches.

The resolution of the Twentieth Ward recommending the division of the city into three or more agitation districts and the election of district organizers, was referred to the Executive Committee.

Resolution of the Thirty-second Ward branch recommending that the dues be raised to 25 cents a month and that each member receive with each month's dues a Workers' Call six month sub. postal card, was referred to the Executive Committee.

The next regular of the General Committee will be held at 104 E. Randolph street, Saturday night, March 2nd.

Call for Signatures.

Comrades:

There are but a few weeks remaining in which to collect the signatures necessary to place the party on the ballot. If this time is not used to the best advantage no city ticket will be filed. The names are coming too slowly at present and you must get out and hustle. A municipal campaign is quite as important as any other, and a ticket must be filed or our agitation is useless. Get to work and see if better returns of signatures cannot be obtained in the time which is still left.

With hope for better results in the way of more signatures, we are

The Executive Committee.

WIELD THE BALLOT!

The Chief Weapon of Working Class Emancipation.

THE FINAL CLASS STRUGGLE.

Economic Supremacy of the Producers Impossible While Capitalist Production Continues.

As every so-called civilized country on earth contains a Socialist movement of more or less strength and influence, and as all these movements have one common object, viz., the conquest of the governing power in each, or in other words the political supremacy of the working class, it may be asked: if it is true, as Socialists contend, that the capitalist classes attained political power as a result of their gradually growing economic supremacy, why should not the workers use the same means to attain their object?

This question though not often formulated as above, as a rule forms the basis of reasoning for those who look upon the trades union movement as the ultimate means of "emancipation" for the working class, and also for the advocates of co-operative societies on a large scale, industrial brotherhoods, colonies, profit-sharing, and similar plans for the enrichment of the producing class.

It may be stated at once that while in the main, the assertion that political power was the result of economic supremacy for the capitalist class, is undoubtedly true, it by no means follows that this must also be true of the proletarian movement. On the contrary, the process is reversed. For the working class, economic supremacy follows the attainment of political power instead of preceding it.

We need not stop to consider the too obvious fact that the means of production at present in the hands of the working class, are so small, scattered and insufficient, as to render the success of industrial co-operative societies of workingmen, practically impossible in the face of the gigantic means of production in the hands of the capitalist class. Here and there it is true, that favored by some peculiar or abnormal conditions, these societies have managed to achieve some small success; but never sufficient to even attract the notice of the ruling class, to say nothing of endangering their interests. Wherever a success beyond this has been achieved the society has group invariably lost their working class character and became capitalist.

Neither is it necessary to demonstrate the insufficiency of the trades union movement. Its defeat at the hands of organized capital, its inability to maintain itself against the gigantic combines of today are only too apparent. The question can be completely answered by logical deductions from the historical development of economic classes.

The coming revolution is decidedly different in many important aspects from the revolutions which preceded it, though it possesses one great characteristic in common with them—it is the result of a class struggle.

Hostile critics of Marx have pointed out that the theory of surplus value was by no means a discovery, alleging that exploitation in one form or another was characteristic of all preceding class rule, a fact which Marx never denied. Surplus value was merely the particular form of exploitation characteristic of capitalism. All previous revolutions sought but to change the form of exploitation; the coming social revolution seeks to abolish it in toto, a fact which differentiates it from all others.

In its struggle with feudalism the rising capitalist class endeavored to subject society to their conditions of appropriating products of labor. In the coming revolution the proletariat must first destroy their own mode of appropriation (the present wage system), before becoming economically supreme. Capitalism has existed for ages in the interstices of feudal and slave-holding society, but not as the predominant factor therein. Socialism, it is needless to point out, has never yet existed, and cannot, until capitalism has been made impossible.

Again, in every previous class struggle, the conflict was waged in the interests of a minority of society. On the other hand the revolt of the proletariat is a movement of the majority—for the first time in the history of mankind.

Another important difference between the present class struggle and those that have preceded it, may be found in the fact that for the first time the elements composing the social revolutionary movement must rely exclusively upon their own strength. They cannot call for assistance in the struggle upon any class or strata of society lower than themselves, for the reason that such does not exist. The conditions of all previous class struggles were different in this respect, and the victory lay with those who could utilize the services of classes numerically greater but economically less powerful than their own. This condition no longer exists, but two classes remaining face to face, the capitalist and working class. Between these two, whatever remnants of previous classes still remain are either being abolished or rendered powerless.

Again, all previous class struggles in their very nature laid the foundation for further similar conflicts at a future date. The present one, however, is utterly different in that its triumph necessarily implies the end of the economic classes and class warfare.

Finally, in every previous conflict the principal combatants were both possessors of the means of production. The modern proletariat, on the other hand, has nothing to lose. The very conditions of its creation by the capitalist system made this its inherent characteristic.

This list of essential differences might be carried much farther if necessary. Enough, however, has been given to show conclusively that while the great fact of the class struggle is yet common to all, the economic attributes of the participants have changed in many important respects. There is no reason whatever for supposing that analogies drawn from the details of former class struggles can be applied to the forthcoming one, but on the other hand the opposite conclusion is unavoidable. The economic strength of the capitalist class will eventually serve to expose their political weakness. The economic weakness of the working class will as certainly evolve political strength.

For society is approaching the LAST of a series of class struggles instead of preparing conditions for future ones. We are closing an era which began, as Marx says, with the introduction of primitive trade societies, and passing through the stages of handicraft, slavery, feudalism, and capitalism, all of which exploitation or man by his fellow was the common link. It is extremely improbable, nay almost impossible that the change which is destined to close and complete one cycle of human progress must slavishly follow in detail the methods of previous stages, which were but parts of the whole.

Economically we are weak—our very name of proletariat signifies economic weakness. Politically we possess the same potency which our numbers give us—but this is conditioned upon our intelligence. The economic weapon has been tried it is even now being tried, and that we are finding it insufficient is proof that our intelligence grows. And that growing intelligence invariably points to the ballot as a weapon all powerful and sufficient for our emancipation. And in advocating the use of the ballot to decide the last great economic class struggle we make another departure from the methods followed by the ruling classes which have successfully dominated society. The ballot then is our principal weapon, though only through repeated economic struggles on the part of our class can a realization of its efficacy be gained. And when victory crowns our efforts at the polls, those who attempt to obstruct or deny the will of the majority will merely furnish by their opposition, the last proof required to demonstrate the truth, that in the coming social revolution economic power is a consequence of political supremacy.

Vote the Socialist party ticket the whole ticket, and nothing but the ticket.

Never Touched Them.

The water thief has been scolded by the assistant state attorney, but one Harry Hoore, an honest upper employed by the thieves in question, will act as the legal scapegoat and may perhaps be sacrificed in their place. "Here is a great corporation," says the lawyer, "guilty of the gross offense of stealing water from the people." Yes, and here is Harry Hoore, who isn't the corporation, but only the tool used by it, who is going to suffer in their stead. "Mr. Hoore," says the report, "closed his address with a scathing denunciation of the thieves' millionaires," and then the report concludes by stating that "the fate of Hoore (who is not a thief, but a millionaire)," will be left in the hands of the jurors. "If you don't like our actions," says in effect the thiefing millionaire, "why here's Hoore. Amuse yourselves by jumping on him, but don't interfere with our business."

"Between Two Steels, Etc."

Bryan's boom for 1901 has already been launched. How will that campaign be conducted? Will it be in the interest of commoners, including the man who is common in spirit and a millionaire in purse, and the man who is common all around? Impossible! Will it seek to arouse class hatred? or will it be conducted so as not to imperil the business interests of the country? Bryan loves the business man and his victim—the laborer—both so much that he cannot be tempted by either. The victims of the plunderers cannot trust the man who has plundered and at the same time poses as the victim's friend. It is a bold claim that no Socialist will make a campaign for himself by voting for Bryan again.

Socialist Pointers

To convert the world to socialism we must keep everlastingly at it.

The enemy is not afraid of us so long as we are quarreling among ourselves.

The Commoner is for Mr. Bryan's kind of socialism which isn't socialism at all.

If you have a friend who is a Populist send him the paper. He is looking for a home.

J. Pierpont Morgan and John D. Rockefeller are only doing what we let them do.

Don't allow the circulating of nominating petitions to be "everybody's business."

A dollar will go much farther in the campaign than ten dollars' worth of good intentions.

Do you think you would get any more of what you produce with John M. Harrison as mayor?

King Edward evidently wants to improve on the world the fact that England is not a republic.

If the new steel trust and the Standard Oil Company are not the government who is? Are you?

The way to make the city campaign hum is to drop a few dollars into the treasury. It needs them.

Another coal strike in Pennsylvania is threatened, and then we will see where Mark Hanna comes in.

The men who made all of those millions for Carnegie are not getting a cent out of the big steel trust deal.

Let every Socialist resolve to put a little more life into the spring campaign even if it costs him 15 cents to do it.

Just watch and see how many of the Socialist candidates for alderman (the Municipal Voters' League will not endorse).

Carter Harrison is preparing to work his con game of being the workingman's friend as hard as ever this spring.

A few good bumps from a Socialist majority would cause the swelling in Kaiser Wilhelm's head to go down very rapidly.

The ground hog's weather predictions are more reliable than the prosperity predictions of the late campaign managers.

There are bigger fools in the world than Mrs. Nation. She has no vote and the men who vote against their class interests do.

The railroads are about to cut down their working forces, but of course the men will have no trouble in getting another job.

It seems our interference in Cuba was about as disinterested as that of the employer when he organizes improvement societies for his men.

Chicago is to be cleaned. That probably means the boulevards and down town district. The river wards and back of the dump will do as it is.

An extra session will probably be called for the purpose of passing a lot of class legislation not a line of which will be in the interests of the working class.

If we just had one Socialist in congress what fun he could have ripping things up the back. Let us send the first one from Chicago just to know we are in earnest.

By the time American capitalists take their money and go to Europe on account of strikes and hostile legislation Europe won't be such a hot place for a non-worker to go to.

The manufacturers declare that the American workingman is the most intelligent in the world, perhaps because he is so far behind his brothers in other lands in socialistic progress.

Shortening the Time.

Sympathizer:—Oh well, I believe in socialism all-right, but what's the use? You've got a big job ahead of you, and you won't get socialism for fifty years yet.

Socialist:—Well, if you will join the movement we will get it in forty-nine years, 354 days and twenty-three hours. See the point?

Don't you see? Socialist amendment. Call postals can always be obtained at this office.

"Civilization" in Pekin

Its "first principles" put in operation at the imperial palace. The "epidemic of crime" reaches China. Cultured burglars and hold-up men seek for "souvenirs."

"Then I looked at Nye,
And Nye looked at me.

And he went for that beathen China —Bret Hart—

When a civilization is founded, it is founded upon the basis of the weak by the strong, many of his listeners doubtless feel inclined to believe that such an assertion is a gross exaggeration constructed upon a small medium of truth. It is always easy to convince the average "patriotic" individual that whatever charges can be brought against "civilization" in this respect are always based upon the misdeeds of other nationalities rather than his own and as this comfortable theory is universally held, and given the widest possible circulation, it is not difficult to comprehend the nature of what actually occurred during the recent occupation of Pekin by the forces of the civilized powers. Though has leaked out to show that this expedition was in reality one of the most gigantic plundering and pillaging schemes of which history holds record. And yet what occurred was only the reflex of the "civilization" which directed the forces of the allied powers.

A perfect torrent of charge and countercharge now fills the columns of the world's press in regard to this incident. German newspapers accuse the British troops of being a mob of thieves and plunderers. The British press retorts with the same charge against the Germans. Japanese, Russian, French and American journals maintain a crossfire of accusations against each other. An American missionary is arrested by the French authorities charged with extortion from the wretched Chinese peasantry. A French bishop must answer before the international government of a charge of looting the house of the Chinese minister for foreign affairs, of property worth $700,000; a story is going around that British troops ripped the tiles off the roof of a pagoda under the impression that they were solid gold, and only later discovered that they were merely copper or the gilded over. An American correspondent writes of having seen boxes of glittering loot from Pekin in Washington, rare vases, priceless ornaments, valuable books, glass, furniture, jewelry, pictures, and other portable property too numerous to mention, all of which was part of the spoils which fell to the share of the American pillagers, and concludes his description by cynically observing that the mantelpiece in the room where he is busy writing articles on the ship subsidy bill is ornamented with a "lovely snuff bottle of green jade," once the property of some wealthy Celestial.

A writer in the Contemporary Review who was an eyewitness, gives the following description of the scene which ensued when the imperial residence at Pekin fell into the hands of the plunders of Christian civilization:

The looting of civilian looters of all nationalities has been disrupted by differences which have arisen over the division of the spoils, and there now seems to be a chance for honest men, including the Chinese, to get their dues.

The looting which took place in the imperial apartments of the Forbidden City was marked by a series of unrelieved scenes of grim, satanic humor, to which even a modern Hogarth could hardly do justice. The civilizers burst into the imperial chambers despite the respectful requests of the mandarins present, but it was only forsooth to have a look or take a photograph. Then they handled the furniture, but not in order to ascertain the nature of the metals, and the hardness of the wood. Then drawers were pulled out and cases opened, just that they might glance at and admire the beautiful splendor of the Chinese court. And then there was a pause, during which the intruders looked less at the valuables and more at each other. One man would lift up a costly jade ornament or a fine piece of silverware, study it, glance furtively around, re-examine it with a blush, lay it down in a half shame-faced, half regretful way, and move on to another drawer. Then he would return to the first and begin these rites over again. One gentleman had only just turned his back for a second on a most artistic and ancient piece of jade work, and was coming back to admire it once more when he saw it disappear in the side pocket of another, who remarked with a diplomat's euphemism: "One cannot go without a 'souvenir.'"

"Gentlemen," was the formula which everyone had been seeking for since found, that all breathed and plundered freely. When one wanted a souvenir, and as there was little time to pick and choose he took a number of trifles home for inspection. The full tide of looting had now set in and could no longer be stemmed, even by the strictest of those who were wont to be "honored" in the daylight and virtuous in the presence of a crowd. An officer of high rank, coming in, shook his head sadly, but exclaimed hopefully enough: "Gentlemen, no looting please! Each one may take a 'little souvenir,' but nothing more." Fat coolies carrying coal to the stoves, in Hong Kong could not be more exacting than was this RESPECTABLE gathering of military and civil officials in moving away the most unwise vessels, images and ornaments between their coats and their skins. It was so comical to see self-respecting individuals, their features serious and solemn, while their bodies were as grotesque as the children of the East, that one could hardly believe that they were what they appeared to be. One officer left with what many fancied must be a "little" souvenir, expanded by the heat to alarming dimensions. His friends, explained afterwards that the perturbation was caused by a magnificent vase of old china, which he had been finding a difficulty to press him into his service, and loaded him with articles valued, it was said, at several hundred dollars. Some of the coolies dropped a vase, and was duly blamed by his temporary master. Attention being then drawn to the fact that the coolie was sent back, day after day, to the European, kept an account, as it were, of the things he had taken, and was allowed to take home all that he himself was carrying. The humiliating act of this farcical series of vanishing tricks was performed by a GENTLEMAN said to be a Yankee. Coolies rather than ingenuously was its characteristic. In the imperial palace, a number of high court dignitaries were left behind by the Emperor and Empress to look after the palace and its contents. They were all well attended in years, all being of commanding appearance, and all being to hinder the gutting of their imperial master's rooms, but to hurt the sensibilities of the cultured crowd, they stood in statueque poses, their hands on their hips, and their feet in the high house under their feet, and without any loss of self-respect. The American, walking briskly up to one of these venerable men, took off his valuable beads, and was in the act of putting the mandarin button from his cap, when an ambassador appeared, and the button in its place, but the Yankee walked off with the beads.

There is nothing wanted to complete this picture. It is every respect a perfect photograph of the civilization of today without a single detail lacking. The pretence of taking a look, the awakened greed of the thieves in the presence of the plunder, the furtive exchange of glances for the purpose of dividing the action of the next man, the happy solution of the difficulty by the discovery of the word "souvenir," the "self-respecting" individual carrying a solemn face above a body bulging out with concealed plunder, the pressing of hired laborers into service as coolies, and the multi-colored American translating the naked unconcealed capitalist exploitation of his native land into the simple proposition of "holding up"—all these details prove beyond dispute the fact that modern "civilization" has finally reached Pekin.

Thirty years ago the working class population of Paris gained a temporary supremacy in that city. The enormous wealth contained in the Bank of France and in scores of other private banks was left absolutely untouched by them, though they might have found it exceedingly valuable in maintaining their position against the capitalist army, who afterward murdered them in thousands as a reward for their foolish honesty. And yet the prototypes of the diplomatic plunderer who discovered the word "souvenir," the self-respecting party with the solemn face and bulging body, and the "gentleman said to be a Yankee," who despoiled the mandarins, would doubtless dwell with pious horror on the alleged plundering propensities of Socialists.

That part of the plunder which has not yet been shipped from China it seems is now a bone of contention amongst the thieves, just as the civilized capitalists fight amongst each other for the loot extracted from the working class, for it is not to be supposed that the troops of the different countries were alone responsible for the pillage. They were followed by a horde of non-combatant European and American residents who probably got the lion's share of the swag, as a dispatch from Pekin states that.

It is altogether likely that the old saying that "when rogues fall out honest men get their own" will not hold good in this case. Most of the plunder is already packed for shipment and beyond the reach of the rightful owners. The property for which the French bishop is to be called to account may be taken as an instance of how the thieves selected safe depositories for their plunder. It is stated that this property is in possession of the first secretary of the American legation, and is about to be shipped out of the country. The chances that the plundered Chinese will ever receive back any portion of their property seems indeed slim, but at least they have, from practical experience, gained a knowledge of the essential nature and methods of modern capitalist "civilization."

The Struggle for Work.

White men, mostly old soldiers, are engaged in fierce competition with negroes for positions as sailors in the public schools of Atlanta, Ga. The job pays $30 per month, without board, and runs for only nine months of the year, and the chairman of the board of education describes the duties of the job as follows:

"The janitors clean the buildings, scrub the floors, carry the coal, make the fires, carry the water and run errands. They are men of every race, but they are done by the average butler or coachman. It is harder work than that done by the divers in the lively seaboard."

Surely in this case "the wheel has come full turn." Forty years ago the soldiers of the Confederacy fought that war work which rendered the position of the negro, and now they actually fight with the black man for the job which now appears desirable to both. Truly capitalism makes no distinction between the races, but it does not make a distinction between the classes either. The working class equally in one

THE HERRON LECTURES.

Extracts From the Address Delivered At Central Music Hall on February 17th.

In truth, the best things of the world have always been done for the love of doing them or for the love of those for whom they were done, and not for pay or reward. The common needs of daily life and relations, as well as the most enduring literature and true or inter-creative art, spring from inherent creative impulses, even when pushed to seemingly external motives. The great pioneers of all times and lands, the most perfect cathedral builders, brave comradeships and sweet services of friendship, even the devotion of slaves to masters, have wrought as instinctively as the flower in its blooming or the tree in its fruit-bearing; they have wrought from the instinct of love-necessity.

And there is nothing in nature that answers to our ideas of reward, or profit or cost. My heart does not beat for pay; you do not truly love for reward; our great teachers do not serve for what we give them; the altar does not become an altar for wages; the sun and air do not give themselves for what they get. The best things of life or nature are done as the tree and the flower do things which men have in common.

There are an increasing number of things in social development that are being put into economic harmony with the true nature of man. The common sense of the state makes its public road to serve the good and the evil, the rich and the poor, the orthodox and the unorthodox, the tramp and the plutocrat, the foreigner and the native; no questions are asked, as to whether the man who walks the road pays any taxes to support it, or whether his character measures good or evil by our standards; he may walk the road as he likes, so he walks it without interfering with others; the road belongs to all men who have need of it, or even imagine they have need of it, without money of anyone; the public road is a piece of indifference to communism. So also, in theory at least, is our public school system in its distributive side; the community makes its public school to teach all who have need of it, without regard to any kind of economic or religious or social discriminations. The same is true of the great galleries of art; of the free street railways of Australian cities supported out of economic rent; of municipal street lighting or free water; of an increasing number of values which economic experience is throwing over into the realm of free utilities. The experience of the world is slowly getting rid of an economy that finds justice in equality, goodness in liberty, safety for all men and things in the giving to all men of all things. We are just beginning to wonder if the true way of liberating and completing each man's life is not to make his bread and art as sure as his sunlight and air; if the final way of curing men of the desire for more than they need is not to make all that they need certain and priceless; if they may not so long hence when the cities will distribute bread and milk as freely as they distribute their public school education, or as the sun distributes its rays, and this as a practical economic measure, growing out of the experience which socialism will furnish. Every citizen will then have bread according to his need, as freely as he has a freemint or a street, according to his need. Men will labor freely in order to partake freely, and partake freely in order to produce freely and produce the best, when production and distribution are organized in the communistic harmony of the kingdom of heaven, which is none other than the kingdom of nature.

We can decide for or against no great principle by its immediate effect upon interests we hold valuable or sacred. We cannot inquire what will happen before we settle what is right. The principle is all that is important for us to know; we need not fear what will happen if we proceed to organize life by it; the happenings will be seen to, if we follow the principle in the unyielding faith that right is more practical than wrong. For instance, in debating the public ownership of industry, the first question is not as to what kind of management, public or private, will be most judicious and profitable; there is a question left open prior to that—the question of "elemental right." In spite of the speculators and the school-men we can decide economic questions only upon this ground of principle. A wrong life-principle cannot be practicable or safe in economics and government; and the highest known right cannot be impracticable or unsafe. To some of us, it is essentially wrong that industry should be privately owned and administered, and that by the evil principle of profit.

It is impossible for us to believe in a sincere or rational universe, and at the same time believe that some people should own that upon which all people depend. Our belief that the people in common should own the resources and things upon which they depend in common, and that they should organize their production and distribution for the equal good of all, is the resultant of our belief in reason and principle as inherent in the nature of things. We look upon civilization and its machinery as important only because they are the materials by which the spirit to do right can express itself, but a civilization organized for exploitation and profit seems to us unprincipled, inhuman and subhuman, and our faith in it as the only ground upon which we can reason about anything, demands a human society that shall express the highest right of which man is able to conceive. And the instinct for good, or the spirit to do right, is simply another term for the will of love.

In Holland the leader of the Independent party in parliament, Herr Kerckhove, has announced that in the future he would act with the Socialists in their struggle for universal suffrage.

A Philadelphia paper says Edison's plan to cheapen electric power by abolishing dynamo will throw hundreds of mechanics out of employment. Details of the new invention have not yet been given out.

The Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America have organized eleven new unions. The brotherhood now has over 150 local unions with 30,000 members, and is in a flourishing condition.

Coal mined in England last year sold for $33,000,000, and wages received by miners amounted to $21,000,000, or about one-sixth. This proportion holds good in the United States undoubtedly. No, there's no robbery in capitalism.

Trades Council of Ann Arbor, Mich., arranged a three-cornered debate. The Democratic workingman found fault to appear, and the Republican and Social Democrat dug into each other. Sentiment of the meeting was almost unanimous with the latter.

Standard Oil trust last week declared its quarterly dividend of $20,000,000, and all those holding stock certificates are requested to present the same and get their share of surplus wealth that has been kindly and charitably donated by the working people. The latter have no use for it.

Philadelphia printers are pushing a boycott against the Central Newspaper Union of that city, which issues placemaster for a hundred papers, for locking out its union employees. The concern is controlled by a Philadelphia Democrat, a German daily "workingman's friend."

Under socialism no one would be able to make a profit out of intoxicating liquors and consequently no one would have any desire to run "joints" in Kansas when the people voted against saloons. Therefore Mrs. Nation will find no use for her hatchet under a socialist regime.—Missouri Socialist.

The American Cigar company has already erected a mammoth plant at Dinghamton, N. Y., in which 5000 persons will be employed. It will be the largest factory in the world, and control papers say it will be equipped with the finest modern machinery, and also that the trust magnates will demonstrate the fact that "the day of manufacturing cigars on a small scale has passed."—Cleveland Citizen.

The employees of R. Mills, cigar manufacturer, are out on strike since the beginning of this week. They ask for an advance of $2 per 1000. From present outlook it looks as though they would win, as they have the full sympathy of their fellow craftsmen. Arrangements have been made to raise a fund for those out on strike by the West Side cigarmakers, for which purpose Underwood's Hall has been rented.

The Trades Council of Ann Arbor, Mich., invited representatives of the various political parties to address it, and there was a large audience of workingmen present for the occasion. Comrade D. J. Janerett presented the Socialist side of the question, and he is reported as arousing enthusiasm by his clear-cut representation of the class struggle and the profit system. The old party speakers of one of them a state senator, had hard slugging and had difficulty in explaining their position.

Don't coo on election day. Vote the Socialist party ticket.

Didn't Mention It.

It would appear that Mark Hanna is becoming somewhat sceptical about the value of the Roman Catholic church as a capitalist auxiliary against socialism, judging from his speech at the Republican club banquet in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, on the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday. At any rate, although Hanna recognized socialism as a menace, he did not on that occasion drag in the Catholic church as an ally against it, but placed the entire burden of the fight upon the "business man."

Instead, perhaps Hanna has been studying the recent encyclical and has got the impression that it doesn't sit down hard enough upon socialism to suit him. Be that as it may, we Socialists are in hard training for the "business man," and whether he is seconded by all the churches on earth or left to fight it out by himself makes little difference to us. Let him use all means fair or foul we are going to be decidedly in it on this "business" proposition.

The yearly conference of the Social Democratic Labour party will be held at Easter, and will be chiefly devoted to the elections and the relation of the party to the trade unions.

FRANCE.

A Socialist was elected to the chamber of deputies from the eleventh arrondissement of Paris, his opponent, the notorious Jew-baiter Max Regis, being defeated by more than 1,000 votes out of a total of 7,000 polled.

GERMANY.

The Rev. Dr. Stocker has been finding fault with the Socialists because they are too selfish, but as Singer told him in the Reichstag, this is a strange accusation for a man to make who belongs to a party that has made bread dear for the people.

LEVELLING DOWN.

The Effect of the Capitalist System of Production Upon the So-called "Learned Professions."

It would seem that the "dead level" which every good capitalist is afraid would result from the establishment of socialism, is rapidly putting in an appearance in the present society. Judging from the following opinion of a well-known Chicago lawyer, it would seem that capitalism is teaching the legal profession that it is in no way distinct from the other wage laborers:

The lawyer is not an ordinary business man, and any industrial development that tends to place him in this category, should be resisted by every member of the profession. As the reward of the hardest kind of drudgery and study, he is guaranteed the special privileges of his profession, just in the same way a physician is provided. Every doctor resents any infringement on his rights, and lawyers should do likewise. This talk about the industrial development of the present day being natural and inevitable is sheer rubbish. The lawyer is being destroyed by commercialism and it is time for him to strike back. It is all right for the legal representatives of large corporations and life-judges to rest satisfied with present conditions, but the young lawyer is confronted by a prospect which means starvation, dishonor, or the abandonment of his profession. A class of corporations has grown up that deal in legal business. They hire lawyers as clerks, and will ultimately control the best work of the profession. Great law firms will still exist, but they will be as they are, the friends and supporters of this very class of combinations. Look at the big law firms in Chicago. Everyone of them is supported by trusts and pools, from the Gas Trust to the Brewery combine. They make no protest in the interest of the profession, but the business of these concerns, would be more equitably distributed among the members of the bar. I have had occasion time and again to come in contact with the methods of conducting legal business controlled by accident insurance companies, and it is little less than disgraceful. Their whole policy is delay and the public, as well as the litigant seeking justice, is the sufferer.

More than fifty years ago Marx pointed out the tendency of capitalism to degrade the members of "professions" to the position of its paid wage-laborers, and this opinion verifies completely the truth of his observation. The necessary condition of capitalism is wage labor, and the lawyer, no more than the physician or clergyman, can hope to evade it. There is however one peculiar service that the lawyer will be thoroughly fitted for when he gravitates to his proper position in the ranks of the Socialist party. Lawyers more perhaps than any others, are qualified to explain the system by which "property" is acquired, and the opinion above quoted gives a very broad hint as to the possession of this ability. When enough lawyers have been hurled into the proletarian they will begin to tell tales that will be worth listening to. As they only exist at present for the preservation of capitalism, there is no reason to suppose that they will be less valuable in destroying it, when they understand that there is no other alternative.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Meetings are held every Saturday night at 8140 Commercial avenue (Sherman Hall). Speaker for next, J. B. Smiley, subject, "Public Ownership."

Comrade F. W. Knox and Albert Eisenman spoke at the agitation meeting arranged by the Twenty-second Ward branch, last Sunday afternoon, at their headquarters, 308 N. Franklin street.

The twenty-fifth Ward branch held a very successful agitation meeting last Sunday evening, at their Proletariat Hall, 180 Sheffield avenue. Comrade Thomas J. Morgan spoke on the "Historic Basis of Socialism."

Comrade R. A. Morris spoke last Sunday evening to a good sized audience at a meeting arranged by the Third ward branch at their headquarters, 325 State street. After the address there was an interesting discussion. The speaker next Sunday evening will be F. W. Knox.

The regular agitation meeting of the Socialist Educational club last Sunday afternoon at their rooms, 1133 Milwaukee avenue, was addressed by comrades J. H. Bard and J. S. Brennan. A large crowd was present and the meeting was a great success. The speaker next Sunday will be Comrade Eisenman.

The Twenty-eighth Ward branch continues to hold large and successful agitation meetings every Sunday evening at the headquarters, Socialist Hall, Armistage avenue. Four doors east of Milwaukee avenue. The speaker last Sunday was Comrade J. W. Bartels. Last Saturday night the comrades of this branch held a flag party and entertainment at Socialist Hall. It was a pronounced success and an snug sum was realized for the propaganda fund.

A general reorganization of the Thirty-third Ward branch took place last Wednesday night at the headquarters of branch, corner of One Hundred and Thirtieth street and Michigan avenue. A number of new members joined the branch. It was decided to retain the old officers of the branch inasmuch as they had proven efficient in the past. Arrangements were made for an energetic campaign. Also the branch decided to take fifty half-yearly Workers' Call postals.

Comrade Joe. Wanhope spoke last Sunday evening at a meeting of the Thirty-first and Thirty-second Ward branches, at their hall 608 S. Halsted street. A good crowd was present. After Comrade Wanhope had concluded, short addresses were made by Comrades Glanbeck and Meiler. It was Comrade Meiler's maiden effort. He has a splendid style of delivery, is well informed, and will undoubtedly make a valuable addition to the list of Socialist speakers in Chicago.

On Monday, February 19th, a mass meeting of the Carpenters' union was addressed by Comrade T. M. Collins at Seaside Hall, corner of Ohio and Milwaukee avenue. The hall was crowded and the address was listened to with much interest and appreciation, and the meeting indicated the beginning of another advance of organized labor in this city in which the co-operation of Socialists will be a valuable factor. Socialist trade unionists should give their most hearty assistance in stimulating this renewal of activity in the ranks of the unionists.

The Carpenters' local union meeting at Sixty-second and Halsted streets, turned out to be the number of about 200 to listen to an address from John Collins, the Socialist candidate for mayor in the approaching election. The speaker was well-received and his remarks elicited much applause, and apparently created a deep impression. The subject was "Trade Unionism and Socialism," a topic which is being effectively handled by Comrade Collins, who it may be said has given it most particular attention. Comrade Collins will speak at the same hall on February 23rd at 8:15 p. m., for the local union of Painters No. 184, and a large attendance is confidently expected.

The comrades of the Seventeenth Ward inaugurated their campaign last Sunday afternoon, by a routing meeting at Aurora Hall, corner Huron street and Milwaukee avenue. The speaker was Comrade Walter Thomas Mills, who took for his subject, "Why You Should Be a Socialist and How You Can Get Socialism." The success of this meeting has infused new life into the Socialists of this ward. They have arranged another meeting for next Sunday, with Comrade Mills for speaker. Two thousand hand bills will be distributed, and everything will be done to make this meeting even a greater success than that of last Sunday.

Miss Mary E. Colson, of Hull House, gave an earnest and convincing address last Saturday evening at Sherman Hall, in South Chicago, before the Eighth Ward branch of the Socialist party. Her subject was "Morals and Money," and she gave experiences from her work as probation officer to show that people are called "bad" and "immoral" for conduct which would be wholly blameless or even commendable were the economic pressure removed. She contrasted the boy who was thought too viciously extravagant to be allowed to himself collect the $3.00 which he had earned by seven days of ten hours labor, with the honored New York millionaire who purchased for a single evening's enjoyment the entire supply of a certain rare flower to be found east of the Mississippi. The speaker showed that the varying standards of morals are due to differing modes of making a living, and that "public morals" was a single standard of conduct will only become possible when all have the same way of making a living—as producers. The audience was sympathetic and appreciative, and shared in the discussion which followed the address. Next week Comrade J. B. Smiley, author of "To What Are Trusts Leading?", will speak on "Public Ownership" at the same hall.

Too Busy to Explain.

A general decline in the value of the assets of the Nebraska Loan and Trust company of Hastings, Neb., caused that institution to go into the receiver's hands, February 12. Its capital was $500,000 and it advertised a surplus of $155,000. The liabilities are unknown. The company is said to have made a great many loans on western Nebraska land and on farms. Now let Mark Hanna and Wm. E. Curtis come forward to explain this matter. According to them the farmers had all of their mortgages paid and money in the bank. Nary an explanation though. Mark is busy trying to collect pay for his labor of the campaign through the ship subsidy bill, and Curtis is at his usual game of skim-dunk.

"DEPENDENT ON CHARITY."

Capitalism Drives Wage Slaves From "Home" and Then Proposes to Whip and Imprison Them.

According to the report of the Bureau of Charities more than two thousand husbands have deserted their "homes" in this city, leaving their wives and families dependent on "charity," within the last year. Amongst all the alleged reasons for this, no mention is made whatever of the fact that workmen, even in their "homes" are "dependent" upon the owners of the means of production and distribution, in order to live. Existing marriage and divorce laws are given as one reason, and that good old stand-by, the presence of increased numbers of "ignorant foreigners," as another. There is not even a hint that economic conditions have anything whatever to do with the matter, and the remedies proposed are quite in keeping with the reasons given. "Drastic legislation," such as the restoration of the whipping post, and the keeping of the culprit in jail at hard labor, and supporting the deserted family from the proceeds, is the recommendation of "organized charity."

With such people "desertion" is not in any way criminal unless the deserted ones are left "dependent." It is in this alone that the crime consists. The individual who has succeeded in accumulating wealth by robbing the workers, (which is the only method of accumulation), can desert or separate himself from wife and family at his own sweet will, provided he leaves for their support enough of the plunder to render them independent of the "charity" of his brother exploiters, and "society" raises no protest. Let any of his victims, however, through economic stress be compelled to follow his example, and at once an outraged "morality" howls for the whipping post and imprisonment. Touch not the pocket of thy capitalist master, O wage slave! A special brand of "morality" lies therein, in which his private property, when he ceases to furnish you "employment," don't steal—that's a crime (for your class), don't beg—that degrades you, and above all, don't run away—that's expensive to your masters and therefore "immoral." Better stay in your "home," (if the landlord will let you), and starve quietly and respectfully with those "dependent" on you. Who knows but some charitable individual may discover your plight, and after your record has been thoroughly inspected, you may perhaps be listed as "deserving poor," and thus rise triumphant over your adversity. Take heart, take hope, take any old thing—that isn't in the pockets of your masters—but don't make any unnecessary fuss, and always remember to turn a deaf ear to those most immoral and unrepentant Socialists, who would destroy your reputation as "deserving poor," and that of your masters as "charitable rich."

Fighting for Buckers.

The Chicago Record always has its fishing pole in readiness for suckers, and its chief manipulator, (Curtis), being a good scratcher for bait, always has a sufficient supply of various qualities on hand. He baits his hook with sordid descriptions, with aristocratic nothings, with democratic humbuggery, with religious tolerance and intolerance, with historical inaccuracies and contemporaneous twaddle, but notwithstanding all of the confusion and interconfusion into which his statements become entangled, people will ask him for statistics. And oh, what a sugarcating his slippery style applies to them!—"the workman, reads Curtis between his lines; here are figures to show he is better off now than he was fifty years ago. What more does he want?" The workman cannot be better off now with ten times as much as he got fifty years ago, when that is only one-eighth of what he produces, then he was fifty years ago when he got nearly all that he produced. It is the difference between what the workman produces and what he gets that is the question, and not whether the advance in industry of fifty years have bettered his lot.

Organizer's Notice.

There will be a meeting at Forester's Hall, 632 Cottage Grove avenue, Wednesday, February 27th, 8 p. m., for the purpose of organizing the new Seventh Ward. All readers of the Workers' Call are urged to be present.

For distributing a pamphlet obnoxious to the powers that be, Walter A. Klenke, a young Massachusetts Socialist, has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment. Socialism is increasing so rapidly in Massachusetts to suit the ruling class, and the latter have evidently concluded that it is time to take action. The judge who tried the case stated that there was nothing obscene or indecent in the leaflet, but that it was nevertheless calculated to "corrupt the morals of the young." "Morality" must be carefully preserved on the ground that the workers might prove a seriously difficult and ultimately impossible.

If you are a workman, you make no mistake in subscribing for this paper. It deals directly with your interests and those of the class to which you belong.

THE PEOPLE'S MARX

THE PEOPLE'S MARX from the pen of Gabriel Deville and in the translation of Robert Rives La Monte, presents to the English-speaking Socialists the most excellent and successful epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital." This luminous epitome, from the last and seventeenth French edition, is issued in the style in every way characteristic of the publications of the INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

The Haverhill Social Democrat, remarks on The People's Marx as

The Bible of the working class, a bible whose study is as beneficial to the workman as is the orthodox Bible to the average Christian.

OTHER OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

The New York People on The People's Mr. B. O. Flower, in The Arena:

Only patient plodders and scholars, with tastes for economic studies, however, are able to master Marx' Capital, and many attempts have been made to furnish the people with a luminous epitome of this great work. Up to the present time no one has so satisfactorily accomplished this work as Gabriel Deville, in the volume before us. His People's Marx was published in France in 1893, and has now been excellently translated into English by Robert Rives La Monte.

The price of The People's Marx is: one dollar and a half in cloth; seventy-five cents in paper. With orders sent in before the 1st of March we will give as premium a cloth copy of the Silver Cross, (price 50c.), with $1.50 edition; or, a copy of the Civil War in France, (price 35c.), with the paper edition.

WALTER THOMAS MILLS, A. M., Principal

Night School in Chicago.

Correspondence School for all points outside of the city or for those who cannot attend the night sessions in the city.

The course is given in twenty lessons, and covers the scientific, economic and historic argument for socialism.

READ WHAT THOSE WHO ARE TAKING THE COURSE ARE SAYING ABOUT IT.

"This course will greatly help anyone who wants to do effective work for socialism."
John Peterson.

"These lessons are not only interesting and instructive, but they unfold to us our own life's meaning in this study of socialism. The whole world is made so beautiful and our own relations to it so direct and simple that we cannot help but understand; and it is so presented that we FEEL the truth as surely as we understand it, and so it cannot be forgotten."
Louise Mittlacher.

"Anyone of average intelligence can take these lessons, as nothing could be more simple or more lucid than are his explanations."
Geo. R. Rosenberg.

"These lessons are dealing with topics which I have studied before, but some way the whole world is being transformed before my eyes. Things which were familiar to me are put into such new and unexpected relations as to produce results of which I have never even dreamed before. I am only half way through the course, but life must always mean to me more than it has meant before, and socialism is simply the means by which real life is revealed and made possible for all."
Dr. Herbert E. Phillips.

"These lessons are showing to me how each stage of human progress grows of necessity out of the previous ones. They make one want to find out to what the world is growing now, and then try to help it along."
G. Andersen.

"The logical reasoning of these lessons is so clear and so connected that the points cannot be missed or misunderstood, and the lessons derived from them will be of lasting benefit to those who wish to work for socialism."
James Hunt.

"Every workman who wants to find the way out can find it here."
Peter Horslev.

A. Hassmussen.

If you live in Chicago and want to join in the work of this school come to the Schiller Building any Tuesday night.

But you can get the same lessons by correspondence anywhere. Mr. Mills will send you the lessons in printed form, then he will examine your report on the study of each lesson, correct your work, answer your inquiries, and help you on in your study in every way possible.

THE INTERNATIONAL

SOCIALIST REVIEW

This is the only periodical in the English language reckoning among its contributors all the great Socialist writers of the world. Among those whose writings have appeared in its columns in the last seven months are Charles H. Vall, Leonard D. Abbott, W. T. Brown, H. M. Hyndman, Paul Lafargue, E. V. Debs, Job Harriman, Ernest Crosby and Emile Vandervelde, while Edwin Markham, Kier Hardie, Rev. T. McGrady and Jane Adams have promised articles.

PROF. GEORGE D. HERRON conducts a department each month on SOCIALISM AND RELIGION, containing matter of great interest and value to all students of social questions. It is the only instance in the history of Socialist literature where a regular department was conducted upon this subject by a man who combines such rare natural talents with a thorough knowledge of the literature and doctrines of both Religion and Socialism.

MAX R. HAYES, equally well-known as a writer and speaker in both the Socialist and trade union movement, edits a department on THE LABOR WORLD. This consists of a thorough summary of the happenings in the field of organized labor, with descriptions of the more important mechanical and industrial changes of each month.

The department on SOCIALISM ABROAD is infinitely superior to anything of the kind ever attempted in the English language. In addition to a full and able corps of foreign correspondents, several Socialist dailies of Europe are subscribed for and nearly all the important weeklies and monthlies are received on exchange and made use of in its preparation. With the mass of interesting things that foreign Socialists are now doing, no one who is at all interested in socialism can afford not to read this department.

The department of BOOK REVIEWS is edited with the special aim of making it a continuous and complete compendium of the wealth of material in current literature that is of interest to Socialists. The regular EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT is conducted by the general editor, A. M. SIMONS, who discusses topics of current interest in the light of the Socialist philosophy. An interesting phase is a financial summary of the month, giving the facts as to prices, wages, bankruptcies, financial consolidations and general trade movements that are of interest to Socialists, but which have hitherto been buried in trade and financial journals and inaccessible to the average reader.

With the issue for March, 1901, the SIZE WILL BE INCREASED from sixty-four to EIGHTY pages and an INTENSELY INTERESTING story will be begun to run through several numbers. This story will be of a literary value to accord with the high standard maintained by the remainder of the publication. While written from a Socialist point of view it does not attempt to be an economic treatise, and its literary merit and entrancing plot will gain for it a prominent place among the romances of the year.

The INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW is the most complete expression of the Socialist movement ever attempted and no student of socialism, favorable or hostile, can keep informed upon the subject without reading its columns.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, single copies 10 cents; no free samples. For twelve one cent stamps we will mail a copy of the REVIEW and PROF. HERRON'S booklet "Why I Am a Socialist." FATHER MCGRADY'S new 50-cent novel mailed free if you send $1.00 for the REVIEW at once.

LOOKING BACKWARD

The Workers' Call Completes Two Years of Socialist Activity.

LIVED A "STRENUOUS LIFE"

Retrospect of Events in Its History and the Efforts of Its Founders and Supporters.

Just a little over two years ago this week, several comrades met at my house to arrange for some work in connection with the approaching municipal campaign. As the talk went on it became more and more apparent that we were seriously handicapped by the lack of any means of reaching the voters of this city. More than this there was a general dissatisfaction with the manner in which our national organ, The People, was then conducted. Finally it was suggested that we try to start a paper of our own. This was no small undertaking at that time. There were only a trifle over 300 members in Section Chicago and practically all were manual laborers.

Nevertheless, after much discussion the matter was brought before the Central Committee, and it was found that a paper seemed to be just the thing that all had been waiting for. One comrade after another pledged himself to contribute a certain sum toward its maintenance and establishment, until $200 had been promised by a little band of less than fifty workingmen. And it might be well to say right here that practically every one of those pledges was redeemed as well as many more made later, and again and again.

At last a scanty outfit was purchased, the present headquarters rented in partnership with "The Arbeiter," and preparations made to issue our first number. But things kept coming up that had been unforeseen, and when the day came for publication we were still far from ready. However we worked on until supper time, then concluded to stay a little while in the evening, and then worked on almost until daylight was breaking in the East before the proof of the first copy of the Workers' Call was in our hands. And this was not the only time that such work was necessary. More than once has both editor and compositor worked on until the " wee sma' " hours, in order that the comrades throughout the country might not be disappointed in receiving their paper.

And right here let me pause to render a well-deserved tribute to one without whose efforts The Call would long ago have ceased to be. To the self-sacrifice and persistent toil of Comrade M. L. Klauber more than any one man do the Chicago comrades owe the fact that they are today in possession of one of the best Socialist papers in this country. With no prospects of seeing his thoughts grow into visible form and assist in spreading the doctrines in which he believed, which has always been the one great consolation of an editor or contributor, he has worked on week after week, enduring all manner of discomforts, until at last he has the satisfaction of seeing the paper on a foundation, that while it may still call for some sacrifices and much hard work, will never again be in danger of ceasing to exist. And with this number he severs his connection with The Call, so that it is especially fitting that it should bear some little testimonial to the work he has done.

But if one were to attempt to tell the story of all those who have made personal sacrifices for the sake of The Call the list would soon grow overlong and tiresome. There is Comrade Berlyn who "was never skunked once" for nearly the whole two years, in an imaginary game which he played each week with the general public to secure at least one subscriber. Had we fifty workers like him a Daily Call would be in sight. There was Comrade Peter Damm, to whom more than any other man outside the actual staff, was due the founding of the paper and who for many weeks led all others in the number of subscribers he secured. No matter that since he has found himself opposed to the present policy and has sought to destroy the work he once did. We know that his efforts in that line are hopeless and fruitless, and so we can thank him for the good he did and wait the time when he shall be again among us working as he did at the beginning.

So soon as The Call established that it became at once apparent that it was destined to "fill a long felt want." Aside from The Tocsin of the French Socialists, which was a weekly work, there was not a line of clear-cut Socialist literature in this country. The comrades of the Social Democratic party of St. Paul, Minn., will celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Paris Commune on Sunday, March 18th, 3 p. m., at Pfeiffer's Hall, corner Eighth and Wabasha. There will be a program from 2 to 5 p. m., and dancing afterwards. Tickets will be sold at 25 cents each, and a large attendance is expected.

New York, at once realized the excellence of the new paper and took it up eagerly. It soon had a circulation of nearly two thousand in each of these cities. The total circulation rose to nearly 25,000 in less than five months.

Then came the trouble of July 10th, 1900, which marked the culmination of a long series of abuses. De Leon and DeLeonism were repudiated by the Socialists of America. Then for months the entire energies of the organized Socialists were spent in a fratricidal strife. Then it was that the order went out to "boycott" The Call. At the same time The People, falling into new hands, began to be worthy of the support of all Socialists and so naturally the comrades in New York state who had hitherto done so much for The Call began to work for the paper which was nearer at hand. More significant than all else, the history of the Socialist movement for the last few years has shown beyond the possibility of a doubt that when Socialists begin to fight each other they do little propaganda work. So with hostility on the part of many old friends, the rise of new, and strong competitors and the indifference of those who should have been working for it, there was small wonder that dark days came to The Call. There were times when after each issue there would be a long-drawn breath with an expression of wonder as to whether another would ever appear. To make the matter worse "The Arbeiter," at last succumbed to the attacks of those who called themselves Socialists, but have really become the most valued allies of capitalism, and left The Call with a double burden of rent to meet. Still the faithful comrades rallied to its support and finally the light began to dawn and for several weeks the circulation has been increasing at a rate that reminds one of those palmy days of its early career.

No sooner was the question of DeLeonism settled than it was apparent that the time had come for a union of all Socialists who stood upon the International platform, and The Call was one of the first papers to insist upon that unity—a position from which it has never wavered to the present moment. In this as on every other question The Call has ever stood for a clear-cut, uncompromising policy that would tend to a unification of the forces of labor opposed to those of capitalism.

When one stops to think of the tremendous changes that have taken place since that Thursday night two years ago, he cannot deny that the cause of socialism is advancing. The little over 300 members of Section Chicago has now grown to over 1,200, the half-dozen socialist papers in the United States have now become over a hundred. On every side, and over and over again, The Call has worked up a strong circulation in some city only to receive a little later "Vol. 1, No. 1" of a new Socialist paper, marked "Please Enlarge," and dated at the place where the large club had grown up. Then, as was to be expected, and as it should be, all our best workers would transfer their allegiance to the new friend and The Call list would fall off. So more and more The Call has been transforming itself into a local paper, believing that the time has come when every large city and every state at least should have its own Socialist paper. Chicago certainly has reached the point where it can support a Socialist paper, and in The Call it has the paper it needs.

Such a flood of reminiscences rush upon me as I sit writing this that I know that I must watch lest I weary all my readers. But who can forget "The Call picnic." The first one, when for the last time all Chicago comrades worked shoulder to shoulder, for it was held on the very day when the division started in New York. Then there was the second one when the street car company seemed to have entered into a conspiracy to prevent our getting to the grounds, and then there is the next one coming this summer at the old location, where we hope all the comrades can get together once more for united action.

If the past has been one of struggles and sacrifices the future promises to be a time of growth and victory. To one who has watched the growth and development of the Socialist movement in this city, one fact is apparent above all else, and that is that increase in membership, growth in activity, and the building up of Socialist interest, votes and enthusiasm, follows the circulation of The Call. Take a map of the city of Chicago and mark upon it those centers in which The Call had the largest circulation one year ago and you will have outlined the territory, in which the greatest activity is going on today. The moral is so plain that he who runs may read.

A CONVENIENT LIMIT

Education of Future Wage Slaves Circumscribed.

STOPS AT PRIMARY GRADES.

Why Free Text Books in the Public Schools Are to Be Supplied in the First Four Grades Only.

Under present conditions the question of "Free Text Books" in the public schools is a matter, in which it is not to be denied, the working class have considerable interest. There are few amongst them who do not aspire to have their offspring equipped as far as possible with the accumulated knowledge of the ages, in order that they might be able to meet and understand the possibilities of the future.

But the object of the capitalist class on this question is entirely different. They desire that the education of the children of the workers shall be limited—just sufficient to produce a wage slave of the lowest aspiration. Therefore, understanding that "knowledge is power," they by indirection, strive to confine the education of the working class children to the first four (the primary) grades. They admit that the purchase of text books by the parents of these children is often burdensome, and so the Chicago School Board, which is the instrument they use in controlling public education, decides that free text books shall be furnished to pupils in the FIRST FOUR GRADES ALONE.

The books necessary for a single pupil in these grades cost about 50 or 60 cents per year, but when the child of working class parents, whom they admit are too poor to pay the 50 or 60 cents, completes the course and is ready for the higher grades, capitalism practically declares that it is now time for him to go to work, to enter the competitive wage slave market. The books in the higher grades being more expensive, it is not to be thought of for one moment that they should be furnished free, the root of the "free payer" the property owner, recoiling in horror at the very idea.

It is only the most superficial observer who would say that this furnishing of free text books in the first four grades to the children of the proletariat is in any sense a "step towards socialism." On the contrary it is decidedly a capitalistic step, and calculated solely in the interest of the capitalist class.

The only manner in which a step towards socialism can be taken in this city is to elect John Collins, the Socialist candidate for mayor, to that office. Then "free text books" would not be limited to the first four grades, but would cover the complete course of public education. And not only free text books, but sanitary clothing and wholesome meals would be provided for all pupils, whether in primary, grammar or high school grades, and that without the stigma of "charity" attached. Neither would the teachers have any reason to fear reductions of their wages, nor would it be necessary for them to dance attendance upon low and ignorant political heelers of capitalism as at present. Neither would they have any reason, in case of Socialist victory, to beg for what naturally belongs to them—a just compensation for their services.

Hear "Mother Jones."

An audience of six thousand gathered in the Grand Central Palace, New York, on February 22nd, to listen to an address from "Mother Jones," the famous agitator amongst the coal miners of Pennsylvania. The building was packed so that even standing room was hardly obtainable, and when the speaker in an eloquent and impassioned burst of oratory told of the rising dawn of socialism, and the passing away of the murderous capitalist civilization of the present, the enthusiasm of the audience knew no bounds. The many years which "Mother Jones" has devoted to the study of the life conditions of such a large section of our laboring population as the anthracite coal miners, to sufficient guarantee that she knows whereof she speaks.

CAPTURES A CHURCH

West Side Socialists Open New Headquarters.

DEDICATION OF THE "TEMPLE"

Prof. Geo. D. Herron Makes the Inaugural Address Before a Densely Crowded

Last Sunday was a banner day for the Socialists of the West Side. It was the occasion of the dedication of the new Temple of Socialism at 120 South Western avenue. The importance of this step in the progress of the Socialist movement in Chicago cannot be overestimated. It has been productive of a great increase in activity among the comrades of the West Side, and it has aroused an interest in the cause among people who have heretofore had only a very incomplete and mistaken impression of the Socialist movement. The splendid campaign of agitation inaugurated on the West Side is a source of inspiration to those who have labored for socialism in its early stages of development. The result of this wonderful increase in activity will undoubtedly be felt at the ballot box in April.

The location of the new Temple of Socialism is the old church building at 120 South Western avenue, a few doors south of Madison street. The seating capacity is about 600. It has been vacant for several months and when the comrades of the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Twentieth wards joined together for agitation purposes they were impressed with its utility as a center for agitation. Accordingly it was secured by the above-mentioned ward branches and suitably furnished. It will be used for large agitation meetings, and will also be used by the various branches interested as headquarters for regular business meetings.

At the meeting last Sunday Comrade Geo. D. Herron delivered an eloquent address. The following account of the meeting and the address appeared in last Monday's Record, and will serve our purpose in two ways. Besides being an excellent, though rather highly colored account of the event, it likewise shows how the capitalist papers which in the past have ignored the Socialist movement are at last compelled, out of its growing importance, to notice it at length in their columns. The Record account is as follows:

"Though I take the wings of the dawn and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, though I sit in hell or make my bed in heaven, there do I find the American plutocrat," said Prof. Geo. D. Herron in his address to West Side Socialists at the Temple of Socialism dedicated yesterday at 120 South Western avenue. Nearly 600 persons were crowded into the old "calvary church," which has been secured by the Socialists as their temple, and the applause that greeted Comrade Herron was prolonged.

"After shining the 'Marcellus' Frederick G. Strickland cried 'What do we want?' 'Socialism,' shouted the crowd, and Professor Herron standing beneath a portrait of Karl Marx began his address. He said:

"I shall speak to you concerning the creation of the world. It is an old subject but the world has never been created. We have the very raw materials out of which to make a world fit for men and comrades to work in, but the process of creation is yet to be. We shall never have a created world until we are able to adjust these raw materials to the everlasting and all-pervading principle of co-operation. The world refuses to be made by a ruling or religious class. It will never be made until all men work together."

"There is no sense in the present world in which the majority is working in want for the support of the idle few. There is enough in the world to give plenty to all. We are slowly learning of nations what is equally true of men, that no nation can prosper at the expense of another nation without taking to itself the elements of its own destruction."

"In my travels throughout the world I have risked my life among wild people, in order to find a place free from the capitalist system. I found the Hindustani Oil company everywhere, grinding the people and subverting governments to its purposes. I learn that the late extradition treaty between the United States and Russia, which was rushed through congress, had beneath it the ownership of the Russian oil fields. I found that the company that corrupts legislatures at home buys governmental favors abroad. I found the American capitalist everywhere, but building more wisely than he knows."

"This capitalistic system is solidifying the working-people of the entire world and even the laborers of Japan are awakening to the questions of socialism. It but needs faith in a single city now to fire the world and bring about the regeneration to make men realize that where one man rises to success millions go down to misery."

"That is what they call the survival of the fittest! Are they the fittest? With all reverence, I say no! Could against Jesus in the contest of civilization and tell me which will survive?" "Could," shouted a man in the audience.

"Yes," said Professor Herron, "could would win against the savior of men in such a contest, yet it is this brutal, man-crushing, bloody struggle that we call our modern civilization. A civilization in which men struggle for the bare right to die in the hideous, wanton, agonizing of the competitive system."

Professor Herron then continued: "Socialism comes to make actual the dreams of the saints, the prophets and the philosophers. To make a world where there will be the heaven that the priests and the politicians have promised in some far-off millennium. It comes after a winter of sorrow to bring inspiration to labor, to labor which is worship."

"I call upon you, the Socialists of this city by the inland sea, this city in which the military force of brutal capitalism has terrorized labor as in almost no other city, to stand firm for the cause of socialism. Stand until you possess the city is a community of rights, until Chicago shall be light to the world."

At the meeting Sunday morning Comrade F. G. Strickland delivered an excellent dedicatory address. The program for next Sunday, and for each succeeding Sunday until further notice, is as follows: Socialist Sunday School, 9:30 a. m.; lecture and chorus, 10:30 a. m.; general agitation meeting under the auspices of the Social Crusade, 8 p. m. A regular Socialist party agitation meeting will be held every Tuesday night at 8 p. m. There is a free reading room in connection with the temple which will be open every evening.

In addition to these meetings the various ward branches interested in the Socialist Temple hold their regular meetings as follows: Thirteenth ward, every Wednesday at 8 p. m. Socialist Temple; Fourteenth ward, every Friday at 8 p. m. Socialist Temple, southeast corner Grand and Western avenues; Twentieth ward, second and fourth Thursdays at 8 p. m. Socialist Temple; Thirty-fifth ward, first and third Fridays, at Liberty Hall, corner Chicago and Hamilton avenues; Thirty-fourth ward, every Monday evening, 8 o'clock, Socialist Temple.

Rock Island, Attention!

The comrades of Rock Island have been displaying unusual activity in Socialist agitation recently and have placed a full ticket in the field for the coming election. On Monday, March 4th, Prof. Geo. D. Herron will deliver an address in that city at the Turner Hall, at 4 p. m. Readers of The Call in Moline, Davenport and Rock Island, and vicinity, should avail themselves of the opportunity to hear this famous agitator, and should endeavor to make the meeting as large and successful as possible.

CHICAGO NEVER

SO RICH AS NOW

Bank Statements Show Larger Balance Than Ever in the City's History.

ALL SHARE PROSPERITY.

Big Concerns and Individuals Have Cash, While Few Want to

WHAT THE FIGURES REVEAL.

Chicago WAS NEVER SO RICH AS NOW. The banks are crammed with money and SO GREAT IS THE PUBLIC PROSPERITY THAT FEW seem to need it enough to pay even the low rates of interest that prevail. The surplus wealth belongs not only to the big concerns which carry their accounts with the national banks, but to the individual depositors—THE WORKINGMEN AND WOMEN—who place their stores with the savings banks.

Socialist Pointers

The spring campaign will be what you make it.

Has Hampson really slain himself with his own jawbone?

Mayor Harrison favors municipal ownership—twenty years hence.

Will a "business administration" help your "business" of hunting a job?

Chicago can be the banner city for socialism in America by a little extra work.

If you want to know what the Socialists would do if in power, look at France.

That strong opposition to the billion-dollar steel trust will probably be found to be too strong to work.

The least you can do is to let everybody in your neighborhood know that John Collins is a candidate.

We promised to free Cuba, but as the capitalists want to exploit it the proposition becomes quite different.

The enemy has plenty of money. The Socialists must depend on the nickels.

The Morgan that Admiral Sampson alludes to as having "no social standing" must not be confounded with J. Pierpont Morgan.

The chances are that if you send a Socialist paper to a friend it will make a convert of him, and think how happy that would make you.

The man who cannot make a speech can circulate a petition. The work of the Socialist is to get the candidate gets on the ballot.

Enlistments for our new army are slow. The young men are staying at home to watch Frick's $20,000 job. The latter should get tired and quit.

In the fight against the Building Trades Council it looks as if the contractors and newspapers had been trying to pound these consciousness into the workers.

Democratic politicians are afraid Harrison will lose the "labor" vote but they need not lose sleep over it. The "labor" vote has not grown as wise as that of all of a sudden.

There is no danger of going to sleep if you attend the Socialist church on the West Side. If anyone should chance to get drowsy Comrade Strickland would at once call for the party yell.

THE SECOND MILESTONE.

On the front page at the top of the left hand corner of this issue of the Workers' Call, may be read the words: Second Year—Whole Number 164. We do not pretend that this inscription is a matter of great importance to what capitalist journals vaguely designate as the "reading public," but we assume that to the entire body of Call readers it has more or less interest, and we assert positively that to a comparatively small group of comrades in this city it is of more than passing importance.

The inscription alluded to is now, to use a theatrical term, making "positively its last appearance." In the next issue its place will be occupied with the legend: THIRD Year—Whole Number 164, from which the intelligent reader will doubtless infer that we are attempting to apprise him of the fact that the Workers' Call has completed its second year of existence with the present number.

And upon the front page may also be found, directly underneath the aforesaid inscription, a vivid and interesting account of the struggles, trials and tribulations to which this journalistic infant has been subjected since birth, a record of triumph over difficulties beside which Mr. Roosevelt's conception of "the strenuous life" appears as easy as rolling off a log.

And in this account there is no exaggeration. It was written by one who attended at the birth throes of this journal, and to whose care it was consigned during its first year of infancy. Most of the comrades alluded to in the sketch, are still in the city, and they will recognize its truthfulness from memory.

And so the Workers' Call is still in the field—on the firing line—and all the time striving and thriving, and growing, and—well, yes, we may as well say it, for there are occasions—blossoming. For if there are none to celebrate the auspicious anniversary we have determined to do it ourselves.

We firmly believe in a policy of expansion—for the Workers' Call.

So far, the growth of the paper has been evidenced only in its increased circulation—in an expanding subscription list. This has been due to our energetic hustlers in Chicago and elsewhere, and while exceedingly gratifying, cannot be justly considered an outward and visible sign of growth. The physical bulk of the infant is yet the same as at birth. There is nothing in its outward appearance to denote the fact that it is fully two years old. This must be remedied, and it is up to us to adopt a policy of expansion for that purpose.

We therefore take much pleasure in announcing to our subscribers, agents, and the comrades generally, that it has been determined to overstep the boundary line and benevolently assimilate extra territory to the extent of one column per page. The next issue of the Workers' Call will appear as a SEVEN-COLUMN paper.

Congress has just reduced the pension of General Lawton's widow to $4000, and at the same time appropriated $150,000 for the expenses of testing new guns. Lawton, who died on the 10th line, may be considered about as genuine a "patriot" as capitalism can produce, but economy must be practiced, even if those the "patriots" leave behind are reduced to poverty in consequence.

EDUCATIONAL WORK.

School of Social Economy in Chicago a Valuable Training Ground for Socialist Agitation.

The Workers' Call has given its approval and support to the work of Walter Thomas Mills in his Chicago School of Social Economy from the beginning of his work. The school has advanced to a point now where it seems to us something more direct and definite ought to be said concerning this undertaking than has yet been said by any of the Socialist papers.

His course of twenty lessons in his night school in this city is now more than half finished. Those who have been following the course thus far are in a position to judge of its value as a training school for Socialist workers. The highest words of praise that can be spoken are found in the fact that, while the students include those who have made a special study of these questions for years, together with many who are making their first attempt at this time, and besides include persons with all degrees of historical and scientific training, there is not a single instance of disappointment or complaint among all of its students.

The school is made up of busy people, and not infrequently night work has compelled an irregular attendance, but even when taken out of their connection the lessons have been so full of information and the conclusions so evident and of so great value to socialism that these night workers are as enthusiastic as the rest.

We have had an opportunity to examine the first two printed lessons to be used in the correspondence work, and we do not hesitate to say that if you are anxious to get the arguments for our cause so arranged in your mind as to make evident the logical necessity for socialism from every possible standpoint, if you wish to plainly see that the whole story of civilization is but the story of the development of socialism, and if you wish to get these things so fixed in your mind that you can lay them on any and all occasions, then you cannot afford to miss the opportunity to take these lessons by correspondence.

One good feature of the work is the care with which the facts have been gathered. There are in the second lesson alone twenty-eight different references given in the foot notes to the sources of information, and all are from the works of those who are widely recognized as the most reliable writers on the subjects concerning which information is sought. It is no small matter to have so gathered and put in shape to use, the conclusions of ripe scholarship on topics in any way related to socialism. But the real service of Comrade Mills is in taking these facts of modern scholarship and delivering them from the useless chaos in which the investigators have left them, so far as making use of them in the social discussion is concerned. Comrade Mills is marshalling them for real service. He is putting them into a logical order, so that the great events of history and the great discoveries of modern science seem to join hands in the defense of socialism as if modern scholarship had done its work for no other purpose.

Comrade J. B. Smiley, who is himself one of the best-read men in the Socialist movement, is one of the board of examiners in this course. He is regularly taking the course himself. After having finished more than half of the night school work, and after he had examined the first printed lesson for the correspondence work he wrote to Comrade Mills as follows:

Dear Mr. Mills:—When you first outlined to me your course of lessons in social economy it, impressed me as being an admirable thing. As time has gone on and I have watched the way in which you have carried out the plan I am more and more convinced of its value. I have just been looking over my copy of the printed lesson. If you carry out the whole course in this way you will produce a book which will contain a perfect mine of information, and facts for the use of the Socialist which cannot fail to be of great aid to those engaged in propaganda work. You are building up an argument to which, I believe there is no answer.

Yours sincerely,
 J. B. Smiley.

The Workers' Call wishes to say again that it gives its unqualified support to this school and wishes to assure the Socialist press and the Socialist workers everywhere that they can make no mistake in doing the same.

If you can spend two or three hours each week in study you should send in your application at once and commence this work. If you cannot do so you can tender our cause no better service than to look up some comrade who can and persuade him to do so.

Labor Legislation Rejected.

An attempt made last week to have a bill passed in the interest of labor organizations was defeated overwhelmingly by the class-conscious tools of capitalism of which congress is composed. The bill sought to "limit the meaning of the word 'conspiracy' as applicable to trades unions, and also the use of injunctions as applied to disputes between laborer and capitalist. It is stated that its defeat caused "considerable agitation in labor circles," but this agitation will be as nothing to that which will ensue when the workers learn that "laws" are made and enforced for the benefit of the ruling class alone. The agitation will then take on a Socialist character.

There is trouble brewing in the Social-Democratic party in Germany, says the Chicago Daily News. There is undoubtedly. But what do Daily News didn't tell its readers was that the "Social-Democratic" party is intended solely for capitalist consumption.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

A census statistician employed in Cincinnati has been recently engaged in finding out something of the statistics of work and living amongst the laboring masses of that city, and has reported that he has discovered families whose daily expenses for food were less than 7 cents per individual. As the average food expenses of convicts are considerably over three times this amount, it would seem that these people, (who are described as all working hard), might better their condition by doing something which would land them in the penitentiary, as there doesn't seem to be much virtue in acquiring a reputation as "law abiding citizens" on 7 cents per day.

Long before it was at all certain that Counsel Wildman had been lost in the wreck of the city of Rio Janeiro, a half dozen applicants for his position were filed in Washington. Let's see. Wasn't it said to be a peculiarity of Republican administration that "under its regime the 'job' would seek the man?"

Pittsburgh, Pa., it is reported, will shortly return to Cuba to look after the interests of a big Cuban-American land syndicate, of which he has been appointed president. Now if we could only be certain that Alger was suitably provided for, the Cuban question might be regarded as having reached a satisfactory conclusion.

Harrison says that it would be madness to bind the city to a longer period than twenty years franchise extension for the street railroad, giving as a reason that improvements in the management are so great in twenty years as 'not to permit of such a course. Carter H. is correct. There is an "improvement in management" coming along that will easily snap any "binding" which Harrison's class may attempt. It is called socialism, and it will be worse than madness to get in its way.

The capitalist press of this city gloats over the fact that there are propositions under way for the surrender of the Building Trades Council charter at an early date. They may rest assured, however, that even if the charter is surrendered a larger union of the workers will take the place of the Building Trades Council, with capitalist politics sternly prohibited therein. In forcing the surrender and dispersal of the present body, they are but clearing the way for a recognition amongst the workers of the destined mission of their class, and while they may enjoy their triumph now, the plundering classes may prepare to cope in the "near future" with a body of intelligent workers, against whom their weapons of corruption and treachery will be useless.

Frederic Harrison, the English philosopher, paid a visit to the Board of Trade in this city recently and was so much amazed by what he saw that he refused to speak. Harrison is said to be a thinker, and the sight of a crowd of men engaged in "making money" without adding a particle to the wealth of the community was certainly enough to strike him dumb. An article from Harrison's pen on his impressions of this modern den of thieves would make interesting reading. Possibly though, the folly of those who produce the material with which these "business" men juggle would strike him as the most wonderful part of the performance.

If a "just" arrangement is made regarding the extension of franchises, the Chicago City Railway company intimates that it is prepared to invest $9,000,000 in improving its road service. Nine millions to be invested by capitalists—for what? For the benefit of the people? No. An enlarged basis for increased dividends. Organized labor has declared that there shall be no more extension of the franchises, and Carter Harrison, the probable Democratic candidate for mayor, is willing to extend them for twenty years! Harrison, his probable Republican opponent, is also in accord with Harrison, and is also willing to "deal justly" with this corporation, from a capitalist point of view.

Can any workman who has read the statement of the Chicago Federation of Labor on this subject, and approves the stand taken, find any justification for voting the ticket of either of the capitalist parties? Can he be true to himself and his class and do this? No. There is but one ticket—one working class ticket—the ticket headed by John Collins, the trades unionist and Socialist, that he can in justice to himself, vote for. The ticket headed by John Collins endorses and supports the position taken by the Chicago Federation of Labor, viz: that the roads belong to all the people and that whatever advantages accrue from their operation shall go to all the people, and that we want no corporations to make "improvements" for us—we can do that ourselves—and own them after they have been made.

Members of a North Side cycling club, it is said, intend to give a masquerade in which the members will appear as "nobles." No doubt it will furnish an immense fund of amusement for those people, but as most of them are wage workers, some of them may, when the next commercial crash comes, have to face the real thing, and it may be that they will feel ashamed of parodying the misery of unfortunate fellow creatures.

ONE OF THE OLD GUARD.

Lissagaray, Historian of the Commune, Passes Away at the Age of 82 Years.

Lissagaray has succumbed to largititis contracted in exile. The disease had been steadily advancing during the last three months, until the sufferer was almost unable to utter a sound. An operation could not be performed on account of the extreme weakness of the patient.

Lissagaray died after frightful agonies in the arms of his devoted wife and of Dr. Dupont. He had reached an age of 82 years.

The old Socialist had all the qualities essential to a good historian, and his temperament was that of a fighter.

He utilized the painful time of the exile for research in the libraries of London, that are so rich in documents of the French revolution. Nobody knew the men of 1793 better than he. He was on intimate terms with them. His most hasty work, such as newspaper articles, bear the stamp of inexhaustible learning.

He had inaugurated the gatherings in the Rue de la Paix, where the most eloquent men of letters and politicians could be heard. His essays on "Musset and Youth" brought him renown.

He was imprisoned for several months in Beaulieu with the majority of the sentenced members of the International, because he published aggressive articles in the "Reforme," of which he had become editor.

He followed Gambetta into the province, established the camp at Toulouse, fought in the army of the Loire up to the time of the cessation of hostilities, protected in Bordeaux against the outrages to which Garibaldi was subjected. Finally he took his place in the ranks of the confederates which he left only on the Pere Lachaise after the last shot had been fired.

He was sentenced to exile. In London, where he was on familiar terms with Marx, he eked out a living by giving lessons and writing. There he wrote the first edition of the "History of the Paris Commune" and "Eight Days behind the Barricades."

Without fire, often without bread, Lissagaray brought this work of justification of the proletarian class to a successful close.

After the amnesty he founded the "Bataille." His contributors were Jeffrin, John Labrousse, Victor Marouck and Brousse. Later on came Arsene Crie and Emile Violard. Suppressed in 1887, the "Bataille" made its reappearance two years later and fought its well-known unrelenting battle against the Boulangist Cesarism.

Vigorous and well-made, an indefatigable walker, always on the lookout for a fight and taking delight in danger, gifted with a superb memory, alert and full of life, this Basque might have aspired to glory. He was endowed with qualities that might have taken him to the highest positions, but a magnificent disposition spoiled all his admirable abilities and condemned him to isolation and inactivity.

He should have been one of the workers of the Revolution and he was only its defender.

In spite of all this, he served a good purpose, and his services may be measured by the hatred he inspired in the ranks of capitalism. He loathed above everything the militarism and the clergy. His devotion belonged to the republic and to the proletariat which he served faithfully.—From "Le Peuple," Brussels.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THIS FOLLY OF BEING GOOD, by Charles H. Kerr. Pocket Library of Socialism; price 5 cents. Chas. H. Kerr & Co., 55 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

A work which will be found interesting by all young people, containing, as it does, many instructive and original observations upon the subject of marriage from the Socialist standpoint. The absurdity of the current conception of "goodness" is depicted in simple though forceful language, and the entire work will be found highly original by those who are as yet unacquainted with Socialist habits of thought. It is also handsomely illustrated with two sets of pictures used as contrasts. A reproduction of Millet's famous picture, the "Man With a Hoe," is matched against a photograph of a famous Greek statue, the "Doryphoros," or "Man With a Spear," and a reproduction of a Greek goddess is contrasted with a portrait of Madame Blaise Lippmann, one of the characters in Victor Hugo's well-known work of "Les Misérables." The pamphlet will be found exceedingly interesting and should be widely circulated.

Washington a Back Number.

Police officials, detectives, stock exchange gamblers, mine "promoters," business men, and politicians all give it as their opinion that George Washington would be somewhat of a misfit if he were alive today. They all agree that his inability to be would react adversely upon his interests in present society. As these parties speak from experience their verdict may be taken on the whole as correct. This is presently the era of liars and the liars themselves realize it. If Washington could return with his awkward habit of truth-telling, he would find himself standing idle in the market place, capitalists having no use for his "unbusinesslike" peculiarity. Outside of the Socialist movement he would find but few to receive him.

Socialist Party Platform

In view of the fact that the municipal elections in Chicago are to take place in April, the Socialist party, in convention assembled, once more affirms its allegiance to the principles of international revolutionary socialism.

In calling upon the working class to rally to the support of the principles of socialism, the Socialists wish to emphasize the fact so often reiterated, that until the complete triumph of the working class, which can only be accomplished in the overthrow of the capitalist system, be accomplished, any temporary palliatives must of necessity be partial and insufficient. Therefore we present the following immediate measures which our candidates will enforce according to the amount of power conferred upon them, for the consideration of all workingmen who desire to achieve the emancipation of their class by means of the ballot:

1st. The employment of all unemployed citizens by the municipality.
 2nd. That the municipality shall furnish support and assistance to all workingmen upon strike, and aid them with every public power which can be used to help them accomplish their objectives.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Glimpses of the World-wide Struggle of the Proletarian Army for Its Liberty.

AUSTRIA.

Statistics have been published relating to infant mortality in Austria and Hungary. Out of 100 children no less than 24.13 per cent die in Hungary before they are five years of age, and 24.91 per cent in Austria. Infant mortality is great in England, yet here it is only 23.67 per cent; this shows the need for reform.

BELGIUM.

Very great efforts are being made to carry on a Socialist propaganda in the country districts, and with great difficulty several co-operative societies have been formed. The task is a very hard one, as the Clerical party is very strong in the agricultural districts.

DENMARK.

Both chambers have passed the bill instituting vote by ballot. It is generally thought that this measure will increase the number of votes for Socialist candidates.

FRANCE.

Lectures are now being given at one of the institutions in Paris by Socialists on (1) The History of Socialism, (2) The Organization of Socialism in France and in Other Countries, (3) Economic Organization, (4) Social Legislation.

GERMANY.

Communal elections have been held in Saxony, and the Socialists have been successful in increasing their representation. They have representatives in 14 places, and 29 councillors have been elected.

HOLLAND.

There are 25 states in the German empire, each of which has a local parliament. There are 78 Socialist deputies in 15 of these assemblies. There are 11 in Bavaria, 5 in Wurtemberg, 7 in Baden, 6 in Hesse, etc. There are none in Prussia, but the system of election there is the most reactionary that ever existed; compared to it that of Austria is democratic.

ITALY.

Great misery exists in the district of Puglia, and the mayors have decided to resign en masse if they do not obtain some help from the government, as they do not feel that they can be responsible for the maintenance of public order.

RUSSIA.

The Russian government has decided that the Finnish recruits shall now be liable to serve in any part of the empire. By this measure the last remnant of Finnish home rule is taken away, as the garrisons now will be Russian soldiers, while the Finns will be sent to all parts of the empire. It is a great shame, but the wonder is that the Russian government has allowed Finland to have home rule so long.

SPAIN.

The Jesuits have been occupying public attention lately. A little while ago the government insisted on the king's confessor being changed, as this reverend gentleman held and taught that liberty was one of the deadly sins. A case has also been before the courts recently in which the Jesuits managed to induce one of their lady penitents, who was rich, to enter a convent; her family have no objection to her becoming a nun, but do not want her to give all her money to the religious order. This is a good object-lesson to the French Republicans.

Ward branches are notified that the outside date for filing petitions is March 15th. Any petitions, whether city, town or aldermanic arriving in this office at a later date cannot be filed. Petitions should be pasted together, rolled up and mailed to this office. The supply of campaign leaflets is rapidly diminishing, only about 40,000 remaining. The following branches have not yet secured any: 1st, 2nd, 5th, 7th, 9th, 10th, 12th, 13th, 30th, 31st, 32nd, 33rd. These branches should secure a supply at once before what remains is exhausted.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Suggestion for Propaganda.
 The following letter from a correspondent is here reprinted for its valuable suggestions. It contains a to on method of making Socialist propaganda. It shows vividly that even those ordinarily considered as most unlikely subjects for conversion can be influenced by Socialist argument when properly brought forward.—[E.D.]

Editor Workers' Call.
 During the last few weeks I have been putting in operation a plan that I had hatched out and have found that good results have followed.
 Some time ago I began to break the ice in the way of writing my dear old father, one letter every Sunday of from 8 to 20 pages, appealing to him for the future and the welfare of his children in the most forcible and convincing language I could think of.
 His reply to me in his first letter was as follows:

"My Dear Son:—
 Your letter of Sunday, November 18, from Oklahoma City, Okla., to hand, and will say that I have been through the horrors of the late Civil War from 1860 to 1864 and at that time my heart was hardened to the occasion, but year by year after that I began to see the error of humanity in shooting each other down and leaving wives and children half-fed and half-clothed at home. I did yet the politicians and associated press say that when a workmanman goes away from his wife and children to shoot down other workmen and gets killed himself, and his family suffers and waits patiently for his return, they call it 'patriotism.' I call it cold-blooded murder to satisfy the greed of the moneyed class and their politicians. I will say that your letters to me have been shining stars over the East and will admit that you are more than my equal in political economy. You have pointed out the pathway for me to travel to get out of this misery and worry that I have gone through for over 40 years. You nearly broke my poor old heart when you tell me the actual conditions that you and the rest of my children are laboring under to feed and clothe yourselves, and that your conditions are rapidly growing worse, which shows that your living is gradually coming downward and lower than chattel slavery. I am a witness to that, as I am in the same condition with one foot in the grave and the other almost there, with not a piece of earth to call my own to buried in.
 But your letters have shown me the way and they make me feel so young and happy that I shall pull off my old hat that I have worn for five years, and throw it to the plutocrats and show my white head to the world that I am now a Socialist and will work the remainder of my life, and that is not long, for the cause of humanity and socialism.
 Please send me all the literature you can and I will go out amongst the dead timber around me.
 Your relieved and happy father,
 'Schuyler.'"

I have also been corresponding with my brothers and sisters, and they are just beginning to comprehend what socialism means.
 Let me suggest this plan to Socialists who have relations to work on, and they will readily see its effects to their heart's content.
 "Schuyler."

A Source of "Inspiration."
 In the career of one Harris, who was recently elected president of the C. B. & O. railroad, a capitalist daily declares that there is "much inspiration and encouragement for the young men of the country." The much-belauded Harris started as office boy in 1864, and thirty-five years afterwards attention to duty made him president of the road. Its all so beautifully simple when you understand it. Only "hard work, ability and concentration of effort" are needed and the reward is absolutely certain. Yet there are probably thousands of young men who started at the same time as Harris, who fulfilled all these requirements and are still chained to a desk at shamefully low wages, or else tramping the streets in a hopeless effort to sell their almost exhausted labor power. But the capitalist press doesn't dwell upon the hard-working failures. Harris is the man just now. If it had not been Harris it would have been Smith, Brown, Jones or Robinson. But it would have been one man at any rate. Railroad presidents even now are not particularly numerous, and when Morgan, Rockefeller and Vanderbilt get through with their "consolidation" process, their numbers will decrease to the vanishing point. Capitalism is worse than a lottery. The prizes in the latter as a rule remain the same in number, while in the former they constantly tend to diminish. The best that the "young man" can now hope for is that his ability as a slave driver will be recognized and rewarded by his masters.

A Lesson From Chicago's Election

Suggestion for Concentrating Forces on Aldermanic Candidates from Selected Wards.

Although three months have passed since the recent presidential election, it is not too late for Chicago Socialists to gain from it a lesson for the city election of April 2.

The official canvass of the vote of Chicago and Cook county shows a total Socialist vote of 6,752, in addition to the 424 votes cast for Maloney and Remmel. In the nearly 7,000 votes cast for Debs and Harriman, every one of the thirty-five wards of Chicago is represented, the country towns of the county casting 24 Socialist ballots. Yet, spite of the splendid agitation carried on by our comrades, and the more than a score of public meetings held weekly during the campaign, there were but eleven of the thirty-five wards in which more than two hundred persons voted for Debs and Harriman. These eleven wards, ranged in order of their votes for the Social Democratic party candidates are as follows:

TABLE I.

Rank	Ward	ADP. Vote	Total Vote	Approx. Fraction
1.	Thirty-fourth	631	30,734	1-31
2.	Fourteenth	510	14,677	1-29
3.	Fifteenth	522	15,755	1-31
4.	Tenth	424	14,001	1-33
5.	Thirteenth	425	13,910	1-34
6.	Ninth	320	9,300	1-32
7.	Sixteenth	327	11,391	1-35
8.	Eighth	235	7,125	1-38
9.	Twenty-seventh	227	7,948	1-39
10.	Twenty-sixth	210	14,993	1-70
11.	Thirty-third	200	9,011	1-45

From this table it appears that the Thirty-fourth ward cast for Debs and Harriman a larger vote by more than one hundred ballots than any other ward in Chicago. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth come next behind, with a difference of but 27 votes in favor of the Fifteenth, while the Thirty-third stands at the foot of this roll of honor, with only 200 votes cast for the Socialist candidates. The Tenth and Thirtieth wards deserve special mention with their more than 400 votes each for the election of Debs and Harriman.

When, however, one compares the Socialist vote with the total vote of the wards, this result is somewhat altered. It now appears that the Thirty-fourth ward, with its large voting population of 30,734, gives to its Socialist voters an approximate fraction of only 1-31 of the whole. The Fourteenth ward rises to the first place in the list, its Socialist ballots being approximately one-twenty-ninth of the whole. (Figures below hundreds are rejected in obtaining these results.) The Fifteenth ward again follows immediately upon the Fourteenth, while the Thirtieth, with its huge voting population of 21,910, gives to the Socialists but one fifty-fourth of the voting strength of the ward, spite of its 425 votes.

If we now make a more accurate comparison between the Socialist vote and the total vote cast in the respective wards, the alteration in rank will be even more startling. Dividing the total vote of each ward by the vote for Debs and Harriman, as shown in the earlier table, the following result is obtained—the division being carried to but three decimal places:

TABLE II.

Rank	Ward	Per Cent of Socialist to Total Vote
1.	Fourteenth	.027
2.	Fifteenth	.026
3.	Eighth	.033
4.	Ninth	.034
5.	Thirty-fourth	.020
6.	Twenty-seventh	.028
7.	Tenth	.024
8.	Thirty-third	.022
9.	Thirtieth	.019

In each of these nine wards the Socialists cast more than 2 per cent of the total vote, with the exception of those of the Thirtieth, who fell below this percentage by less than one-tenth of one per cent. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth wards head this second list, the Thirty-fourth falling to the fifth place, and the Thirty-third rising to the eighth in rank. Meanwhile, the Eighth ward, with its comparatively small voting population of little more than 7,000, has risen to the third place in the city in its Socialist percentage, falling scarcely behind the Fifteenth ward—both showing somewhat more than three and three-tenths per cent. The Socialist percentage in the Ninth ward is midway between that of the Eighth and Thirty-fourth.

It appears, then, that in five several wards of Chicago the Socialist vote last November rose above three per cent of the whole. But this is a long distance short of a majority.

During the last campaign some Socialist comrades suggested that we ought to elect a Socialist mayor in 1902. Would it not be well, first, to elect at least one Socialist alderman? A single Socialist alderman, sitting and voting in the midst of the common council, would do more to bring the meaning and the hope of socialism home to Chicago workmen and workingwomen than any amount of other propaganda. As in Hawthill, so in Chicago, the election of the first alderman would be the entering wedge.

If the system of proportional representation advocated by our national party platform were in force in Chicago, the present city council retaining its present membership, it would be necessary for the Socialists to obtain in common but one thirty-fifth of the total vote of the city in order to elect an alderman. This would require less than a doubling of our present vote, and when it is remembered that we have already trebled it in less than two years, it takes no imagination to realize that we could easily win to our ranks under these conditions enough of those who this year voted against us for fear of "throwing away their votes"—to readily give us our own representative. As it is, it is plain that we must change our methods. While the present electoral system continues in force, and it will plainly so continue till the Socialists get into power—the only means for obtaining any representative at all in the governing body of the city is to concentrate our forces on some one ward and from that elect a representative. For practical purposes it is probably wisest that the Socialist party should select not less than three of the most hopeful wards, using in each of them, every honorable means at our disposal for bringing the truths of socialism home to the voters. Apparently, were such a plan followed, the three wards selected would fall among the list of nine given in the second table. It does not however follow that the wisest selection would be the first three on the list.

Up to this point, the old ward names have of course been used. As the Carey ordinance has now been sustained, it becomes necessary to construct a new table showing the new names and boundaries of the wards in which the Socialist party is most likely to win success:

Rank	Ward	ADP. Vote	Total Vote	Approx. Fraction
1.	Thirty-fourth	631	30,734	1-31
2.	Fourteenth	510	14,677	1-29
3.	Fifteenth	522	15,755	1-31
4.	Tenth	424	14,001	1-33
5.	Thirteenth	425	13,910	1-34
6.	Ninth	320	9,300	1-32
7.	Sixteenth	327	11,391	1-35
8.	Eighth	235	7,125	1-38
9.	Twenty-seventh	227	7,948	1-39
10.	Twenty-sixth	210	14,993	1-70
11.	Thirty-third	200	9,011	1-45

The new Fifteenth ward is splendidly organized for socialism and has been carrying on an active agitation both before and since its change of name. The change of boundaries will rather aid than hinder the Socialist vote, only that portion of the old ward west of Humboldt Park being cut off. The Socialists of the new Twenty-eighth ward—the old Fifteenth—are also finely organized, public Socialist meetings being held every week. Apparently in this case the change in boundaries will not aid the Socialist vote. The new Tenth and Eleventh wards are both slightly increased in size over the old wards most nearly corresponding. The columns of the Workers' Call show that here, also, an active propaganda is being conducted for socialism. The Twelfth ward is much smaller than under its old name of the Tenth, but still includes Douglas Park, and several boulevards—boulevards usually meaning non-Socialist territory. Comrades of this ward will be best able to tell the probable effect of the boundary changes upon the Socialist vote of the ward. The new Twenty-seventh ward, in the extreme northwest of the city, retains its old name and its old enthusiasm for socialism. This ward contains more branches of the Socialist party than any other ward in Chicago. Its only drawback is its thin settlement and its distance from Socialist speakers—other than its own. At present it is holding several meetings each week in the cause of socialism.

The two new wards at the extreme south end of Chicago—the Eighth and the Thirty-third—will probably gain most by the boundary changes, from the Socialist point of view. In each case, all that portion of the ward north of Twenty-first street is cut off, while the southern and manufacturing end of the ward remains. Of these, the new Thirty-third ward is by far the most hopeful. Under its old name of Thirty-fourth, it has for some years carried the largest Socialist vote of any ward in Chicago. The comrades of the ward, with very little help from outside, have carried on a constant agitation for socialism, particularly among the employees of the Pullman shops, distributing handbills, leaflets, pamphlets and books relating to socialism, gaining subscribers for the Workers' Call and other Socialist papers, and holding frequent public meetings. Even the socialist entertainments conducted by this branch are not allowed to become mere money-making occasions, as was shown in the great concert and ball held recently at the Kensington Turner Hall, when Comrades Vahlteich and Mills led the thoughts of the listeners away from the city would do more to help the Socialist party to elect an alderman here in April, provided only that the entire Socialist forces of the city set themselves to the task. The new Eighth ward has before it a great future for socialism, owing to the presence of the Illinois Steel company and other manufacturing plants. Thus far, the comparative youth of the Socialist organization in the ward, the weariness of employers after their long twelve-hour day of labor, and the influence of "prosperity" have combined to make the Socialist propaganda in this ward particularly difficult. But the ward is waking up; the Socialist vote continues to increase, and public meetings conducted by the branch of the Socialist party in the ward are being held every Saturday night at Sherman Hall in South Chicago. The German comrades of this ward have recently organized on the east side of the Calumet a German branch of the Socialist party, holding frequent public meetings.

Should the plan of concentrated effort here suggested be thought a wise one, it will be necessary to bring to the aid of selected wards all, and more than all, of the methods employed for the fall election. Socialist party headquarters should be secured for the month of March in each of the wards where it is hoped to elect an alderman. Here Socialist literature of all kinds should be constantly on hand, and a delegated comrade present to answer questions at noon, as well as in the early evening. During March, also, public Socialist meetings should be held at the ward headquarters on every evening of the week. Programs could be varied by debates with non-Socialists, and enlivened by Socialist songs. Always there should be the freest discussion at the close of the address, together with questions from the audience. Other public meetings should be held at important points in the ward, especially during the week before election. Less important wards may well spare for these meetings such speakers as Comrades Herron, Walter Thomas Mills, and our candidate for mayor, Comrade John Collins.

The matter of advertising is of primary importance. Not only should there be cards containing a program of the principal meetings, and printed on the back with the Socialist party ticket for the city and ward, suitable for sending by mail, but handbills should be distributed at all the stores and public places of the ward, and left on a single day at every house and flat, by a previously arranged canvasser. Huge posters, also, should be posted on billboards, announcing the principal meetings and the Socialist party candidates. On the day on which an important meeting is to be held a wagon containing banners and posters announcing the event could be driven about the ward, accompanied by the drum, which did such effective service last fall. In one ward, so simple a device as securing the services of five small boys, carrying flags and a banner announcing the evening meeting, and marching in single file back and forth for a distance of three or four blocks in the neighborhood of the hall—has had astonishing results in increasing the audience. In the house-to-house canvass, not only should bills and announcements be distributed, but copies of the Workers' Call, of Comrade Collins' speech, and of general propaganda leaflets. In case the Socialist comrades of the ward cannot afford time for this canvass, small boys and girls will be glad to take part in it after school, for a small consideration, and will do the work thoroughly and well. Would it not be worth while, also, to have the Workers' Call sent from the office for six weeks before the election, at the expense of the Socialist party of Chicago, to a selected list of perhaps five hundred voters each in the two or three strategic wards chosen? In this case, the list of names would be furnished by the Socialists of the ward, who would afterward personally solicit subscriptions from those to whom the paper had been sent. Each number of the Call, during the month before election, might well be made a special campaign number.

Other methods of propaganda will occur to each of the comrades. Nothing has been said of the sale of Socialist literature at the public meetings, obtaining subscriptions there for the Workers' Call and other party organs, advertising through newspapers, or of personal conversation. Each of these may be most effective. It is quite probable that an aggressive press committee would find plenty of employment. Frequently even the capitalist papers of Chicago would be willing to print items of news about the Socialists, and without adverse comment, if "copy" were furnished them in advance. Last year one of the local papers of South Chicago printed in this way an address to the public of the Socialist candidate for alderman, in what was then the Thirty-third ward—a most effective reply to the address published by the Republican and Democratic candidates.

In conclusion, it should be said that for this plan of concentration on certain wards, should be adopted by the Socialist party of Chicago, no possible jealousy should be aroused on the part of wards not thus noticed. We are all seeking the same object—the success of socialism. The election of a Socialist alderman in another part of the city would do more to help the Socialist vote in our own ward than anything else that we could do or that could be done for us. Nor need such special effort hinder the work in other wards. Of course from now till election, at least one public Socialist meeting will be held each week, in each of the wards of Chicago. Meanwhile, each will rejoice in the common work of all which is going forward at the vantage points of the Socialist line of attack.

Laura Willard Taft.

There is something sublimely childlike in the belief of the trade unionists that their employers will enact legislation what the workers are refused in the shops.—San Diego Chief.

It is said that the name of the new steel trusts of trusts will be the "United States Steel Company." That's all right. We won't have to change the name when we take charge.—Southern Socialist.

The labor commissioners of North Carolina report that wages of mechanics in that state increased 44 per cent in the last year, but that the workers receive but slight benefit from the advance in wages because of a proportionate increase in the cost of living. So that the workers really had the pleasure of holding a few dollars more than usual for a little while.

If the workman is only able to buy back a sixth or seventh of his product with his wages, this fact alone should explain to any thinking person why THE WAGE SYSTEM IS A FRAUD. No workman can part with five-sixths or six-sevenths of the product he creates and still retain enough for decent livelihood and infirm age.—Henry E. Allen, in Gatesburg Labor News.

The farmer as a producer is as much a slave as the wage worker. While he may own the means by which he produces wealth, under our commercial system the capitalists fix the price of his labor. He has nothing to say as to the price of what he receives for what he produces or what he pays for what he buys. If this is not labor on the auction block what would you call it?—Farmers' Review.

The Bryanistic legislature of Alabama has again turned down a child-labor bill. The former law, fixing the limit when children might be employed by capitalists at 12 years was surreptitiously repealed six years ago, and ever since that time the labor organizations have pleaded for a new law, but just as often the ex-slave owners have spurned them. At present Alabama mill owners can hire infants if they want to. It would be well for somebody to point out the difference between the "workingman's friend" Bryanite of the South and the "full dinner pail" McKelvey plutocrats of the North. Democratic papers, please copy.—Cleveland Citizen.

You can't obtain the full product of your labor even though you know how it can be obtained, until you show workers acquire similar knowledge. The Workers' Call will help them to acquire it.

ACCEPTS THE NOMINATION.

Chas. H. Vall, Socialist Candidate for Governor of New Jersey, to His Constituents.

George H. Strobel, Chairman New Jersey Campaign Committee, Social Democratic Party.

Dear Sir and Comrade:—Your letter of recent date, advising me of my nomination by the Social Democratic party for the office of governor of the state of New Jersey, received. I wish through you to thank the members of the party for the honor thus conferred upon me. It is indeed an honor to receive such a nomination from the Social Democratic party—the party that stands for the interest of the proletarian class.

The economic development has separated society into two antagonistic classes—the capitalist and the proletarian. The interest of these two classes being diametrically opposed, a class struggle is inevitable—it is the necessary outcome of class distinctions which involve class interests. The Social Democratic party is distinctively a party of the working class, and is based upon the class struggle. It emphasizes the necessity of class-consciousness on the part of the working class, for only as laborers become conscious of their class interests will they unite to secure their freedom. While socialism represents the class interests of the proletarian, it also represents the higher interests of every member of society, because it will realize a higher and nobler civilization.

We thus call upon the working class, and all others in sympathy with its historic mission to abolish wage slavery and establish a higher order of society, to unite their efforts to this end. It is only by the workers' united efforts along the line of class interests that their emancipation can be secured. The first step is mastery of the public powers. Political power is necessary to any class which desires to better its economic condition. Political power is the key to economic emancipation, and political action, on class-conscious lines, will secure to the working class possession of the key.

That the working class is sorely in need of a betterment in its material condition none will deny. The disgrace of the century just closed, is that with the hundred fold increase in our power of wealth production sufficient to supply many times over the needs of all the people, we have only succeeded in adding chiefly to the individual wealth and luxury of the few. The great mass of the people, when we consider all their circumstances, are no better off today than they were thirty years ago, and many are worse off, and this condition will remain until we make the fundamental principle of social justice—equality of opportunity—a realized fact in our social organization. In the present class organized society the great bulk of the people have no opportunity for the full development of all their faculties and powers. We have attained the material basis for the abolition of all poverty, but its realization is prevented by our perverted economic system. Poverty today has no excuse for existence, and would be impossible were the industrial system such as to compel every man to live by the fruit of his own industry. The distinctive feature of every system of social injustice, chattel slavery, of feudalism, and capitalism, is the power of the non-producers to appropriate the wealth of the producers. Slavery is abolished only in name; the fact still exists. No man is free so long as he is dependent upon some other man for an opportunity to earn a livelihood. If a man owns that which I must have he virtually owns me. If he owns my bread or the means by which I get my bread he owns my physical and moral being. The very fact that all people in common depend upon the resources of nature and the tools of production, evidences that they should be owned in common. There can be no liberty, peace or social harmony so long as a few own that upon which all depend.

These facts must be brought to the attention of the people in this campaign as never before, also the fact that our economic relations are the foundations of society and of our civilization, while morals and religion are their followers and fruits. It is our material conditions that precede our mental and moral development, just as in a garden the flowers and fruit are conditioned, as to existence and quality, by the rocks under ground. We emphasize the material side of life, because we realize that it is impossible for the masses to be moral and intelligent in their present insecurity, dependence, and exposure to all kinds of temptations. The law of love and service can never be the fundamental law of either the individual or social life, so long as the present industrial system of antagonisms exists—all attempts to regenerate society under such conditions must necessarily fail. Competition brutalizes men and negatives the higher instincts and aspirations. It turns the naturally kind and sympathetic into moral monsters. The spirit of love, fraternity, and brotherhood grows out of common interests and mutual dependence. Socialism would realize the conditions for a noble life by making the interests of all identical. The solidarity of mankind would then be realized and with it the lofty dreams and noble ideals of the ages.

The Social Democratic party demands the abolition of the present planistic, anarchistic and immoral system. We propose to substitute co-operation for existence in place of the present struggle for existence. The application to society of the law of all organisms—co-operation—would transform and ennoble humanity. We want every man, woman and child to be well housed, clothed and fed. When industry is scientifically organized this can be accomplished by two or three hours' daily labor, thus giving time and opportunity for mental and moral development.

Let us resolve at the beginning of this new century, that we will more completely consecrate ourselves to our beloved cause. It is worthy our enthusiasm and zeal, for it presents to the world the only solution to the vexed problems that confront modern society. Let us who have seen the light proclaim the gospel of emancipation in season and out of season. Carry to those of our fellows sitting in darkness the light of Socialist teachings. Point out to them the cause of their servitude and oppression, and fearlessly proclaim the remedy—the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution. Show them that the old political parties represent the interests of the capitalist class. The petty political issues which the Republican and Democratic parties raise are only for the purpose of fleecing the laborers on the one hand and throwing dust in their eyes on the other lest they see the only real issue—Socialism versus Capitalism. The old parties defend the present system of wage slavery and exploitation; the Social Democratic party proposes to abolish it and substitute therefor a social democracy, in which the industries will be owned by the people and carried on for use—not for private profit. A vote for either old party is but putting another rivet into the chains of economic servitude.

As Socialists we have a great responsibility resting upon us. Into our hands has been committed the new gospel—the good news for the world's disinherited. A danger confronts the twentieth century—the danger of an unintelligent resentment of wrongs that are not distinctly understood and which could only result in anarchy and disintegration. Socialism, by educating the masses on the economic question, is the only power that can avert such a catastrophe. It is ours to be missionaries of progress and civilization. All over our land, and in fact, the whole civilized world, the proletariat is organizing under the banner of the Social Democratic party into class-conscious bodies having for their aim the mastery of the public powers, to the end that the present system may be supplanted by the Co-operative Commonwealth.

Conditions are now ripe for the transformation. The nineteenth century was distinctively the evolutionary period of socialism. First, during the germinating period, evolution proceeds slowly, but it gains in rapidity and finally the decisive step is usually accomplished at once, and is termed revolution. Revolution is the decisive step in evolution and is generally the last step to a period of slow growth and preparation. Christianity in the Roman empire, the Reformation, the French revolution, the abolition of chattel slavery, are notable examples of the working of this principle. Every careful discernor of the times realizes that we are nearing the decisive point. The trust is the immediate forerunner of the social revolution. The sun of the Co-operative Commonwealth is already beginning to redden the eastern horizon, bringing promise of the glorious day. Let every man who desires the betterment of society, a nobler and truer civilization, cast his vote in the coming election for the party that stands for its realization—the Social Democratic party. Speed the day of its triumph and the dawn of a nobler humanity. Every ballot cast for socialism brings nearer the day of human emancipation. Socialism is the evangel of human brotherhood. It will realize the golden age of peace, justice, and plenty for all. All hail the kingdom of social justice—the Co-operative Commonwealth! Let us take new courage and press forward. The future is ours.

With a deep sense of the great responsibility implied in becoming the standard-bearer of the Social Democratic party in the gubernatorial campaign, I accept the nomination tendered me and again express my gratitude for the confidence thus reposed in me.

Yours fraternally,

street, on Saturday, March 9th, commencing at 8 p. m. Music, singing, recitation, and speech-making—everything necessary to give all comers a good time will be provided.

There will be a mass meeting at Forrester's Hall, 613 Cottage Grove Avenue, Thursday, March 12th, which will be conducted by the new Seventh Ward branch, which was reorganized Wednesday, February 22nd, with fifteen members. The speakers for this occasion will be John Collins, the Socialist party candidate for mayor, and B. Berlyn.

The comrades of the Twenty-sixth Ward branch will soon lose one of their most active workers, Sigrid Hakanson, who is preparing to make Seattle, Wash., his home hereafter. Members of the branch while regretting the necessity of parting with Comrade Hakanson sincerely wish both his wife and himself the prosperity and happiness which they look forward to in their new home.

A public meeting will be held in the Twenty-sixth ward at 1635 Lincoln Avenue, near Irving Park Boulevard, on Sunday, March 12th, at 3 p. m. Speakers, John Collins and J. B. Bard. Business meetings will be held at this address every first and third Wednesday at 8 p. m. The election of secretary and two delegates to the Central Committee will form the important business of the next meeting.

The German comrades of the Twenty-sixth ward organized last Thursday evening with a membership of thirty-two. This branch has arranged for regular agitation meetings every 2nd and 4th Fridays of each month at Social Turner Hall, corner Belmont Avenue and Pauline Street. The next meeting will be held Friday evening, March 3, when Comrade Julius Vahlteich, ex-member of the German Reichstag, will speak on "The Necessity of Organization."

At the headquarters of the Thirty-first and Thirty-second Ward branches at 608 S. Halsted Street, on Sunday evening, February 12th, Comrade T. J. Morgan spoke to a large and attentive audience on the "Historical Phase of Socialism." Next Sunday, W. H. Wise will lecture in the same hall on "The Workman—The Sleeping Hercules." On Wednesday, March 8th, Professor Geo. D. Herron will speak at the Neighborhood House, 1234 W. Sixty-seventh Street, corner May, subject, "The Kingdom of Heaven."

The Twenty-second Ward branch after reorganizing has changed its headquarters from 708 N. Franklin Street to 69 Clybourn Avenue. A meeting was held at the new quarters last Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. There was a good crowd present. The address of the evening was delivered by Comrade A. Klenke, who talked on the question of the municipal campaign. There was an interesting discussion when the speaker had concluded. Arrangements have been made for holding meetings every Sunday evening.

The Seventeenth Ward held another very successful agitation meeting last Sunday afternoon at their headquarters, Aurora Hall, corner Huron Street and Milwaukee Avenue. Almost every seat in the hall was filled. Walter Thomas Mills delivered an excellent address on "Socialism and the Department Store." The comrades of this ward have entered into an active campaign of agitation. There will be another meeting at Aurora Hall next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Comrade Mills will deliver an address.

On last Sunday at 8 p. m., an audience of between seventy and eighty people gathered at the hall of the Twenty-eighth Ward branch on Armitage and Milwaukee Avenues to listen to an address upon "Expansion," from Comrade Wanhope, who was advertised as the speaker of the evening. The closest attention was paid to the address, and an extremely interesting discussion followed, which was participated in by many of the branch members. This branch is holding a series of meetings in which the opportunity is given of hearing most of the local speakers on socialism. On next Sunday at 8 p. m., the address will be given by P. Sissman.

The comrades of the Eighteenth Ward have arranged for an agitation meeting at Madison Hall, Empire Building, on Madison Street, opposite Madison Street, Wednesday evening, March 8th, at 8 o'clock. Comrade Walter Thomas Mills will speak. It is especially urged that every member of the Eighteenth Ward branch do his best to make this meeting a success, and to get out a good crowd. This branch, while not so strong numerically as most of the other West Side wards, has good material in it for an active campaign. Every comrade will get a hustle on himself for the next few weeks. It is certain that the Eighteenth ward will soon have as large and useful a branch as any in the city.

Machinists' Local Union No. 124 held a step party on last Saturday evening at 8 p. m., at the Empire Building in W. Madison Street, and managed to obtain a general good time. There were three speakers on hand to address the meeting and Brother Broderick opened the proceedings with a most impressive speech on the necessity of organization. He was followed by John Collins, the candidate for mayor on the Socialist ticket, and between six and seven hundred men heard Brother Broderick's speech, supplemented by an address upon the necessity of political as well as economic organization. The absurdity of fighting the boss during a strike and voting for him on election day was well illustrated. The speaker then explained what the power of the boss was, and how the workers themselves, through their vote being cast for the two old capitalist parties, who were equally their enemies and plotters. The address closed amidst loud applause, and three rousing cheers were given for the speaker as the next mayor of Chicago.

The South Chicago Daily Calumet gives the following report of the meeting of the Eighth Ward branch last week:

"James B. Smiley, the author of 'To What Are Trusts Leading?' lectured Saturday night at Sherman Hall, under the auspices of the Socialist Club on the subject, 'Public Ownership.' He said that the real cost of transportation was but a fraction of what is now charged, and claimed, on the authority of official reports, that the actual cost of carrying a passenger from Chicago to New York was not over one dollar. He held that the same principle applied to industry as well, and that under public administration of manufacture much that is now regarded as luxury would be within the reach of all. Public meetings are held by the club every Saturday night. The subject for the next meeting is 'The Effect of Machine Production on Social Organization.'"

Meetings for the Week.

Sunday, 3 p. m., Central Music Hall, Speaker, Prof. Geo. D. Herron, subject, "The Spiritual Basis of Economic Equality."

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW

This is the only periodical in the English language reckoning among its contributors all the great Socialist writers of the world. Among those whose writings have appeared in its columns in the last seven months are Charles H. Vail, Leonard D. Abbott, W. T. Brown, H. M. Hyndman, Paul Lafargue, E. V. Debs, Job Harriman, Ernest Crosby and Emile Vandervelde, while Edwin Markham, Kier Hardie, Rev. T. McGrady and Jane Adams have promised articles.

PROF. GEORGE D. HERRON conducts a department each month on SOCIALISM AND RELIGION, containing matter of great interest and value to all students of social questions. It is the only instance in the history of Socialist literature where a regular department was conducted upon this subject by a man who combines such rare natural talents with a thorough knowledge of the literature and doctrines of both Religion and Socialism.

MAX S. HAYES, equally well-known as a writer and speaker in both the Socialist and trade union movement, edits a department on THE LABOR WORLD. This consists of a thorough summary of the happenings in the field of organized labor, with descriptions of the more important mechanical and industrial changes of each month.

The department on SOCIALISM ABROAD is infinitely superior to anything of the kind ever attempted in the English language. In addition to a full and able corps of foreign correspondents, several Socialist dailies of Europe are subscribed for and nearly all the important weeklies and monthlies are received on exchange and made use of in its preparation. With the mass of interesting things that foreign Socialists are now doing, no one who is at all interested in socialism can afford not to read this department.

The department of BOOK REVIEWS is edited with the special aim of making it a continuous and complete compendium of the wealth of material in current literature that is of interest to Socialists. The regular EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT is conducted by the general editor, A. M. SIMONE, who discusses topics of current interest in the light of the Socialist philosophy. An interesting phase is a financial summary of the month, giving the facts as to prices, wages, bankruptcies, financial consolidations and general trade movements that are of interest to Socialists, but which have hitherto been buried in trade and financial journals and inaccessible to the average reader.

With the issue for March, 1901, the SIZE WILL BE INCREASED from sixty-four to EIGHTY pages, and an INTENSELY INTERESTING story will be begun to run through several numbers. This story will be of a literary value to accord with the high standard maintained by the remainder of the publication. While written from a Socialist point of view it does not attempt to be an economic treatise, and its literary merit and entrancing plot will gain for it a prominent place among the romances of the year.

The INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW is the most complete expression of the Socialist movement ever attempted and no student of socialism, favorable or hostile, can keep informed upon the subject, without reading its columns.

Subscription, $1.00 a year, single copies 10 cents; no free samples. For twelve one-cent stamps we will mail a copy of the REVIEW and PROF. HERRON'S booklet "Why I Am a Socialist." FATHER MCGRADY'S new 50-cent novel mailed free if you send $1.00 for the REVIEW at once.

The Chicago School of Social Economy

WALTER THOMAS MILLS, A. M., Principal

Night School in Chicago.
Correspondence School for all points outside of the city or for those who cannot attend the night sessions in the city.
The course is given in twenty lessons, and covers the scientific, economic and historic argument for socialism.

READ WHAT THOSE WHO ARE TAKING THE COURSE ARE SAYING ABOUT IT.

"This course will greatly help anyone who wants to do effective work for socialism."
John Peterson.

"These lessons are not only interesting and instructive, but they unfold to us our own life's meaning in this study of socialism. The whole world is made so beautiful and our own relations to it so direct and simple that we cannot help but understand; and it is so presented that we FEEL the truth as surely as we understand it, and so it cannot be forgotten."
Louise Mitterbach.

"Anyone of average intelligence can take these lessons, as nothing could be more simple or more lucid than are his explanations."
Geo. R. Rosenberg.

"These lessons are dealing with topics which I have studied before, but some way the whole world is being transformed before my eyes. Things which were familiar to me are put into such new and unexpected relations as to produce results of which I have never even dreamed before. I am only half way through the course, but life must always mean to me more than it has meant before, and socialism is simply the means by which real life is revealed and made possible for all."
Dr. Herbert E. Phillips.

"These lessons are showing to me how each stage of human progress grows of necessity out of the previous ones. They make one want to find out to what the world is growing now, and then try to help it along."
G. Anderson.

"The logical reasoning of these lessons is so clear and so connected that the points cannot be missed or misunderstood, and the lessons derived from them will be of lasting benefit to those who wish to work for socialism."
James Hunt.

"Every workingman who wants to find the way out can find it here."
Peter Horsley.

"It is amazing when you come to study, as we in these lessons, to see how everything in life is bound up with every other thing and how all together are bound up with socialism."
A. Rasmussen.

If you live in Chicago and want to join in the work of this school, come to the Schiller Building any Tuesday night.

But you can get the same lessons by correspondence anywhere. Mr. Mills will send you the lessons in printed form, then he will examine your report on the study of each lesson, correct your work, answer your inquiries, and help you on in your study in every way possible.

Send him a stamp for full particulars, and send it at once. Address

SCIENCE AND THE WORKINGMEN

IGNIFIED and scientific as Lassalle's "Workingman's Programme" was, the Prussian government could not tolerate it, and brought him before the court to answer an indictment of having publicly incited the unpropertied classes to hatred and contempt of the propertied classes. "Science and the Workingmen" is the speech Lassalle made in his own defense. Here it is that Lassalle in language bold, and with a spirit of confidence and sincerity, assumes the dignified attitude of a champion of the workingmen. Undoubtedly the author is extravagant in his fluency, yet not for his personal defense, and his brilliant and systematic array of historic facts and philosophic deductions at once inspires the reader with a vision of a herald proclaiming world-wide the cause of the workingmen.

The distinct literary style of this work endows it with a special interest and a desirable quality.

PRESS COMMENTS

The New York People:
"The defense did not save Lassalle from prison. That was not his chief purpose. It did, however, call attention to his propaganda and cause men to think of the position of the ruling class that had to depend on criminal law to protect itself from the result of scientific research. It did great service for socialism and a new of deep historical interest."

The Workers' Call:
"Those who wish to get a comprehension of the extraordinary talent of Lassalle in oratory, debate, satire, and depth of knowledge, cannot do better than purchase it!"

The price of SCIENCE AND THE WORKINGMEN is twenty-five cents, that of THE WORKINGMAN'S PROGRAMME ten cents. Until April first both will be mailed for thirty cents.

Copies of the first edition of SOCIALISM AND MODERN SCIENCE may be had for one dollar.

General Committee Meeting Like a Small-sized Parliament.

LOCAL ACTIVITY INCREASES

Enormous Growth of Movement Renders Imperative New Methods of Organization Work.

The most interesting and most largely attended meeting of the general committee of the Socialist Party of Chicago since its reorganization took place last Saturday night at 104 East Randolph street. No better index of the progress of socialism in Chicago and the prosperous condition of the Socialist Party is needed than the increased interest manifested by the various branches throughout the city in the sessions of the general committee. Since there are forty-one organizations in the city represented in the councils of the party, and since each organization is entitled to two or more delegates, the sessions of the general committee present all the aspects of a small-sized parliament.

As a result of the activity of the past two weeks ninety-five applications for membership were received and accepted. This record for two weeks exceeds anything accomplished in the past by the comrades in Chicago.

There were fifty delegates, representing thirty-four branches, who responded to the roll-call. Besides these there were the following new delegates who presented credentials and were seated: Third ward, John McEneaney and Louis Dalgard; Twenty-third ward, S. Sparks and A. W. Martin; Twenty-first ward, W. T. Russell in place of J. Minwagan; Thirty-third ward, H. Deboer; Twenty-seventh ward No. 5, P. Whamond; Twenty-eighth ward, Adam Harvey in place of J. M. Stewart; Thirty-first ward, A. Rasmussen and M. L. Marjori; Thirty-fourth ward, H. P. Kousch and N. D. Ward. The Seventeenth ward branch, recently reorganized with a membership of fifteen, was accepted and delegates Sol Siegel and Otto Becker were seated. Comrades Otto Vogelsheim and E. Hewert were seated as delegates from the new Eighth ward, German branch, which was recently organized with 40 members. Comrades H. Richter and T. J. Morgan were seated from the new Eighth ward, which has organized with 24 members. The reorganized Twenty-fourth ward branch, with a membership of nine, was accepted and Comrades Eugene Knauss and John A. Roberts were seated as delegates.

A communication from the Polish Central committee defining the attitude of the Polish comrades on the question of national unity was received. A resolution was passed endorsing the position of the Polish comrades. The executive committee was instructed to draft a suitable reply to the communication.

Comrade August Klenke was elected delegate to the Polish central committee.

Probably the most interesting action taken by the general committee was in regard to dividing the city into agitation districts, each district to have a regular organizer who shall devote all his time to the affairs of the party in his district. It will be remembered that at the last meeting of the general committee, on February 14, a resolution was received from the Twentieth ward branch recommending the division of the city into three or more agitation districts and the election of district organizers. The matter was referred to the executive committee for action.

The executive committee, at its regular weekly session, Monday, Feb. 25, prepared the following plan, which was submitted to the general committee:

"REPORT OF EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE"

"In considering the plan submitted to you by the Twentieth ward branch to divide the city into three or more agitation districts and in turn referred by you to your executive committee, we find after due deliberation that the plan is not only feasible, but a necessary one that the full extent of the party workers' activity may be utilized.

"Under the present arrangement of one central organizer endeavoring to cover the whole territory not much is possible. With 34 subdivisions in the city and some 40 separate organizations that now constitute the socialist organization of Chicago, the question of proper supervision of propaganda is a stupendous one and a burden altogether too much for one individual. The duties of an organizer are of such a nature that it necessitates his presence at all of the business and agitation meetings of the various organizations, but as it often happens that some of these meetings are held in the evening, he cannot properly fulfill his duties as an organizer, or the branches avail themselves of his services or receive proper benefits from an office they are called upon to sustain.

On some he has too much to do, on others his services go begging.

"In the course of natural development of the organization it will become of prime importance to so constitute the movement that every voting precinct shall have its own working force with an official at its head, who in turn will be in direct charge of a ward organizer whose paid services will be at the disposal of the branch. This, however, cannot be done at present. Such a plan can be reached only after awhile, when the movement shall have assumed larger proportions. Though this method is in its inception in one or two wards, yet, as a whole, it is still in the future, while the one now in vogue belongs to the past when the city was only partly organized and easily attended to by one central organizer.

"In view of these conditions your executive committee here leave to submit to you the following plan for adoption:

"First—(a)—The 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d wards shall constitute the first organization division.

"(b) The 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th wards shall constitute the second organization division.

"(c) The 31st, 32nd, 33rd, 34th, 35th, 36th, 37th, 38th, 39th, 40th, 41st, 42nd, 43rd, 44th, 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th, 49th, 50th, 51st, 52nd, 53rd, 54th, 55th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st, 62nd, Capitalist Candidates Profess Love for the Workers.

'YOUNG HONORE' IN TRAINING

"Friends of Labor" Get Flattering Remarks from Union-Smashers "Business Men."

The capitalists have named their candidates for the mayoralty, but there seems to be some doubt whether they have the names right or not. A controversy has been started over the name of the republican nominee as to whether he should be called Haney or Hennessy. Perhaps "Mr. Dooley" of "Archer Road" fame could throw some light on this vexed question, he having an intimate acquaintance of the latter name. At any rate we have our own opinion on the matter. By a most careful analysis of the evidence adduced, weighing minutely every point, and taking into consideration the present aspect of the political field, we have arrived at the conclusion that the name of the republican nominee for mayor is neither Haney nor Hennessy, but Dennis.

As for Carter Harrison, that artful dodger, who attempts to gull the workingmen by his pretended friendship, his name is Demagogue. The latest service he has performed for the workers consists in discarding a labor candidate in favor of his own protegee, who possesses no other qualification than being the son of a millionaire. Insincere, trivial, lying and hypocritical, his name would be mud if the workingmen did their duty to themselves by voting for John Collins, the socialist candidate, who is in reality one of their class.

Haney, or Hennessy or whatever his name may be, opens his campaign by stating that the continuance of Harrison in office is a menace to "society," meaning thereby the interests of "property." Harrison defends himself by appealing for a long list of "business men," in which list the following names appear: O. W. Norton, of Woodward, car manufacturer; C. Mandel, of Mandel Brothers; E. Hillman, department store; Barnabell, president of the H. H. Kohlhaas Co.; Conover, secretary of Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co.; D. Mayer, department store, along with a large list of building contractors in the city, those who locked out the building trades workers for an entire year. Other kindred of labor also come to the rescue, and over their signatures give evidence that Harrison has been true to THEIR interests, and that they are "willing to entrust him with THEIR interests for another term. In this list may be found scores of names of those who have always been the deadliest enemies of organized labor in Chicago, and yet this charlatan Harrison has the unpeppable gall to pose as a "friend of labor" and ask the laborers to elect him to office with their votes.

We appeal to the ordinary common sense of the members of labor organizations to consider this matter. If those mentioned in the above list consider THEIR interests safe in the hands of Carter Harrison, how about your interests as union men? Will you go to the ballot box and say (forgetting all the lessons of the past year) that the interests of capital and labor are the same? Your enemies have induced Harrison, and they are right in doing so. He protected their interests with his police, and has earned their indorsement.

If Harrison was really a "friend of labor," would he seek the indorsement of the enemies of labor, do you think? And yet he has done so, and publishes his list in self-defense against the attack of Haney, or Hennessy or whatever his name opponent is called. Has he not by this action verified the statements made by the socialists that he is not only not a friend of labor, but its enemy, and hand in glove with its most notorious enemies besides. John Collins has made no professions of friendship, but he has not sought the indorsement of Mandel, whose scab building was protected by Harrison's police, or Kohlhaas, the owner of a scab bakery, or Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co., a firm which has denounced labor organizations in the public press. If he did, you would not find him on the socialist ticket. He wants your indorsement alone and asks nothing from your enemies.

Honorable Palmer, the special protegee of Harrison, has secured the adre-matic nomination for the Board of Ward, thanks to the orders of Bobby Burke and the efficient work of City Swaler Quinn. Young Palmer differs from most American statesmen, who have heretofore rested upon the fame of their ancestry. Men like Benjamin Harrison, Fred Grant and the present mayor of Chicago, are no little of the pretentiousness in the fact that they were sons of their fathers. But Honore is decidedly the son of his mother, and his political sponsor, Carter Harrison, gives an interesting account of how he conferred with this "society" dame on the political future of her son. There are many attractions about this young man that should induce the voters of the Twenty-first ward to elect him. The ward contains many Irish voters who will doubtless find much gratification in doubling the son of a woman, who was recently presented at the court of Queen Victoria, and got down on her knees before that figurehead of the might majesty and dominion of the British empire, which Irishmen so much admire and love. But Robert Emmett Burke (mark the name) and James Aloysius Quinn have stepped into the breach and overborne all opposition and the Hibernian Delian retires in favor of the aspiring young politician, whose mamma was presented at the court of St. James.

But it must not be supposed that an adre-matic nomination on the democratic ticket is easy to secure, even if Mrs. Potter Palmer's fegedling succeeded in appropriating the coveted prize. Mr. Gubbin, president of the International Bricklayers' union, it seems had political aspirations in the same direction, which were very properly squelched. A workingman, or one who holds an official position of trust in a workingman's organization, who seeks to dabble in capitalist politics, should meet with disappointment. It will not be long before the workingmen will realize that faithful service on the part of their officials cannot be performed in the office of capitalist politics. What the republicans and democrats have to offer workingmen in the guise of political office is at best only corrupting.

Many things are now happening abroad which have a direct application to the local situation here, so far as organized labor and its political stand are concerned. The dock laborers of Marseilles are out on a strike, and since striking they have discovered that they didn't ask for enough at first, and have since remedied this oversight by enlarging their demands. The party who occupies the mayoral chair in Marseilles is not a "friend of labor" of the Harrison stripe. Not on your life. He is a man from the ranks of organized labor itself, a member of the dock laborers' union in that city, and a socialist also. He didn't receive the indorsement of the strike-breaking capitalists of Marseilles, but was placed in the mayoral office by the ballots of the workingmen of that city, and he is there to look after their interests, and he does it, too. There is one candidate for the mayoralty in Chicago, who stands upon exactly the same ground as the mayor of Marseilles. His name is John Collins, and he is the nominee of the workingmen of Chicago—not of the capitalists, their enemies. He is a workingman who knows that his class have only themselves to depend on for better material conditions, and therefore he is a socialist, and if elected to office is fully as capable of exercising the powers vested in him to aid striking workmen, as is the mayor of Marseilles.

"Trade is being driven away from Marseilles," says the capitalist press. That is to say, that ships that cannot be unloaded there have to go to other ports. Fat in the other ports there are socialists also, as the employers are discovering. Several vessels which managed to load with scab labor in Marseilles sailed for Genoa in Italy, and are now tied up because the Italian workmen refuse to handle scab freights. This is what international socialism does for the workers in Europe. Union men of Chicago, get together and emulate your French and Italian brethren. Vote for John Collins, the socialist candidate for mayor, and never mind the others, whether their names be Haney, Hennessy, Harrison, Smith, Brown, Jones or Robinson. As they are all "business men" candidates, just let the business men vote for them. As you are all workingmen, vote for the workingmen's candidate, and you can elect him. The others cannot be elected, unless thousands of your class are foolish enough to vote for them.

Be sure to mark your ballot for the Socialist Party; for Mayor, John Collins.

By a vote of 95 to 71 upon roll call the St. Louis Central Trades and Labor Union reaffirmed its former attitude against the republican and democratic parties and called for the resignation of President McArthur Johnston because he accepted the nomination for the Board of Ward.

HOW DO YOU USE IT?

The "World" Will Use You Well If You Do Your Part.

IT CONTAINS PLenty FOR ALL

Some Remarks on a Familiar Inquiry Used by Workingmen as a Slogan.

"How is the world using you?" Hardly a day passes but what every man is asked in these words, and they are generally answered in an off-handed manner. But this is a question, which, being often asked, ought to be thought about more than it is.

What is meant when this question is asked? Is the great world (the earth) meant? The earth with its marvelous treasures, its wealth of material for human happiness, its varying seasons recurring regularly every year?

If that is what is meant, you surely must answer that it is treating you or trying to treat you well. Within its bosom lie all the necessary elements in abundance to comfort every human inhabitant. Its soil, fertilized by nature's rain and air and sunshine, is ever ready in season to reward richly the application to it of intelligent labor. This is a fact which we take for granted and which no one will deny.

Then, certainly, the earth is not meant when this question is asked. What is meant is rather as to how you are being used in the distribution of the goods of the world. Sometimes, if you are one of the unemployed, it might mean as to whether you are being allowed to take any part in the labor necessary to get practical use out of what the earth contains. If you are not, it is not because you are unwilling, for you surely appreciate the comforts necessary to withstand the cold of winter, and that they can be gathered in summer, and the comforts necessary in case of sickness and those which prevent occasions for sickness, and you are willing to labor to possess all of them. The system of running the affairs of the world, however, seems to be working against a great many people, whilst a few are simply "dirty" with riches. Ah, there is the point. Although you are hard pressed, to get along as by turn worked to the breaking point and then out of work altogether, and all the while worried for the future, both for yourselves and for your children, others are making a mockery of your straits by the display of riches, a small fraction of which might mean life instead of starvation to those dear to you.

The people who do the work of the world fare worst in the distribution of the products which their work brings forth. They strike and are bounded. They petition and are locked out. They work and when that work has produced more than their labor will buy, they are discharged. Their necessity thus caused is seized upon by some capitalist who gets their labor cheap. This causes competition in other countries. The capitalists there are disturbed. They have waited workmen to deal with and cannot cut down wages without trouble. So they close down and wait until starvation shall force the workmen to cut down their scale of wages. This action reacts back on the workers of every other country. But this is the PRACTICAL way of dealing with an emergency. This action of starving men to keep their (the capitalists') heads out of failure is PRACTICAL—that is, practical for THEM. But there is a way which is PRACTICAL for the WORKINGMEN, and the sooner they take advantage of that way, the better for all of us, for then the world will use us well because we will know how to use it. That way does not consist in voting for such a man as Harrison, who didn't club the strikers until he had it. It consists in voting for a man whom the workingmen put up to see that their interests are considered first, last and all time. It consists in voting for a man who as one of the workers, demands with them and by the power of their strength, that the men WHO DO THE WORK shall ENJOY the BENEFITS. Is THAT practical? Do you agree and say, dreamers? Fie on you! You are so men, and are worthy to starve. Where is the man who will say, "Impractical," when it is proposed that HE shall wear clothing instead of rags, that HIS CHILDREN shall be well fed and clothed, and that HIS WIFE shall have a comfortable home—that man is a fool. When the question as to whether or not a plan is practical is raised, let the workingmen who will be benefited by the plan; whether it will benefit the capitalists or the laborers. If it will benefit the laborers and not the capitalists, at once the capitalists will about, "Impractical!" Here is the one to the laborers. They must stand together and say, "It is to our interests and we will benefit by it. We are not interested in the interests of the capitalists, but in the interests of the workers." We produce everything and have the votes to say that we will own everything, and that we will vote and the will, we say that it is practical that we own what we produce."

Workingmen, when your votes talk at the ballot box in this way, they will mean something to you. The only way in which they can be made to speak so is by being cast by the party whose platform contains the substance of these declarations. That platform is the voice of the workingmen who declare that there is a PRACTICAL side of this question for the WORKING CLASS, and the capitalist class fear that platform, because they know that it MEANS something. They don't print "It is the Chicago American," which claims to give all the news for all the people. It contains news which the capitalist class think is not good for the workingmen to learn about. Such a platform in that of the Socialist party, and on it stands the candidate of the working class for mayor, John Collins. Here is the man for whom to cast your vote in April. Do not be fooled by the cry, "local issues" and "business administration of municipal affairs." This question for the working class is a world wide question, and the attempt to make the issues local is in line with the ever ready plan of the capitalists to divide the ranks of labor. All that workingmen need is to think these matters over from their standpoint to recognize the truth of these statements. John Collins is a workingman who recognizes that the welfare of every man, woman and child is bound up in the success of the working class in its struggle for its rights, and the portion of the world's happiness to the workingmen and their wives and children, which can be made BOUNDLESS when the working class arouses from its foolish slumbers. "Reck thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings." The business of the working class is to make every man a king, triumphant over want, misery and suffering. The least difficulty to be shown is by voting for the purpose of accomplishing the success of his business. We have the man, we have the plan, we have shown you that it is practical FOR US. Think it over and digest it, and you will certainly not throw your vote away, or worse, vote for the policeman's club, by showing friendliness to your enemies at the ballot box. Vote for John Collins and the Socialist Party ticket!

The united socialists in Chicago have changed their name from the "Social Democratic Party" to "THE SOCIALIST PARTY."

Capitalism and "Art."

The Sign Painters' union of Chicago opposes the destruction of billboards, which is contemplated by the Chicago Art Association, whose aesthetic tastes are being daily outraged by the sight of these works of advertising "art." The sign painters need not fear; so long as capitalism needs their services the billboards will remain. Until a cheaper and more effective method of advertising is invented the Chicago Art Association will find that a "crusade" against the bill boards is about as effective as a crusade against vice.

The political pap-rangers of Washington state are attempting to force through a bill to disfranchise citizens who support minority parties. Of course, both republicans and democrats are seized up in the delusion of a strictly "non-partisan" piece of dirty work.

THE SOCIAL ENIGMA

Shows that Things Are Not Always What They Seem.

POSTULATES AND PARADOXES

Reality Hidden Under Seeming Contradictions in the Philosophy of Socialism.

The youthful Jefferson when he penned the Declaration of Independence held these truths to be self-evident, i.e., postulates, viz: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, etc. Socialists postulates on this point would run somewhat as follows: that all men are born as members of society; that they cannot be born without being born at some time and place and under certain social circumstances, which are at present generally very unequal; that circumstances alter cases, and also alter so-called inalienable rights and justice itself; that all men are born naked, hungry and helpless; that the first elements of life and liberty are food, clothes and a house; that men were not endowed by their creator with these things but have to scratch for them; neither are these things inalienable, but on the contrary are decidedly alienable; that these things are produced by members of society working together, that the method in which they work, and the tools and materials they use have a controlling influence over all other human activities, for the reason that to say, that this work at present occupies substantially the entire time and attention of human beings. That until a way is found to provide these things for all members of society in less time, so as to leave considerable leisure for everyone, we can have no time to use our liberty; that to be entitled to a thing and yet be deprived of the use of it is a case of "alienated" liberty.

But it is not our postulates that give non-socialists the most trouble. They can generally understand these. What bothers them is our paradoxes. A paradox is the opposite of a postulate, i.e., a proposition which instead of being self-evident, appears to be self-contradictory, but yet is true in fact. For example, we say we are for all the people, yet we favor the labor class alone. Why? Because this class can and should include all. All should get into this class.

We oppose class struggles; therefore we say the labor class should rise and overthrow all other classes. Why? So that by one final class struggle all such struggles in the future will become impossible.

We oppose revolutions, therefore we demand a world-wide revolution. Why? So that by giving the people direct control of themselves without the intervention of a hostile governing class standing apart from the people, a continual state of peaceful revolution by law may be made possible. This was contemplated by Jefferson and some of his associates, but ingenious constitutional limitations have defeated it and enable the capitalists to boast that the present system cannot be changed until human nature, (i.e., THEIR human nature), is changed.

We oppose rent, interest and profit, but we take all the rent, interest and profit we can get. We demand that people practice what they preach, but we ourselves do not do so. Why? Because we cannot do it without withdrawing from society, and the attempt to do it would simply nullify our efforts and render us powerless to accomplish anything. In order to accomplish anything we must temporarily forego the satisfaction of being consistent. Carlyle says somewhere in his "French Revolution" that everyone in that struggle seemed engaged in trying to set other people right, rather than in setting himself right first. Exactly so. We also plead guilty to the same offense, or rather we are trying not so much to set others right as to get them to set themselves right unaided. That society is an organism, having its own laws of growth, and that all its members are dependent on each other and that no one member can be set right and perform its functions properly unless the whole body is right, is a truth which has been seen by philosophers scattered here and there along through all the ages. But to bring this truth home to the mass of the people in such a manner as to make it touch their material interests and very existence, and make it the most vitally pressing business which they now have to consider and act upon, has taken thousands of years of wars, church slavery, serfdom, debt slavery, wage slavery, pauperism, tramping, starvation, and charity. Instead of forty years in the wilderness, we have been forty centuries. This long course, not of mental culture has taught the race that the individual cannot set himself right alone, until now to these latter days we multiply our sin even if he is not a philosopher. Experience is not only a dear school, it is the only school in which under past conditions society as a whole could be taught. When the owner of the means of production and subsistence meets in the market with the free laborer selling his labor power, "this one historical condition comprises a world's history." (Capital, p. 91.) Therefore it is that socialists do not practice what they preach and are honest enough to say so. They say "Workingmen of the world unite." They are their highest duty in the right use of their political power, and paradoxical as it may seem, they are not greatly interested in good men, honest officials, etc., under present conditions. This is a hard saying. Blasted is he that hears it and taketh not offense therat.

A NOTABLE MONTH

Socialist Celebration of the 18th of March.

PARIS COMMUNE A LANDMARK

Great Struggle of 1871 Impresses the Necessity of Class Solidarity Upon the Workers.

Perhaps there is no event in history more pregnant with meaning to the socialist than the first conscious effort of the proletariat to destroy the economic bondage imposed upon them by the capitalist system, which was manifested in the tremendous struggle that centered in Paris during the months of March, April and May, 1871. The story of that heroic, though hopeless, struggle has been chronicled by many socialist writers, the most voluminous and painstaking of whom, our Comrade Lisagarry, has only recently passed away. The memory of those engaged in that glorious struggle for economic freedom has been rescued from the vilification and falsehood spread broadcast by the subsidized liars and perjurers of the civilized world, and to this end the powerful pen of Karl Marx was devoted even before the butchery of the Parisian proletariat had ceased, and the vengeance of capitalism made desperate through its threatened class interests had culminated in the most appalling reign of murder that the world has ever witnessed.

Thanks to the labors of comrades bent upon exposing the truth regarding this event, we now know the aims, objects and aspirations of the men who in 1871 died by thousands behind the street barricades of Paris, who were slaughtered en masse by the ferocious victors when resistance was no longer possible, and sent by shiploads to a living death in the penal colonies of the antipodes. We now understand that these men, women and children gave their lives for the realization of the ideas which we to-day advocate, and, knowing this, it is eminently fitting that the 18th of March, the natal day of the Paris Commune, should, as a recurring anniversary, be celebrated by the international proletariat of all countries. The memory of the heroic men and women who died in 1871 shall remain alive for ages after the curse of capitalist class rule has vanished from the world—that world which we have yet to gain.

Thirty years have passed since then. The season of mourning is over. We must now apply ourselves to the stern task of learning from the failures of the past, the road to success in the future. The reality of the class struggle is emphasized by the event we celebrate more distinctly than by any other occurrence in history, and the chief lesson to be drawn therefrom cannot be better expressed than in the words of Marx: "The emancipation of the working class must be the act of the working class itself." An imperfect comprehension of this fundamental principle has been the fatal flaw in the history of the Paris Commune.

The time of the socialist school has been changed from 9:30 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. Sunday.

Comrade W. H. Wise speaks next Sunday evening.

A new departure is on hand for Sunday afternoons. Campaign meetings will be held at 2:30. Comrade John Collins, candidate for mayor, speaks next Sunday afternoon. Bring the people with you. Get after the trades unionists.

The Women's Auxiliary meets Thursday, March 15th.

Let the campaign warm us up. The old parties are playing a rousing farce this time and the people begin to comprehend.

If you are a workingman, you make no mistake in subscribing for this paper. It deals directly with your interests and those of the class to which you belong.

United States government reports that during the year 1899 there were 21,000 failures. Dan and Bradstreet, professional prosperity puffery, say there were only one-half that number of failures. The government is the best authority.

This paper is the property of the Socialist workingmen of Chicago. It is not published for the profit of any individual, but to advocate the political and economic interests of the working class.

How Public Opinion Is Manufactured

Illustrated in a Review of a Work by a Socialist Author Which Appeared in a Capitalist Journal.

Not very long ago, works written by avowed Socialists, whatever their merit might be, were studiously ignored by the capitalist press, in whose "Notice of new books" column, they were most conspicuously by their absence. Owing, however, to the vigorous propaganda conducted by the advocates of international socialism, and the marked increase in the numbers and activity of its adherents, this policy of silence is no longer possible, and the "reviewer" who does the "literary" work on these journals is now supplied with the same "incentive" to ingenious falsification and ornamental lying in which his fellow slave, the political newspaper hack, has already attained such a high standard of excellence. However, as this branch of industry is comparatively new, it might naturally be expected that the first productions in this line would exhibit to some extent that crudeness and lack of finish which always marks the entrance into new and unfamiliar fields.

These observations are called forth by an attempt on the part of the "reviewer" for the Chicago Tribune, (March 4), to criticize the recent work of Ernest Belfort Hux, on "Jean Paul Marat, the People's Friend." The critic, no doubt presuming on the credulity of his readers and the improbability of their ever procuring the work in question, has only been able to produce a hostile review by having recourse to deliberate and rather clumsy lying, the sort of falsehood that attributes words and sentences to the author which the latter either never wrote, or which cannot in any sense be made to bear the interpretation placed upon them by malice, ignorance and dishonesty.

Of course it is needless to say that a character like Marat is not popular with the interests championed by organs of the Tribune brand, and although the journal in question is as a rule not very well posted upon matters pertaining to the French revolution, that instinctive class-consciousness which engenders hatred of every character in history whose voice, pen or sword was always used in the interests of the workers comes to the rescue as a substitute for a lack of knowledge.

To The Tribune-Marat is a "monster" merely because he represented a distinct class interest, antagonistic to that of which The Tribune is a representative. So hateful did this character appear to them that less than two years ago they invested some special history of their own, and not only sent the unfortunate Marat to the guillotine, but made him follow Danton to the place of execution. Last this ludicrous ignorance may be thought incredible, we refer any of our readers to the issue of that paper for June 18th, 1893, where, under the caption of "Who's Who, and What's What," the following sentence appears:

"Of the bloody trio who were at the head of the reign of terror, Danton went first to the guillotine. He was followed soon after by Marat, whose death left Robespierre absolute dictator."

Until The Tribune published this chronology it was generally supposed that Marat escaped the guillotine, his death occurring on the 13th day of July, 1793, while Danton was executed in the month of April in the following year, and that the "Terror" dated from November, 1793, after the fall of Girondins. But The Tribune makes history and "monsters" with equal facility.

We mention this incident merely to give our readers some idea of the ability for historical criticism which The Tribune finds it profitable to employ.

And the Tribune's reviewer shares to the full the ignorance that prevails in his environment, although this does not deter him from pointing out the "weakness" which he thinks destroys the value of Mr. Hux's work. And here he has discovered another "monster" quite as fabulous as the "monster" Marat.

"The weakness of Mr. Hux's work," says this gentleman, is revealed on the first page, where he says HE MAKES IT A RULE to find out what the "world" thinks on any question and then assume the opposite to be true."

Now, let us see what Mr. Hux really does say. We quote from the first page, the opening sentences of his preface: "The verdict of the world on a public character, as on moral worth in general and its opposite, like the public opinion of the world on other matters, represents only too often the verdict of class prejudice and ignorance. It is in fact a 'fairly safe' plan to ascertain for oneself what most people think on such questions, and then assume the opposite to be true. The result is a most 'working hypothesis,' which remains of course to be POSSIBLY MODIFIED OR EVEN ABANDONED BY SUBSEQUENT INVESTIGATION, but which is generally the nearest approach to truth we can make in the absence of requisite knowledge for forming an unbiased judgment."

A comparison of these two statements will reveal the general method of criticism pursued by the wretched creature who sold their pens to the service of capitalism for bread. And as this is the sort of stuff which forms "public opinion" and "what the world thinks," we have no hesitation in saying that even if Mr. Hux did make it a rule to always assume an opposite to the opinion of the "world," he could find ample justification for doing so in the attempt of his class to falsify misstate the position that he has explicitly defined in his prefatory remarks.

The reviewer states correctly that Mr. Hux has set out to prove that the "People's Friend" was neither a demagogue nor a madman, but a statesman, who differed, however, from most statesmen in that he possessed definite principles to which he remained steadfastly loyal; and concludes by saying that in his opinion Hux has not done much "to improve the world's judgment of the BANGUINARY People's Friend."

Of course, whether the author has succeeded or not is a matter of opinion. But the reviewer evidently thinks that this attempt is unique and singular. He would no doubt be astonished to find that The Tribune itself has been engaged in the same task—indirectly, of course—for a number of years. The Tribune then had books to sell—like Mr. Hux—in which the character of the "People's Friend" was rescued from lying imputations" as the reviewer says.

The Tribune had a large number of sets of the Encyclopedia Britannica, which it wished to dispose of for a monetary consideration. It advertised them liberally and sent around numbers of gilt-tongued agents, who recited to every possible purchaser the virtues of the commodity they had for sale. The articles in the Britannica were described as being the essence of the highest scholarship that could possibly be obtained, each article being written by "recognized authorities" on the subject dealt with. Nowhere on earth could be found a more reliable compendium of information than the Britannica's edition of "The Britannica." Everybody could now attain real knowledge—the installment plan—by taking advantage of this offer. The writer has listened to these eloquent canvassers until he became "almost persuaded" that infallibility itself could be procured for the sum of $35—so much down and so much per month—thanks to the philanthropic efforts of The Tribune.

And in these peerless volumes may be found the following summing up of the character of the "People's Friend," anticipating Mr. Hux by many years, and substantiating every item in the task which he laid out for himself, and in which the reviewer thinks he failed.

"Whatever his political ideas, two things shine clearly out of the mass of prejudice which has shrouded the name of Marat. That he was a man of great attainments and acknowledged position, who sacrificed fortune, health and life itself to his convictions; and that he was no bete ferre (wild beast), NO FACTIOUS DEMAGOGUE but a man, and a HUMAN man, too, who could not keep his head cool in stirring times, who was rendered suspicious by constant persecution, and who has been regarded as a personification of murder, because he published every thought in his mind, while others only vented their anger and displayed their suspicious in spoken words."

So much for the Britannica, whose reliability was vouched for by The Tribune, when a possible profit could be made by selling it. The "Sanguinary People's Friend" of the reviewer becomes a "human man" in its pages. In fact, every trait of character which Mr. Hux claims for Marat, is admitted by the scholarly, reliable, and impartial essayist, to whom was entrusted the task of compiling a sketch of the noted revolutionist for its volumes. And this writer, we may add, was free from the alleged "weakness" which The Tribune's reviewer finds in Hux. He was not a socialist, but he knew the true value of the opinion of the "world" upon the subject with which he was dealing.

No special justification is needed for Marat. While capitalism controls the press, the pulpit and the public institutions of learning, every defender of class interests hostile to its own, will be constantly and persistently vilified and the opinion of the "world," generally speaking, will be formed thereby. But there is a political and economic struggle pending between the capitalist and working class, an overshadowing importance, that the character of any particular individual will not attract much attention until the conflict has been decided. Mr. Hux did not write for the purpose of converting the present "world" to his view of the personality of Marat. His work will only receive proper appreciation when the ideas of the man he has endeavored to depict have reached their full consummation in the coming social revolution. But its present value only consists in the distinction with which he has outlined the existence of the class struggle in its pages and the hostility it evoked from those whose class interests it menaces. It merely an additional proof that the author has done his work well.

Socialism Will Unite Them.

A Chicago clergyman states that "the time is approaching when level-headed religious people will have to make a bargain with the politician to attend the caucus and the politician will have to promise to attend church in sheer self-defense of what each holds dear but hitherto have mutually kept separate." Quite correct. Capitalism will need to set its house in order in the near future. When socialists grove stronger the necessity of this alliance between the "good" men and the politician will become still more pressing.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Comrade Strickland has resigned from the Christian Citizenship League of America.

Every socialist local should turn out next Sunday evening and take part in the Commune Festival at Brand's hall.

Comrades should not forget the entertainment and ball by the Socialist Educational Club next Sunday afternoon and evening at Wicker Park Hall, 541 West North Avenue.

Stenographers in the movement and all stenographers who are interested in economic and labor problems are requested to send their names and addresses to the assistant city organizer, Frederick G. Strickland, 148 E. Van Buren street.

The comrades of the Ninth and Tenth ward branches held a big agitation meeting last Monday morning at the Twelfth Street Turner hall. The speakers were Comrades A. M. Simon and Ed. Miller. About five hundred people were present.

The Twenty-second ward branch holds propaganda meetings every Sunday, at 7:30 p. m., at 53 Clyburn avenue. Business meetings every second Tuesday of each month. No meeting will be held on Sunday, the 17th, on account of the Commune Festival in Brand's hall falling on that date.

Twenty-sixth ward branch will hold a public meeting at 1671 Lincoln ave., northwest corner Irving Park blvd., on Sunday, March 24, at 3 p. m., singing by socialist quartette. Speakers will be arranged for later. All socialists in the vicinity are requested to bring as many friends as possible to this meeting.

Comrade B. Berlin addressed a large meeting of the Seventeenth ward branch at Aurora hall, Huron street and Milwaukee avenue, last Sunday afternoon. After the address an interesting discussion took place. Five new members were admitted to the branch. The speaker, next Sunday afternoon will be Comrade T. J. Morgan.

Socialists of Englewood gave a most enjoyable and largely attended entertainment on last Saturday evening at Eiken Hall, 145 W. Sixty-third street. The programme was highly appreciated by those present, who spent a very interesting and instructive evening. The Englewood comrades know how to do this sort of thing in the most approved manner.

The comrades of the Fifteenth ward branch opened their new headquarters at 581 West North Avenue last Sunday evening with a big agitation meeting. In spite of the inclement weather, there was a large crowd present. Addresses were delivered by Comrades A. M. Simon and Walter Thomas Miller. The comrades of this branch are making preparations for an energetic campaign.

The Rev. J. S. Wilson addressed the public meeting of the Eighth ward branch at Sherman hall, South Chicago, on last Saturday evening. His subject, "The Religious Element in Socialism," was received with much enthusiasm, and two new members were added to the branch. John Collins, Socialist candidate for mayor, will speak at next meeting of the branch, Saturday, 16th inst.

We notice with satisfaction that "Robotnik," the weekly organ of our Polish comrades, has been considerably enlarged both as to size and number of pages, of which it now contains sixteen. Started less than a year ago and by a comparatively handful of supporters, "Robotnik" is a monument to the energy and devotion of our Polish comrades, who have shown what can be accomplished by a few determined men, and we hope that its usefulness may keep pace with its increased size.

Last Monday evening Comrade Walter Thomas Miller responded to an invitation from the Chicago union to speak at 22 Clark street on trade unionism and socialism. There was a full house present, and when Comrade Miller demonstrated that the ultimate ideals of the trade union could only be secured through socialism he was greeted with round after round of applause. At the conclusion of the address the speaker was tendered a unanimous vote of thanks and the audience gave three hearty cheers for John Collins and the Socialist party.

Don't read on election day. Vote the Socialist party ticket.

From Glen Ellyn, Ill.

The local G. D. P. holds weekly meetings at the home of Comrade Kern, at Glen Ellyn, Ill. M. T. Kraft speaks Tuesday evening, March 12, on "The Social Effect of Labor Saving Machinery."

The Glen Ellyn comrades have decided to hold weekly meetings through the summer instead of merely until after the village election, and they hope to have some Chicago comrades with them each week.

Comrade Klenke spoke at Glen Ellyn March 8th and Comrade Untermyer March 13th. The village is quite waked up over socialism, and nearly all the members are developing into good workers.

An electric railway is now building through the village which will give easy communication with Elgin, Aurora, Geneva, Wheaton, Elmhurst, and other towns, and the Glen Ellyn comrades will do missionary work through the country next summer.

Notice.

We have a limited number of copies of the International Socialist Review, returned from the News Company with the covers slightly damaged, so that they cannot be sent out on subscription. Any comrade who will call at this office can have twenty-five assorted copies for 5 cents. This is much less than cost, and the offer is made only to party members, as we might suffer considerable inconvenience and loss if these copies fell into the hands of irresponsible people. This price does not include postage. But for 10 cents we will mail 25 of these damaged copies to any office of an E. D. P. local outside of Chicago. Address, Chas. H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 315 Fifth av., Chicago.

All acts regarding party meetings intended for publication in the daily press should be sent through this office.

AUSTRIAN ELECTION LAWS

Report of the International Socialist Bureau on the Movement in Austria.

In order to make an end of the acrimony and grotesque debates in the reichsrath, the Austrian government has proceeded to dissolve the legislative body and to order new elections. These have lasted two months. It must be remembered that the Austrian election laws were modified in 1894, after a long and arduous campaign of our socialist comrades in favor of universal suffrage. Heretofore the electors had been composed of four distinct classes (Kurien).

1. The great landed proprietors, the feudal nobility, living exclusively on the fruits of the rural proletariat's sweat. This class consists of 4,000 electors, entitled to 12 representatives, that is to say, 1 representative to every 10 electors. In certain regions, as in Bohemia, 8 or 10 great proprietors control a man date by themselves.

2. The head of great commercial establishments, bankers and industrialists, have the right to elect 127 representatives.

3. The small traders and the small proprietors.

4. Farmers and proprietors paying a direct tax of at least 4 florins.

These four classes have the right to elect 333 representatives.

The fifth class was created as a concession to the demands of the Social Democracy. This class can elect 73 representatives only in as many districts by universal suffrage (direct ballot in six great cities and indirect ballot everywhere else).

The composition of the parliament at the beginning of the canvass shows still more clearly the inequality of the election laws in that country.

The reichsrath numbers 428 representatives. Of these 175 are elected by indirect ballot, that is to say, by delegates nominated by the electors.

These 175 representatives constitute themselves in the following manner: 118 are elected by rural communities of 1,345,200 electors; 14 are elected by the fifth class—the class of universal suffrage—with 4,001,113 electors. Thus the number of those electors who cannot exercise their suffrage directly is 5,346,372; 253 representatives are elected by direct ballot. This number is divided among the four classes as follows:

Eighty-five representatives of the landed gentry are elected by 4,230 electors.

Twenty-one representatives of the commercial class are elected by 581 electors.

One hundred and eighteen representatives of cities are elected by 234,148 electors.

Three representatives of rural communities of Lower Austria are elected by 184,111 electors. Five representatives of rural communities of Carinthia are elected by 21,883 electors.

Sixteen representatives are elected by universal suffrage of 37,000 electors. The number of electors exercising their franchise directly is, therefore, 1,469,371.

But universal suffrage is unjustly limited by the fact that the electors of the first four classes, after voting in their special class, have the right to cast a second vote in the fifth class.

In Bohemia the election lists have been the objects of the most flagrant violations. In other regions, as in Galicia, the authorities, corrupted by the political Camorra, use military regulations as a pretext to prohibit the meeting of electors, or they even fail to give any receipts at all for such prohibitions.

A correspondent of the "Reich" reported that the rural authorities arrest and imprison until after election those citizens who might vote for the opposition; it even happens that candidates displeasing to the authorities are imprisoned. Under these circumstances it is natural to ask by what miracle the opposition sometimes succeeds in defeating the official candidate. The latter, on meeting serious resistance often opens negotiations with prominent electors, who then swing the others in line. First a low price is offered, discussion follows, and an agreement is finally perfected. One town receives 4,000 florins, another is relieved of all its debts, the retiring candidate receives an indemnity for withdrawing from the contest. After that, the rest is plain sailing.

This short description openly reveals the fact that the Austrian election law assumes a manifestly unfair attitude toward the working class of the cities and the industrial centers. Inconceivably, their representation is forced down to a level of utter inferiority.

In Belgium, a great proprietor is worth four times as much as a workman, which is unquestioned, but in Austria an aristocrat or a member of the landed gentry has an electoral value surpassing that of a laborer a hundred times.

Surely this electoral system is the most miserable in the world.

Our comrades were bound to struggle not alone under an electoral system that in without a parallel, but also under economic and political conditions that were extremely difficult and complicated. The rivalry of men and nations has been created in this vast empire a battlefield on which all the parties meet: Clerical and anti-clerical, radical Czechs and German progressists. Only the Social Democrats make an exception. They stand above these question of nationality can only be settled by the autonomy of nations and their federation.

Especially in Bohemia, in Syria and in Poland the question of national differences has reached the point of a most acute crisis. At a certain time not so long ago this was so serious that the national sentiments even outweighed the international sentiments of the socialists. This was notably the case during the legislative elections of 1897. But since then, thanks to the transformation of the first party organization based on ethnological groups, the Social Democracy has doubled the scope of division. Ever since its unity is perfect.

Under these difficult conditions the socialist party carefully prepared for the battle. Since October it has published a list of its candidates and announced that it will control the elections in the 13 districts of the fifth class. In Vienna the German faction nominated the comrades Adler, Ellenbogen, Strauss, Skarke and Schumacher; in Lower Austria, Pernstorfer, Hirschneider, Tomschick and Schinnerer; in Bohemia, the five outgoing representatives were re-nominated and in addition to them Comrade Stark, a miner who was elected to defeat the opponent of this last district, the fraction of Czechs, having four representatives in the reichsrath, nominated 3 candidates, and the Polish fraction had the same number in the field. In Trieste one socialist fought the battle against capitalism.

During the election of 1897 the socialists concentrated their strength principally on Vienna and Bohemia. Fourteen of these candidates penetrated into the reichsrath, seven of them coming from Bohemia, and five from Czech Provinces. In Vienna, although beaten by the Christian Socialist demagogues, they nevertheless received no less than 30,000 votes against 120,000 of their opponents. In the fifth class, they obtained a total of 563,000 votes.

The fraternal understanding existing between the different branches of Austrian socialists, the marked progress of the organization and their present new tactics solving the problem of nationality by federalism, added to these factors the loss of confidence suffered by the conservative and demagogic parties in consequence of their violent language and odious behavior in parliament—all this should have contributed to the success of the socialist candidates.

Unhappily this was not the case. Though in Vienna and in Lower Austria the anti-Semites lost three seats that were captured by the socialists, in Bohemia and in Moravia the rivalry between Germans and Czechs brought the national question into the foreground and relegated to obscurity the economic progress of a still deeply ignorant proletariat. Thus the socialists lost one seat in Moravia, one in Styria and six in Bohemia; the Bohemians retained only a single one of their seven seats.

When the hot and burning wind of demagoguery will have blown some time the ill-used working population will no doubt return to socialism. The latter has remained fully conscious of the cause that called into existence and of its certain future.

In Sicily, finally, the socialists have won a seat. In Cracow we learn of Comrade Danysh's victory by a vote of 11,125 out of 21,103. In Lemberg Comrade Ernest Breiten, has conquered with 14,967 out of 52,333. The total strength of the socialists, including the four Czech socialists, is 14 members in the reichsrath.

In short, the result of the following statistics published by "Die Neue Zeit," shows that in Austria, as well as everywhere else, the progress of socialism in spite of all difficulties is evident.

In the electoral districts where the indirect vote is in vogue, we find an increase of socialist votes among the population of the German Alps; in 1897 the percentage of socialist votes was 14.87; in 1901 it is 18.06; in the Italian Alps it rises from 3.09 to 4.89; on the other hand, it decreases considerably in the Carpathian Mountains and in the German and Czech regions of the north. The total result is a decrease from 24.48 to 20.15 per cent.

But in the districts where the direct ballot is in use there is a visible increase:

	1901	Per cent.
Lower Austria	40,72	46.11
Gratz	37,38	44.11
Prague	42,45	44.88
Brunn	37,15	21.19
Brno	55,49	22.19
Cracow	74,63	42.00
Vienna	17,73	11.99

Approved by the E. D. P. Executive Committee, 188 per cent.

Three remarks are a-croix to the Austrian Social Democracy. We may rest assured that it is the only party, to use the words of Engels, that has a future in Austria. For it is the only one that can solve the problem of nationality.

(Translated by E. O.)

About twelve months ago Professor Hadley of Yale suggested that in order to check the growth of trusts, these forming them should be socially ostracized. This advice was neglected, and now the same gentleman sees a vision of an emperor in Washington (twenty-five years hence in consequence). The professor states that in order to prevent this calamity a "public sentiment" must be created which, regardless of legislation, will regulate the trusts. If this rather indistinct scheme doesn't succeed any better than his first proposal, the professor might as well give up the attempt to find a "remedy," and endeavor to understand the nature of the boggy which he thinks can be tregained.

PEACE ON EARTH.

The Realization Impossible Under an Economic System which Makes War a Necessity.

Two years ago a "peace conference" was held at The Hague in response to a call from the great "humanitarian" support of all the Powers. It was attended by some of the most prominent men of all countries. Discussions were held, and over and over again the hall rang with the eloquence of the men of peace. Schemes for disarmament and international arbitration were proposed, discussed, and finally dismissed. Everyone was vibrating with emotion in expectation of the coming solution of the world's greatest problem. And then the curtain dropped and the delegates went back to their respective countries.

An soon as the conference went out of existence, preparations were made to inaugurate an era of peace. Great Britain opened the performance by sending a mighty army to shoot "peace" into the burghers of the South African republics, while the free and liberty-loving citizens of these United States sent fifteen-inch cannon to celebrate the triumph of "peace" in the Philippines. And to-day the representatives of nations which were foremost in the peace movement are busy engaged in establishing the regime of "peace" in China by removing the heads of Chinese officials as a guarantee for "peace."

And on the last day of the year 1900 the whole "civilized" world celebrated the passing away of the most marvellous century the world has ever seen, and the great writers in thousands of magazines and journals expressed the hope that the incoming century would be marked by "peace." They rejoiced in what they called the "progress of humanity," which they evidently identified with the continuance of capitalism, ignoring the fact that such progress is of necessity accompanied by poverty, crime and war. When they alluded to humanity they meant the capitalist class alone, and no doubt saw in the great international conference of peace amongst the real rulers of the earth. As Karl Marx wrote, "the executive of the modern state is but the committee for managing the common affairs of the whole bourgeoisie," so today it is with the different national governments. They are but the tools of the capitalist class and may perhaps find a common basis in exploiting the proletariat without regard to nationality.

But does peace amongst this class also mean peace to the workers? Has this "progress of humanity" any relation to the producing classes? We again refer to Marx we will see. "Socialism as a whole is more and more splitting up into two hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other—the bourgeoisie and proletariat." Or, in other words, capitalist and working class. Peace upon one side does not mean peace upon the other; it simply means that the capitalists have made peace between themselves in order to perpetuate their rule over the working class.

Such an idea of peace is untenable and its preaching a mere waste of words. For the working class nothing short of the removal of wage slavery, nothing less than the abolition of private property in the means of production and distribution can suffice. At last they are beginning to perceive the futility of war between nations as concerns themselves and are the only class that in reality are striving for peace. Peace for all instead of for some can only be realized in the establishment of the Co-operative Commonwealth. It is not dreams or impossible Utopias that we are contemplating. Not beautiful pictures that we behold only in visions and which disappear on awakening. It is reality and truth based upon the realities of today. Gigantic combinations, billion dollar steel trusts, and great concentrations of wealth are fast bringing capitalism to its logical end. And as our movement grows we must bear in mind that our tactics consist in keeping clear the class character of the Socialist Party, to train it by agitation, education and organization, for the victorious completion of the emancipation struggle. With this constantly before us we will be able to stand firmly against any opposition that may arise. Uncompromising socialism should be our watchword until our object is attained. Not until our chains are broken, not until the capitalist class of our backs are broken, shall we for one instant turn from our clear, class-conscious principles of uncompromising socialism.

M. WELCHER.

FROM PUERTO RICO.

Comrade Santiago Iglesias Tells of the Economic Struggle in That Island.

It will doubtless interest most of the readers of The Call to learn something of the progress of the socialist movement in one of "our new possessions," the island of Puerto Rico. Some of the difficulties with which our comrades in that locality have to contend with may be seen from the following open letter which we have received from Comrade Santiago Iglesias, who is well known as one of the most determined and energetic advocates of socialism in Puerto Rico:

"To the Members of the Social Democratic Party, and its sympathizers and to the Trade Unions of the American Workingmen: Greeting:

"Comrades—how much we must call your attention to a subject which concerns not only us, but ourselves as well. We hereby appeal to your sense of solidarity.

"The organized workmen of Puerto Rico, whose condition is far worse than your own, hope that you will help their appeal, and will help them in their struggle with our common enemy, the capitalist class, for the conditions in Puerto Rico are such that they cannot continue to live alone. It must, at least in part, be encouraged by you, by moral and financial assistance.

"First of all, we must give sound to a severe warning against the barbarous way in which the American government treats the working class of Puerto Rico.

"The undersigned has assumed the duty to give publicity to atrocities which were perpetrated and still continue as a practice against the socialists as well as the trades unions of Puerto Rico. In order to be successful in our agitation, we must first be in a position to meet, through the press, our inhuman, cruel oppressor, republican or democrat, white or black, American or native, who, aid, our capitalists and bosses in exploiting us.

"It is no more possible for us to publish our newspaper, 'El Porvenir Social,' in Puerto Rico, for it may be at any time suppressed there by the tools of the capitalists on the ground of the still subsisting infamous Spanish press laws. We must, therefore, publish the paper here, and the best place for it is the city of New York.

"We shall be in a position to enlighten from here the workingmen of Puerto Rico of the aims of the Social Democratic party, and I assure you that we shall succeed in a short time to have a majority in many municipalities of the island and to elect Socialists to higher public offices.

"The trade unions of Puerto Rico, which were organized through our efforts, present a selected, enthusiastic and resolute corps, which will spread our papers through the widest circles. They fight not only for higher wages and the 8-hour workday, but also on the political arena, and their efforts seconded by your fraternal aid, will serve to free themselves from the unbearable burdens which oppress them, so long as Puerto Rico is deprived of at least, much political liberty as is guaranteed to you by the American constitution—freedom of the press and of speech.

"The name of 'Porvenir Social' is known not only to thousands of workmen of Puerto Rico, but also in Venezuela, Cuba, San Domingo, and Mexico, and into these places shall we, with your assistance, carry and spread the organization and propaganda of international socialism.

"It requires but little in order to publish the paper in New York. The 'Porvenir Social' is a weekly, and, if you help us, it will be put on week firm basis within the period of three months as to insure its existence. We appeal, therefore, to all organizations of the Social Democratic Party, to those who sympathize with it, to the members of the trade unions and central bodies to assist us with financial contributions, however small they may be, in order that we may issue the 'Porvenir Social' in New York, in the Spanish, English and German languages.

"We further request the socialist press, which spreads our ideas, to publish this appeal and give it their support before its readers. We request the name of the trades union press.

"The National Executive Committee of the Social Democratic party endorsed our appeal and will lend us its support in the future.

"All contributions toward establishing the 'Porvenir Social' should be sent to the 'New Yorker Volkszeitung' or 'The People,' 145 William street, New York, which will publish the same.

"We call on you, in the name of the organized workmen of Puerto Rico, to show your solidarity.

Yours fraternally,

"SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,

"Delegate of Federation Libre de Puerto Rico.

Knocked Out.

We learn from the Chicago Tribune of the collapse of an "Association of Altruists," who had located at Mount Pleasant, N. J., to put in practice the teachings of the "Golden Rule" upon a farm which had been purchased to carry out the experiment. The editorial which chronicles the failure states that:

"Unfortunately for the perseverance of the association there was a large industrial establishment near by, run by parties who had no other object in view than to make money for themselves and who were willing to pay excellent wages. The temptation was too strong for the Altruists. One after another they laid down the shovel and the hoe and abandoned 'unconventional tilling of the soil' for the more profitable industry of the neighboring factory, and the association soon collapsed."

Excellent! pit. The Tribune knows exactly how to demonstrate the fact that the "Golden Rule" has to "get up and get" when that pharisaical capitalism, the factory, comes into the combination. The golden rule is only a thing to be talked about in substantial pulpits. The real motto of capitalism is: "Devil take the hindmost." It is satisfactory to observe, however, that, in dealing with this case, the Tribune has lost something of its usual effrontery. It does not refer to the alleged "unconventional tilling of the soil."

wintery blasts, might seem somewhat inappropriate now that spring weather has unmistakably arrived. However, our readers who remember the intense cold of a few weeks ago, will not doubt regard the seeming impropriety of its appearance at this juncture as a matter of small importance. While "the poor are always with us" so long as capitalism endures, their augmented sufferings in winter may be taken as a matter of course, and the "Cry of the Forty Thousand" will be no less bitter and despairing in the winter that approaches than in those already past. It may perhaps be thought superfluous upon our part to give here a brief explanation of the plan or idea upon which the poem is constructed, but we will venture to do so at the risk of seeming officious. It represents in the first part, the blind fury of revenge, which takes possession of the world's disinherited, when the latter, feeling keenly the misery to which they are subjected, are as yet unaware of the cause of their condition. In the second part, the message of socialism is delivered, showing how the desired change can be effected without the accompanying horrors of murder, chaos and destruction. For the rest, the verses must speak for themselves, as indeed the author has requested that they shall do.

LABORING MEN'S HEADQUARTERS

Just at present the "laboring man" is much in demand, and within the last few weeks his "friends" have multiplied enormously. This sudden increase of admirers is due to two attributes which the laboring man possesses, and which are calculated upon by his periodical lovers when an election draws near. First, the laboring man is stupid, and second, he has a vote, and the first characteristic is relied upon to induce him to part with the second.

So when we read that Judge Haney, or Paddy Hennessy, as some folks insist he should be called, has opened a "laboring men's headquarters" where he can dilate to the union men upon the subject of "what Harrison has done for labor," we may depend upon it that the judge has determined to profit from the two characteristics above mentioned.

Judge Haney doesn't keep a "laboring men's headquarters" open all the time. He recognizes that at other periods of the year the "laboring men's headquarters" are properly situated in the saloons and gin mills of the city, and he has no wish to compete with the legitimate traffic. Therefore, his "headquarters" are only temporary and will be closed as soon as the voting process is completed and his love for the "laboring man" has subsided.

Judge Haney, if the papers report him correctly, in his talk to the union men at the temporary "headquarters," endeavors to disabuse the minds of his hearers of the idea that, if elected, he would close the city up tight, enact "blue laws," and prevent his friends, the workmen, from getting a drink. The preservation of this privilege he evidently considers the highest possible interest of his audience. So he is careful to assure them that he has no intention of curtailing their enjoyment in this manner. The various "Workingmen's Exchanges," Mike's Place, and the "Corner Dutchman" won't have to go out of business if elected. Haney says "he believes in recognizing the different nationalities and permitting them to get a drink when and where they please." Who said our liberties were in danger if Haney becomes mayor? He will recognize all nationalities and PERMIT them to get a drink! Isn't that enough in itself to fetch the vote of any laboring man?

But the iniquities of Carter Harrison are eloquently depicted by Haney. Isn't Carter levying blackmail on inoffensive subcontractors and threatening their licenses if they don't hang his lithograph in their windows? Why, it is plain from this that it is Harrison and not Haney who wished to close the saloons; it is the villain Harrison who will not permit all nationalities to exercise the privilege of free men—is getting a drink.

But the question of "What has Harrison done for labor?" is not a subject which Haney delights to dwell upon at any length. He might, of course, charge that Harrison had instructed the police to break the heads of the union men who were picketing the saloons. He might allude to the instructions which his opponent gave to the justices as to the "full limit of the law," or he might refer to the minds of the union men, the gaitting gun parade of the "under Harverson's order," and his friendly to the prominent citizens whose buildings were constructed by such labor. But these actions are not iniquitous in his eyes, and he knows that Harrison will never bring up against him as a crime the issuing of injunctions against labor organizations in which he indulges when the "laboring men's headquarters" are closed and the courts, the "capitalist headquarters" are open for business, with Haney in the chair.

None of the capitalist candidates dare open their mouths upon these matters, for they understand too well the nature of the game to be played. The "talks to union men" will embrace everything with which the latter are unconcerned, and avoid everything with which they are, for the ignorance of "laboring men" upon their interests as a class, is the best bower of both Haney and Harrison.

So when Haney insists that Harrison has "done nothing for labor," and the latter retorts with a similar charge against Haney, both may be safely belied, and the "laboring man," who is not utterly devoid of understanding, may easily see that both these people neutralize each other. When this conclusion has been reached, his attention might be drawn to the fact that, if the "laboring man" is unwilling to do anything for himself, it is certainly not the business of either Harrison or Haney to help him. And when he has grasped the necessity of independent political action on the part of his class, the claim of the candidate of the Socialist party, John Collins, to his vote might be appropriately introduced. And this process is at present going on at a rate that bids fair in a few years' time to forever relieve the Haney and Harrison of the trouble and expense of periodically opening "laboring men's headquarters," where capitalist cunning thrives on proletarian folly.

DIPLOMATIC NEUTRALITY

It may be said of the press dispatches that are at present coming from China, that their tone, to use a common journalistic expression, is not at all reassuring. This means, in ordinary English that the plunderers are about to quarrel over the division of the spoils and thus disturb "the peace of the world," that capitalistic "peace which passeth all understanding." For the past few days it seems that the troops of Russia and Great Britain have been standing in an attitude of armed opposition to each other on a small patch of ground used as a railway siding, and that any moment may see an outbreak of hostilities between them. Further it is stated that a most bitter feeling exists between the French and British troops in the vicinity, and frequently street fights have occurred between them in which some have been injured on both sides. The "powers" in St. Petersburg, London and Paris, it is stated, however, are exerting all their efforts to avert a "rupture," and while the matter stands thus it is evident that all are on the alert for whatever may follow. All but the United States, which has assumed a position of neutrality, and ostensibly means to let the others fight it out.

Those who accept this latter profession as a fact are very likely to be deceived. The situation is strained to the utmost between the British and Russians, and the French show a desire to mix in and help out the latter. The United States will take no part in the proceedings, as she has business elsewhere. This business is conveniently located in Morocco, which is to be asked to make a little bill said to be owing to the United States, and a man of war has been sent to emphasize the necessity of settlement. But the United States will take no part in the Chinese middle—not at all.

It just happens by a simple coincidence, of course, that Morocco is one of those places over which France exercises a sort of "Mbarce doctrine" of its own. Morocco cannot be touched without interfering with French political interests, and this fact, though not officially stated, is nevertheless well known to every one of the so-called great powers. The United States will not interfere with Chinese matters, of course, but the fact that that bill due from Morocco may be pressed for settlement whenever convenient is nothing less than a warning to France to "go slow." Watch the French take the hint.

It may be that the "neutrality" of the United States will be found useful in keeping the peace in China. At any rate the resources of "diplomacy" are not yet exhausted.

SOCIALIST PARTY is the same under which the united socialists of Chicago go on the ticket. Look out for it on the ballot. John Collins is the nominee for mayor.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan informed his partners that Schwab could make $5,000,000 per annum for the company. How? By producing finished articles in iron and steel?

No. By consolidating the different offices and eliminating useless employees, by applying the most improved methods of production and dispensing with as many individual workers as possible. By these methods $5,000,000 in wages could be "saved" which would appear as dividends to the idle and useless stockholders. But what about those whose wages will have been "saved" by this process? How about the office help who will now be looking for a job, and the skilled mechanics who have been displaced by the more general application of improved methods? They will enroll themselves in the army of the unemployed, and most of them will ultimately find employment elsewhere, which will almost certainly be less remunerative than the position from which they have been ousted.

But before this happens and while they are still searching for employment the majority of them will have ample leisure to read in the capitalist press the unmistakable evidences of prosperity, as illustrated by the increased size of dividends declared by the steel trust.

And this will compel at least some of those whose wages have been "saved" to think the matter over and recognize the existence of classes with antagonistic interests, and that the natural channel for the expression of this hostility is through the ballot box.

Andrew Carnegie will no doubt be much interested in the efficient work of Schwab, and he may perhaps figure out how many more libraries he could have "donated" if he had in his service such an accomplished "wage saver" as Schwab.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

Wages are rising; there is no doubt of it. Last week it was announced that one Schwab had received a raise from his employers, the United States Iron and Steel Co. (the trust).

These generous employers of labor determined that Schwab should have $1,000,000 per annum for the present. Unlike most employers, they also declared that he was worth it all he was to receive—that, in fact, he would "earn" every penny of it.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan informed his partners that Schwab could make $5,000,000 per annum for the company. How? By producing finished articles in iron and steel?

No. By consolidating the different offices and eliminating useless employees, by applying the most improved methods of production and dispensing with as many individual workers as possible. By these methods $5,000,000 in wages could be "saved" which would appear as dividends to the idle and useless stockholders. But what about those whose wages will have been "saved" by this process? How about the office help who will now be looking for a job, and the skilled mechanics who have been displaced by the more general application of improved methods? They will enroll themselves in the army of the unemployed, and most of them will ultimately find employment elsewhere, which will almost certainly be less remunerative than the position from which they have been ousted.

But before this happens and while they are still searching for employment the majority of them will have ample leisure to read in the capitalist press the unmistakable evidences of prosperity, as illustrated by the increased size of dividends declared by the steel trust.

And this will compel at least some of those whose wages have been "saved" to think the matter over and recognize the existence of classes with antagonistic interests, and that the natural channel for the expression of this hostility is through the ballot box.

Andrew Carnegie will no doubt be much interested in the efficient work of Schwab, and he may perhaps figure out how many more libraries he could have "donated" if he had in his service such an accomplished "wage saver" as Schwab.

Schwab is to have a yearly remuneration of $1,000,000, and for this sum he is expected to "save" $5,000,000 for his employers. It makes little difference for the capitalists whether they pay $1 or $1,000,000, so long as they get four-fifths of the total away. And they will get it, until the workers who produce it all, awake to a knowledge of their class interests and unite politically to enforce them.

Governor Wells of Utah has vetoed the amendment to the proposed bill which would render plural marriages exempt from legal proceedings against those contracting them, and every self-selling hypocritical capitalist journal expresses the greatest possible satisfaction over this triumph of "virtue." So the old established principle of "keep mistresses," who can be abandoned when no longer attractive, still survives. It's cheaper, and more in harmony with existing property relations.

As the efforts of Great Britain to destroy the South African Republic have materially assisted in swelling the volume of exports from this country, thereby making "the balance of trade" still more "favorable," it is explicitly stated that the United States government should be the first to officially recognize the "Transvaal and Orange River colonies" as dependencies of the British crown. Our patriotic capitalists sold mules to the British government for hard cash, but they actually gave the Boers their "sympathy" without charging a cent for it. And it is altogether probable that the increased opportunity for trade with South Africa will go a long way towards alleviating the grief which they naturally feel over the suppression of the republic by the monarchy. In the meantime mules and sympathy can be procured on the same terms as before.

Notice

We have a limited number of copies of the International Socialist Review, returned from the News Company with the covers slightly damaged, so that they cannot be sent out on subscriptions. Any comrades who will call at this office can have twenty-five assorted copies for 25 cents. This is much less than cost, and the offer is made only to party members, as we might suffer considerable inconvenience and loss if these copies fell into the hands of irresponsible people. This price does not include postage. But for 25 cents we will mail 25 of these damaged copies to any office of an A. D. P. local outside of Chicago. Address Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 45 Fifth Avenue, Chicago.

Mr. Wu was surprised when a republican newspaper reporter said he was going to vote for Harrison, and in explanation was led to believe that it was because Harrison was the best man. The truth of the matter is that just now when the question of political affiliation is asked, it is SAFE to say you are a Harrison man, because he is the one the capitalist bosses want elected.

On motion it was ordered to communicate to the N. E. E. B. is requested to submit the question as to whether or not its organization shall abide by the decisions of the joint convention to a general vote of its membership before the joint convention takes place. It was further ordered to communicate to the N. E. B. of Chicago that it is the sense of the N. E. B. that September is too late for a national convention, and that it will prevent or impair the usefulness of state conventions and cripple the fall campaign, and since our party has acceded to the place selected by the Chicago convention, the N. Request from Springfield Comrades, Attention: Comrade tips all local comrades to forward to the National Secretary a list of all members, to be recorded at headquarters. A number have complied, but there are still many locals to be heard from, and the secretaries of these organizations are urgently requested to attend to this at once. All locals are also requested not to forget to forward all new applications which are also to be recorded at headquarters. There are still a few locals and several comrades who have not yet failed to settle their account for international delegate stamp, and as the N. E. C. wishes to entirely close up same, they are requested to make prompt settlement with the National Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE

N. E. C. has been sent to all locals, which are requested to remit at once, as the N. E. C. must clear up its indebtedness incurred by the national campaign before retiring and turning over the affairs of the party to the new committee. Therefore, comrades, your prompt remittances will be greatly appreciated by the N. E. C.

The national council is now electing candidates for the new N. E. C., and we trust that the comrades will see to it that their local pays at once the amount of their assessment, so as to leave the new committee free and unhampered to carry on a vigorous and active agitation through the coming spring, summer and fall.

A new plan of arranging circuits for open-air speakers is under consideration, and, if adopted and carried out, will do great good for socialism and the A. D. P. You will hear more of this plan next week.

The following comrades, Geo. Eastman of Detroit, Mich.; Job Harrison of New York; Max Hayes of Ohio; and O. A. Hohn of St. Louis, Mo., have accepted nominations for International Secretary and are members of the N. E. C. Their names will be submitted to a referendum vote of our party membership this week. Comrades are requested to vote for two of the above candidates at once, the vote closing on April 15th, at 6 P. M.

Comrades, all of the above matters and especially the payment of the assessment and the settlement of international delegate stamps are of the utmost importance, and the N. E. C. urgently requests you to give them all your prompt attention.

Yours for the cause, WM. BUTSCHER, ETET, National Secretary.

A Helpful Sign

Editor The Workers' Call: Dear Comrades—Did you ever hear of such a thing as a lot of trades unions putting their heads together and getting out on election day and "legging" for them? Well, such a thing has just happened. Right here in this prosaic old town of Des Moines, Iowa, the carpenters and the printers rightly thought that their crafts would be better treated by the school board if they had some of their own men on the board. Accordingly, they got several other unions to join with them in holding a convention and putting up two candidates for director, one a carpenter and the other a printer, Messrs. H. U. Keasey and H. J. Kelland. A committee was appointed to take charge of the campaign, and it did so with ability and good results. Circulars were sent out, the thousands of the attention of the workmen to the fact that their class was entitled to and ought to have representation on the school board. Some thirty or forty workmen volunteered to lose their day's work on election day in order to work at the polls. Of course the labor ticket was handicapped for want of a campaign fund. There was not sufficient money to hire carriages to transport voters to the polls and to watch the poll books in order to check up on the vote. As a result, the ticket was expected in their first trial, they lost the election. The highest vote for the opposition was 1,332. The highest vote for the labor ticket was 1,123. On election night returns were received at the Trades and Labor Assembly Hall, Des Moines, that who will say again that the workmen are not becoming class conscious and waking up to the fact that they must get into politics in their own behalf? With such a start in their first campaign, it is safe to say that they will try the next time. Des Moines voters will make a clean sweep. Such fine schooling in class-consciousness ought to be very encouraging to the socialist comrades the country over.

Fraternally, JOHN W. WORK.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

S. Finer—What is known as the "iron law of wages" was enunciated first by Ricardo, a political economist of the early part of the last century. Briefly stated, it is as follows: The price of products are regulated by the cost of production. Wages, therefore, are the cost of production of the laborer—that is to say, the minimum cost of his means of subsistence—food, clothing, shelter, etc., etc. This theory, posed the older one that wages were regulated by "the law of supply and demand." The iron law of wages" is generally accepted by socialists in the main, but it is not recognized as being as absolutely rigid and inflexible, as the older "iron law" would have it. Different standards of living in different countries affect it considerably, and the measure of success which has attended the efforts of labor unions and organizations in maintaining and raising wages is also due to a certain laxity in the wage system. Most socialists would qualify Ricardo's law by stating that under the capitalist mode of production wages CONSTANTLY TEND towards this minimum, that is, the cost of production of the laborer. This does not mean that a certain "iron law" is not in force, but it is not looked upon by socialists as a statement of very great importance, as it has since been superseded by the Marxian theory, which not only modified it as above stated, but added also the concept of "surplus value" which was then worked out for the first time. The pamphlet, "What is Capital," by Ferdinand Lassalle, will give you considerable information on this subject. It can be procured for 5 cents from Kerr & Co., 45 Fifth Avenue, New York, or the International Pub. Co., 23 Duane Street, New York City.

The Campaign Fund

To the members of the Socialist Party: Comrades—As the campaign draws to a close the need of more funds becomes more apparent, and must be provided. The comrades and friends who hold lists with money should turn them in at once without further delay. Those who have lists, but who have been unsuccessful in collecting anything should also return them, as the committee wishes to get in all lists as soon as possible, and of course to get in all moneys also. Please see to it that this be done at once.

Honore Palmer is not so young as used to be, but he is still a class conscious and to try to uphold his class by feeding the workmen. He says the next four years will decide whether the people propose to govern themselves. As if electing him would mean proposing their purposes in that direction! We propose to the people that they organize according to their class interests. The personal and class interests of the candidates or classes. All proposals to the country should be rejected by thinking.

THE CRY OF THE "FORTY THOUSAND"

(Written for The Workers' Call.)

(An article in a recent number of a daily paper stated that in the city of London there are 40,000 persons living in misery and want, but unable to obtain employment, who were actually homeless, penniless and on the verge of starvation. The Salvation Army thought it could relieve 10,000 of them, but what about the other 30,000 who they could not help?)

Hear the cry of the forty thousand: Homeless, helpless, hungering, cold.
Men and women and little children, waiting in vain for a morsel of bread.
Forty thousand, and doomed to perish, dying of want, amidst wealth untold.

"Help us! O, help us! or we die of hunger!
Help us—we perish in the biting blast;
Our tattered garments scarcely hold together,
And winter's frown for weary months will last.

"Tis not for ams and charity we're pleading,
We do not crave to eat of pauper's bread.
We ask no more than just a chance to labor,
And, this denied, 'twere better to be dead."

"If we must plead in vain with tears of anguish
For leave to toil, to drudge like galley slaves,
Why were we born? Why should we keep on living?
Why not make ready for our pauper graves?"

"The starving babes our wasted arms are clasping
Look up to us with sad reproachful eyes—
Let but our grasp on each small throat once tighten,
We still forevermore its feeble cries.

"Say, shall we do it? Brother, sister, hearken!
'Twere better, far—their sufferings will be o'er—
Their souls are sinless, and if there's a heaven,
As Christians say, they'll hunger there no more!"

Hear the cry of the forty thousand! "Wholesale murder for babes is best!"
Hear them hear it, O happy mother! Clasp thy babe to thy milk-white breast, Sweet little babe, in its dainty garments, birding bright in a downy nest!

"Our aged sires, our mothers, old and feeble,
So long they've lingered in this world of pain;
Should we release them from the woes of living Rest, peace, at last, they surely would obtain.

"And for ourselves, what think ye? Were it better
This hopeless struggle we should forthwith end?
Our bony fingers yet can serve this purpose—
They're strong enough the web of life to mend."

"Earth holds no spot in all her wide dominions,
For us, of life's great blessings dispossessed,
But Death's dark dwellings offer us a refuge;
In them is room, in them is endless rest."

Hear the cry of the forty thousand, disinherited sons of men;
Dreary dirge of despair and horror; listen, brothers, yet once again—
On 'tis fraught with sinister meaning—canst interpret it, trusty pen?

"And yet, why should we die? 'Twill serve no purpose—
Why, rather, should we not resolve to live?
Can we not take BY FORCE the world's best treasures, Seize and hold all, as things ought to be?"

"They will not let us! Hat we shall not ask them,
We are the many—millions from all lands
O'er mountain peak, drear plain, and storm-tossed ocean Reach forth to us their strong fraternal hands.

"The very air we're breathing now is haunted
By wolfish eyes where hate and hunger gleam
So, ere we die, we'll strew the world with corpses,
And dye with blood full many a crystal stream."

"Have we not done it in the years long vanished?
Have ye forgotten France and what was done?
In that fair land where soil gave birth to freedom,
Where tyrants fell beneath the guillotine?"

"Twas not in vain that glorious uprising—
'Twill serve to guide us on our onward way,
The dogs of war in every land are howling—
No power on earth the people's course can stay."

Hear the cry of the forty thousand! Lead and leader its echoes ring!
Gone far away is its mournful cadence; men and women and children sing—
Sing and shout, but the world will shudder over deeds from such songs will spring.

"Aye! we will live—now suicide were treason,
And on the sweets of vengeance will we feast;
For torch and axe and dynamite and cannon
Shall rid the world of plutocrat and priest."

"The lesson they have taught us will we practice,
The mercy they have shown us will we show;
We will not turn our cheek unto the smiter,
Nor give a blow where we've received a blow."

"What! 't' ye say? The rich have standing armies—
We shall be food for powder, shot and shell!
Well, let them come, but ere they can overpower us,
We'll send whole legions of their tribe to hell."

"Down to the dust we'll raise each marble palace
And make great bonfires of their works of art.
Their temples grand, where gold, not God, is worshipped
(The rich and poor, as elsewhere far apart).

"All—all shall go that marks the present order,
We will not scotch the serpent now, but kill!
And from the wreck and universal chaos Create a world, new-fashioned, to our will."

"And death at last to all mankind's appointed,
So better far to die as heroes die;
For torch and axe and dynamite and cannon
Shall rid the world of plutocrat and priest."

Hear these cries of the maddened children, then who're worshipped as God alone, Perished by men and the hosts of heaven, crowned with light on Thy great, white throne.
Quell this tumult of blood and terror: Nay! we cry to a god of stone.

"What can we lose, then, save a life of torture,
Even if our cause should be foredoomed to fail?
But fail we will not—vict'ry lies before us—
The gates of hell 'gainst us shall not prevail."

"And, listen yet, a secret word we'd whisper:
The standing armies of our foes are men—
Men like ourselves, with human hearts and passions,
And they'll REFUSE TO SHOOT THEIR BRETHREN THEN."

"O, yes, 'tis true: We know whereat we're speaking—Revolt and mutiny are in the air;
They'll be our armies when the hour approaches,
And Mammon's slaves shall grovel in despair."

"Cursed be the eye that then shall beam with pity, Curbed be the tongue that implies us to spare,
For those who dare to prate to us of mercy
Of our swift vengeance must themselves beware."

Hear ye heard them, O, men and brothers? Hear them heard their sister fair?
Flash the guns of thy tiny cannon, blood-red rubies adorn thy hair;
But they smote if, the forty thousand, "Blood-red drops soon shall trickle there!"

"But see, O, see! Whence springs this light supernatural?
What voice divine doth thrill the 'ambient air'?
The Angel, Hope, hath spread her snowy pinions,
And lifted the tones of vengeance and despair."

"She speaks: 'O, friends! what mean these cries of fury?
These vengeful words surcharged with blood and flame?
My brethren, dear, are ye then no more human,
That kindred ties have on your hearts no claim?'"

"For ye are one—the rich and poor are brothers—
One the nation's despoiler and despoiled.
Toss ye are wronged who vainly seek to labor,
And they are still who have their lives and souls sold."

"Who've reared proud mansions which they may not enter, Planted great vineyards of whose luscious fruit
They may not taste, but, housed and fed like cattle,
They live the lives and die the death of brutes."

"They weave soft fabrics for the rich and idle,
Mine gold and gems to form their jewels rare,
And, like yourselves, know of the pang of hunger,
While pampered menials have rich food to spare."

Alas, brothers, O, Forty Thousand! They are with you, they feel your wrongs.
Labor's legions are marching onward—strong indeed are the gathering throngs.
Join your forces and work together, claim the earth which is your long!

"Yes, yours the task to work out your salvation,
With fear and trembling? No, with hearts aglow,
Who feared and trembled never yet succeeded,
Great deeds, brave actions, from strong courage flow."

"Hasten, O, Brothers, to the word I utter—
This is no work for each to do alone,
For to himself be sure that 'no man liveth'
So no man's life is his to call his own."

"Since this is true, ye all must band together;
Our heart, one soul, the law of love demands,
Yet this great heart must be all pure and holy,
Nor spot ensanguined stain your helpful hands."

"To are the builders of the coming city,
Which ports call 'The City of the Light,'
This home of horror where ye now are dwelling
They will have named the realm of dreadful night."

"For all your sorrows spring from false conditions,
Which ye today are called upon to change;
Change them by bullets? No, by BALLOTS, Brothers—
These words are true, the seeming cold and strange."

This is the call to the forty thousand, this is the message which hope proclaims.
Hear it and heed it, O, men and brothers! Feel its spirit in all your aims—
Then your lives shall be filled with glory—all the world shall revere your names.

"A ballot? Pah! A flimsy bit of paper!
Deplete it not—its still, small voice can drown
The roar of cannon—all the din of battle,
Can throttle kings and topple empires down."

"The deadly bomb, the torch, assassin's dagger—
Not these the weapons for the coming time;
They held full sway in past barbaric ages,
But shall not mar your destiny sublime."

"No man shall claim what all must hold in common;
Our joint inheritance, the earth, shall yield
To all her children who toil for her bread,
The fruits of toil from forest, farm and field."

"From out all lands the landlord shall be banished,
And forced like other men to earn his bread,
Whereas he lives to-day on others' labor,
Nor deigns the soil he wrongfully holds to tread."

"The mines which hold the wealth of all the ages, (Dread Nature's treasures, an exhaustless hoard),
Of which to-day the toilers are defrauded
By private greed, shall be to them restored."

Hear the shouts of the forty thousand! List to their glad exultant cry:
"Angel of Hope, we greet thy coming—our redemption is drawing nigh!
Light springs up in the dawn darkness, hail the dawning which burns on high!"

"Claim next the tools, the great machines which Labor
To-day requires to supplement her skill,
In private hands for private gain now centered,
These must be yours to execute your will."

"No man is free who's forced to work for wages;
WHO OWNS THE LABOR OWNS THE LABORER, TOO—
Labor is life—the principle of being;
Existence means the right to be and do."

"O, men! Brave heralds of the human era,
Which all deem show is surely now at hand,
Rejoice, be glad, for in that hour triumphant,
Wage-slavery's power shall cease in every land."

"Then shall ye grasp Humanity's fruition,
Then 'reap in joy' what ye have sown in tears,
The morrow shall and ye shall sing together
Love's own immortal 'music of the spheres.'"

"Lift up your heads, O gates of pearl and Jasper!
Lift, Lift your heads ye portals of the Temple,
That man may enter Freedom's holy Temple,
And tread with awe her opalescent floor."

Hear the cry of the forty thousand: "Ah! Our struggles were not in vain!
Fall injustice, so long triumphant, now is vanquished and error slain.
Hail the dawn of the human era, Joy and Peace o'er the earth shall reign!"

ed him, according to his celebrated Hun-speech. And yet the Allied troops complain if they are represented as butchers in China.

NORWAY.

The Norske Arbeiderforbund, or the central organization of the Norwegian trades unions, has severed its connection with the radical party, with whom they formerly acted. It is generally thought that they will now act with the Social-Democrats.

Fifteen salmon canneries on the Pacific coast are forming a $3,000,000 trust.

A compulsory arbitration bill is before the New York legislature which, if enacted into law, according to trade union people, will put organized labor out of business.

Reports from the large cities indicate that the machinists are getting ready to enforce the nine-hour day in May.—

A first-class bill of fare at your breakfast table would be better than either a full dinner pail or a three-cent fare on the street car.—Missouri Socialist.

Roston papers mention the fact that the ice trust has thrown 7,500 men and 2,500 horses out of employment in the state of Maine. The horses are probably pleased, but the men ain't.

The current monthly journal of the International Association of Machinists publishes the full text of the letter of acceptance issued by Comrade John Collins, the Socialist party candidate for mayor of Chicago.

Carnegie says he thinks it a disgrace to die rich. He should be rewarded with a gold medal for saving thousands of his "hands" from such a fate. Give us another library, Andy, and don't forget to throw in a copy of "Triumph of Democracy." We want to learn how to save millions.—Tolter, Terre Haute.

Socialism appeals to the intelligence and better nature of man. Generally speaking, the lackhead has no use for such a theory. He has no conscience to trouble him, and is perfectly willing that somebody else should do his thinking for him. He would make a better citizen, perhaps, if his brains were as active as his stomach.—Galzburg Labor News.

How many officials that you have voted for and helped to elect, Mr.
Workingman, ever asked you after election what laws you wanted passed?
Whether they were elected as republican or democrat, they have always went to the capitalist, the labor skinners, for their instructions, and they will do the same in the future.—San Diego Chieftain.

After several years of agitation, the unions of New Haven, Conn., secured the passage of an ordinance compelling contractors to employ union men whenever possible on city work. Now the corporation counsel has declared the act unconstitutional, as interfering with "the freedom of contract." Of course, the unionists are swearing and the capitalists and politicians are much pleased.

Progress is going on at a rapid rate, and within the next four or five years many things will take place that but few can now conceive of. If some socialist had predicted on the fourth of March, 1897, that by March 4, 1901, there would be a trust representing more than a billion dollars, but few would have believed it. But greater surprises than this will take place within the next four years.—Farmers' Review.

Striking silk mill employees in Scrat-ton, Pa., held a monster demonstration last week at which "Mother Jones" delivered a stirring address to the strikers urging them to stand firmly for their demands. Three thousand factory girls in line of march created an impression in the locality that will not be easily forgotten, particularly as many of the transparencies carried in the parade showed that the girls were beginning to perceive the reality of the class struggle.

A few years ago the middle class and wage-workers of California scraped together their dollars and pennies and built the Valley railroad to compete with the Southern Pacific monopoly, which was then squeezing the life out of the dear people, and which has since been absorbed by the Rockefeller-Morgan-Hill interests. Now the news comes that the Valley road was absorbed by the Atchafalca, Topeka and Santa Fe, which is in the combine, and that the latter road has entered into an agreement with the Southern Pacific to "maintain rates, divide territory and pool all competitive business." Of course, the little fellows are squealing again, but what does it amount to?
They love capitalism.—Cleveland Citizen.

THE ARTFUL DODGER.

Minister Voss "Socialism" as Bait to Attract Crowd and Then Shirts the Proposed Subject.

This article is somewhat late owing to my neglect, nevertheless its contents are fresh in my memory, and it may be interesting to our readers.

Since the middle of January this year the Sheffield Avenue Methodist church, corner of George street, Pastor Dr. R.
A. Morley, has widely advertised a series of revival meetings during the month of February, the services to obtacle on Sunday, February 24, with the subject, "Wealth and Poverty, Labor and Socialism."

Being interested in these economic developments, I thought it might result in bearing this subject discussed from the pulpit, hence I went to this service. I was impressed by the sermon and attended regularly service; joined in the singing of familiar tunes; I went to prayers and witnessed the baptism of three little innocent children. The little ones amply disregarded the quantities of book-form benediction heaped upon them, and the abundance of cold holy water freely bestowed by the hands of the clerk trickled down their locks and curls and wet their white garments. Did the babies catch cold? Their mothers can tell you. But of course the water of baptism was not the cause.

After the collection and its blessing by the Sunday school superintendent, Dr. Morley announced that the congregation would listen to Mr. Mackintosh, who would preach. I began to feel that there was disappointment in store for me on account of this announcement.
Mr. Mackintosh preached from the parable of the fruitless figtree. (Mt. Luke, Ch. xlii-4.) "A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon and he found none. Then said he to the dresser of his vineyard, Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this figtree and find none; cut it down;
Why cumbereth the ground?"

The congregation and the majority of church members were likened to "the fruitless figtree. Individuals who were affected with consumption tuberculosis, who could only answer in a weak whisper when asked if they were alive,
"Yes, we are alive."

Mr. Mackintosh went near the limit of endurance in scoring the flock for its fruitlessness, but nothing of what the minister charged seemed to take any effect. Dr. Morley is perfectly safe in accepting Duke M. Parson's offer of $1,000.00 for fifteen souls, without any other conditions than those laid down by Mr. Parson. Mr. Mackintosh did not mention socialism. Some remarks about the rich were thrust upon the congregation, but did not meet with much attention from those present.
Morning service ended. The customary handshake took place, and the invitation to come to evening service was extended by Dr. Morley in person.

My disappointment at the beginning of service, increased to such extent that I doubted if evening service would touch the subject so widely advertised for that day, and which I and perhaps others had come out to listen to. I did not however, attend in the evening, but have learned since from comrades who were present that the subject of "Wealth and Poverty"—CAPITAL, LA-BOR and SOCIALISM, was evaded by the slim excuse, "that as they had Mr.
Mackintosh still with them" one week more, and that as he understood Christianity better than socialism, he would talk from the Bible and leave socialism to the future. After this announcement the comrades walked out.

The cause of the subject of socialism being advertised for discussion in the above church must come from the pressure of economic conditions reaching either the pastor or some members of the congregation, whom circumstances force to begin independent thinking and who are struggling against the might as right rule, to master or be mastered. We Socialists understand why the churches evade discussions of socialism from the pulpit and postpone the teachings of its economic basis, but it is not quite so clear how the church members can swallow all the invectives that ministers occasionally rebuke their sisters and brothers with.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

Riotographers in the movement and all stenographers who are interested in economic and labor problems are requested to send their names and addresses to the assistant city organizer, Frederick G. Strickland, 158 E. Van Huren street.

Comrade F. W. Knox will speak before the Glen Ellyn local at Comrade Kerr's home Tuesday evening, March 26. Glen Ellyn is only 25 miles west of the city on the C. & N. W., and Chicago comrades are invited to any of the Tuesday evening meetings.

The 24th ward branch hold public and agitation meeting next Sunday, March 24, at 3 p. m., at 1663 Lincoln avenue; N. W. corner Irving Park boulevard. Singing by the Socialist quartette. Socialist branch and other workers present. The meeting is well advertised, and also bring out friends with them. Speaker,
A. M. Simons.

The Twenty-fourth ward branch held a very encouraging business meeting on last Friday. Comrades Olson and Statist addressed the members on "Organization and Education." Two new members were admitted. It was decided to hold a public meeting for agitation and lecture on Friday, March 23, at 3 p. m., when speakers will be furnished. Wendell Hall, corner of Diversey boulevard and Southport avenue.

Comrade J. B. Smiley delivered his interesting lecture on "To What Are the Trusts Leading?" before a large audience last Sunday afternoon at the head quarters of the Fifteenth ward branch, 594 W. North avenue. A large crowd was present. The comrades of this branch are conducting a lively campaign. The speakers next Sunday afternoon will be Comrades Knox and Stangland.

The Seventeenth ward branch held another rousing meeting last Sunday afternoon at their headquarters, Aurora Hall, corner Milwaukee avenue and Huron street. A large crowd had assembled to listen to an address by Comrade T. J. Morgan. After listening to an interesting talk on the issues of the campaign, the crowd adjourned in a body to Brand's hall to participate in the Commune Festival.

Comrade Berlin spoke at a very successful meeting arranged by the Thirty-third ward branch at the corner of 15th street and Michigan avenue last Sunday afternoon. The hall was comfortably filled with an attentive and enthusiastic audience. Comrade Anderson, candidate for alderman, presided and opened the meeting with a few words. He then turned the address over to Comrade Berlin's address a number of new subscribers were taken for the Workers' Call, also a number of new members were admitted.

The Thirty-fifth ward branch, No. 2, held a very successful agitation meeting last Wednesday evening at Lind-strom's Hall, N. E. corner of 4th avenue and Lake street. The speakers were Comrades F. G. Strickland, Walter Higgins and E. M. Stangland. After the speaking, three new members were admitted. The comrades of this branch have arranged to hold meetings at Lindstrom's Hall every Wednesday night until election. Literature will be distributed and everything possible will be done to make these meetings a success.

The comrades of the regular Eighth ward branch have combined with the German Eighth ward for purposes of agitation during the campaign. A splendid programme for socialist propaganda has been arranged. Thursday night, March 21st, they will hold an agitation meeting at Sascow Hall, corner Houston avenue and Ninety-second street. Comrades Simons and Kausch will speak. Meetings have also been arranged for every Saturday night up to election at Sherman hall, 110 Commercial avenue. Wednesday evening, March 27, a grand mass meeting will be held at Brock's Opera House, South Chicago. The speakers will be Comrades John Collins and Walter Thomas Mills.

The comrades of the Third ward held another very successful agitation meeting last Sunday evening at their commodious headquarters, 235 State st.
The hall was filled to its capacity, and even the sidewalk in front of the hall, which is on the first floor, was crowded with interested listeners to an address by Comrade Simons. The audience was very appreciative and seemed deeply interested in the questions discussed by the speaker. The comrades of the Third ward are conducting a lively campaign. The right sort. Their activity cannot fail to bear fruit. The above address every Sunday evening, and will be announced in the "Meetings for the Week" column.

On March 15 Daily Lodge 134 D. A. of Machinists was addressed by Comrade John Collins, the subject taken being,
"Which candidate Should the Union Men Vote For?" After the address attention was given to make a collection for the campaign fund of the Socialist party and the sum of $7.10 was realized, which was duly received by the campaign committee, who acknowledge receipt of same in these columns and express their obligations to the lodge members. It is to be hoped that their example will be followed by other bodies of organized labor, when they begin to understand that only in the socialist movement can their interests as workingmen find political expression.

Among the many rousing meetings of the week that deserves special attention was the one held at the North Side Turner Hall on Monday night. There were about one thousand enthusiastic workers present, and from beginning to the end the proceedings were marked by an enthusiasm that can never be duplicated in old party's ranks. Comrade Simons was the first speaker and briefly outlined the reasons why labor must vote the Socialist ticket this spring or vote itself into continuous slavery.
Comrade John Collins then held up to view the records of the democratic and republican candidates in relation to organized labor and appealed to the union men and other workers present not "throw their votes away" on such men. Comrade W. T. Mills took the closing words of Comrade Collins as a text, pointed out that voting for capitalist candidates was not "throwing the vote away but 'selling it to the enemy,'" and was like the action of a man with a revolver who, when attacked, does not even know enough to hurl the weapon at his enemy's head but to meekly hand it to him handle first. He closed with an eloquent arrangement of men who were so complacent as to remain slaves, since no man was ever yet enslaved save with his own consent.

Socialist Temple Notes.

Very good meeting Tuesday, March 12; Comrade Klenke was in the chair, Comrade Geo. D. Evans, speaker. The concert of the Schubert String Quartette was most excellent. Every number on the program was heartily enjoyed. Comrade C. Frederic Kellogg and Jesse Stevens both play with wonderful expression.

Sunday was a full day. The morning meeting was well attended. After the usual music, Comrade Strickland spoke.
His prelude on "Politics and the Preacher" was furnished to all the morning papers, but it met with the "conspiracy of silence."

At 2:30 a real beginning of the Socialist school was made. Comrade A.
Simons had a good-wind clam, and the class thoroughly enjoyed the lesson.
Comrade Strickland taught the primary department the "Parable of the Wise Tank."

The campaign meeting at 8:30 was a pronounced success. There was a very large attendance of non-socialists.
Comrade Brenman was in the chair.
Comrade Strickland gave a preliminary talk on the present political issues.
The address of Comrade John Collins was on "Socialism and Trades Unionism." The audience greeted the speaker with rounds of applause. Undoubtedly votes were made for socialism.

One of the Social Crusaders speaks every Sunday evening. However, Comrade Smiley speaks next Sunday at 8, as the Crusaders are all engaged.

Comrade Peter Bauman speaks Tuesday, March 20th, on "Socialism of Today."

The ladies will provide speakers for Thursday evenings. The speaker for Thursday, April 2, will probably be Comrade May Wood Simons.

The campaign meeting at 2:30 next Sunday will be addressed by Comrade Walter Thomas Mills. Spread the news. Get out the voters. Call at the Temple and get some bills to pass.

At the business meeting of the joint committee at 8:30 last Sunday it was decided to accept the suggestion of some of the ladies and provide a store in the small side room for those to prepare lunch who wish to stay all day.

We need two more tables, some shelving and a bookcase.

Comrade Mills volunteers to make a transparency sign.

Comrade Strickland will speak on the street near the Temple every evening that the weather permits.

Vote for labor's candidates for mayor.

The New Light, Port Angeles, Washington: "Should be in the hands of every laboring man in the United States."

Great Premium Offer

It is with pleasure that the Workers' Call announces to its friends and patrons that it has completed arrangements with one of the largest Socialist publishing houses in the country, whereby it has obtained a quantity of the best Socialist books published in the English language to be given as premiums to its subscribers. The terms upon which these books have been obtained make it possible for us to extend to active workers the best premium offer that has ever been made by a Socialist publication. The books which we offer are the very cream of Socialist literature, and should be in the home of every active comrade. With a little hustling—in a good cause—it is possible for every comrade to obtain them free of cost. This remarkable offer is as follows:

With every two dollars' worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the rate of 50 cents for yearlies and 25 cents for half-yearlies, we will give a copy of "The Peoples' Marx," an excellent epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital," translated from the French of Gabriel Deville. Retail price, 75 cents. Or "A History of the Commune of 1871," by Lissagury, price, $1.00.

With every one dollar and fifty cents worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, we will give one copy of Eugene Sue's "Silver Cross, or the Carpenter of Namur," cloth bound, price 50 cents.

With every one dollar's worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postals, paid for at the same rate, we will give any two of the following classics of Socialist literature: "Socialism from Utopia to Science," by Frederick Engels; "The Workingman's Program," by Ferdinand Lassalle; "The Right to Be Lazy," by Paul Lafargue; "The State and Socialism," by Gabriel Deville; "Socialism, Revolution and Internationalism," by Gabriel Deville. Retail price of each of the above books, 10 cents.

Also with one dollar's worth of subscriptions we will give any one of the following 25 cent books: "The Civil War in France," by Karl Marx; "Science and the Workingmen," by Ferdinand La Salle; "The Socialist Campaign Book for 1900."

It is unnecessary for us to dilate to any extent upon the merits of the books which we thus place within the easy reach of every comrade in the country.

"The Peoples' Marx" has been introduced to our readers in previous numbers. It contains all the salient points of the parent book, "Capital," and presents them in a form more readily understood by the average mind. "Capital" in its original form is a book for the student. "The Peoples' Marx" is a book for everybody. The other books which we offer are familiar to all Socialists.

In taking advantage of the above offer comrades are requested to make use of the following blank application. Fill it out and send it with your letter:

The Workers' Call, 36 N. Clark St., Chicago.

VOTE FOR THE CANDIDATE OF THE SOCIALIST PARTY. FOR MAYOR JOHN COLLINS

ON POLITICAL STAGE

Battle of Capitalist Puppets Waxen Fast and Furious.

QUESTIONS AND "ANSWERS."

Phantom Army Comes to Rescue of Harrison While Harlan Performs on the Side.

The sham battle now going on between the two wings of capitalism known as the republicans and "democratic parties, through their puppets, Harrison and Harney, or reaching the point where interest must be stimulated amongst the voting dupes by the pretense that the conflict is nearing a crisis and that a hard fought battle is being waged. The press, which acts as chorus to the political stage performers, advises the audience that the betting upon the contestants is now even money, and that the "Harney men are, sanguine of victory. To the ordinary observer, who knows the reason why these claims are put forth, their fallacy becomes farcical. Great masses of voters take only the faintest interest in the election, those who are yet satisfied with capitalism still clinging to their peculiar fetish, that while the national administration must remain republican, the local administration shall remain democratic. This is thoroughly in harmony with the interests of the political bosses of both machines, and explains sufficiently why Burke was successful in having the republican machine turn down Harlan and thereby secure to himself for another two years the shadow which he at present holds and the election of Harrison as the anti-trust, anti-corporation candidate.

This scheme was too successful. The overwhelming victory of Harrison was regarded as so certain that interest in the counterfeited struggle began to wane. Something had to be done to prevent Harney from being hopelessly swamped and so John F. Altgeld and the 47,000 votes which he doesn't control, were trotted out upon the stage as coming to the rescue of the under dog. The assumption that these votes could be thrown to either of the performing fairs is a bubble that will burst on election day, and the Socialist party will have a considerable share in puncturing it. Many thousands who voted for Altgeld two years ago under the impression that he in some indirect, unobtrusive manner, would have had their eyes open since then and a goodly number will give proof of the fact by casting their votes for JOHN COLLINS, the candidate of the SOCIALIST PARTY, while those who are not so easily convinced by the promises of the "under dog" party, will probably, like the dog in the scripture, return to their vomit by voting for Harrison. That Harney will get any assistance from that quarter is in the highest degree improbable. These 47,000 "men in buckram" coming to his rescue, to the one thing wanted to complete the lying illusion of a real struggle. The sham remains a sham, and all efforts to make it appear a reality have not only ended in failure, but have served to expose still more clearly its counterfeited nature.

If anything else were wanted to complete the picture, it might readily be found in the method by which the candidates answer the questions of those who take them seriously. It is only necessary to read the reports of the daily press upon this side of the subject to realize that the alleged conflict has a distinctly humorous undertone. Harney, for instance, is asked, "How about the street railway franchise?" and he promptly and explicitly calls the attention of his questioner to the very obvious fact that "our streets are dirty." Another inquirer wants to know whether he favors municipal ownership, and is instantly informed in the plainest possible language that the police force is thoroughly corrupt, but that, if he is elected, all these things and many others too numerous to mention will be promptly remedied.

The other side is equally explicit, though his method of meeting the inquisition is somewhat different, and as he has never committed himself to anything definite, he can take even a wider latitude than his opponent. Mr. Harrison begins to call your attention to the fact that the name Harney appears on the city records of 1889 as a grocery clerk; next it hops up to 1872 as a bookkeeper, or something of that sort, and finally appears in 1861 as a lawyer. He doesn't carry his history past that date, but leaves them to draw their own conclusions. Of course, he favors municipal ownership, but to remove false impressions as to the exact nature of what he means by this term, he publishes in the Saturday Evening Post a letter stating that he favors a renewal of the street railway franchise for a period not exceeding twenty years. And the democratic platform upon which he stands is equally explicit. It makes a declaration for municipal ownership and then inserts a plank opposing the extension of franchises for a period of more than twenty years. Thus Harrison and his platform are in perfect accord, and so confident is the latter of his position that he constantly demands from Harney that he also should publicly state his position on the expiring franchises. With marvelous nerve Harney fortifies the righteousness of his demand upon his opponent by declaring that "everybody knows where I stand on the subject." As a political artist, Harney utterly eclipses Harney, who seems merely a novice compared with Compare these political tricksters and their ambiguous platforms with the straightforward declaration of the SOCIALIST PARTY platform, which declares the intentions of its supporters

CALL TO TEACHERS

Workers With Hand and Brain Must Unite in Common Cause.

ARE IN ONE ECONOMIC CLASS.

Capitalism Has No Funds for Educating the Children of the Workers, or Paying Their Instructors.

No taxes no school funds; no school funds, no teachers; no teachers, no tuition; no tuition, no knowledge; no knowledge, no intelligent electors; no intelligent electors, no honest officials; no honest officials, no equitable taxation; no taxes, etc., as before, as many times as you please. This is the endless chain of cause and effect which produces the conditions that confront us in this city. Workingmen! By your toil you create the wealth that makes Chicago the industrial center of the United States. But that wealth is in the hands of your exploiters. By policemen, special deputies, the regulars, who will teach you another lesson not contained in the glorious textbooks of American history. There is always plenty of "dust" on hand around election time to pay the toughs who will bully and terrorize you when you try to use your franchise in your own interest.

But they have no money to build sanitary public schools; no money to equip these schools with modern and up to date appliances; no money to furnish textbooks that are in keeping with the scientific and economic development of our time. No money to feed the half starved children of their wage slaves or to clothe or warm the shivering bodies of little pupils eager to enter the fairy castle of modern knowledge. No money to build playgrounds for your little ones, who must play in the gutter instead of gamboling among flowers. No money to educate competent teachers and pay them decent wages.

Teachers! You have supported by your own votes men who now trample on your rights. You have supported a system that pays policemen better than educators; that big money for riot guns, but not for textbooks. You have kept aloof from your fellow workers in the mistaken idea that you belong to a "higher class." But the latest expe-

HOW WILL YOU VOTE?

Workingmen Can Elect or Defeat Any or All Candidates.

LESSONS OF THE PAST YEAR.

Laborers of Chicago Can Be Represented Only by the Candidates of the Socialist Party.

Whoever may be the next mayor of Chicago, he will be elected by the ballots of workingmen, just as the present mayor was, just as the one before him, and just as every other officer in city, state or nation have always been and always will be elected. If, then, all officers are elected by the laborers, it naturally follows that the laborers have it in their power to decide how they will be governed, and every worker should consider well before he casts his ballot.

For whom, then, should the laborers cast their vote next Tuesday. The first this building materials you need through that government and its credit and organizing yourselves into the most perfect union possible, build homes as long as there is a homeless head to cover, and all that you build shall belong to you because you, the workers, are alone concerned in that building because you individually supply the labor, and collectively (through your city government) supply the capital, and the contractor may either starve or go to work with you.

* This would have been the only logical thing for the government elected by laborers to do. But instead of this Carter Harrison ordered his police to club any strikers who objected too strenuously to being starved to death. When this was not sufficient he threatened them with a galling gun and told the justices of the peace to "give the limit" to any laborer whom the agents of the contractors should haul into court.

By those tactics he drove from the city of Chicago, according to reports of the daily press, 50,000 of the workers whose votes had created the government that now permitted them to be driven from their homes, separated homeless, helpless tramps, wandering up and down the roads of this land of unlimited natural wealth, but monopolized

POLITICAL TRICK FRUSTRATED

Harrison Intrudes and Audience Files Out Cheering for the Socialist Party Candidate.

Our truthful capitalist daily press, in its eagerness to boom the candidacy of Harrison for mayor, went out accounts of the "hearty reception" accorded to this political trickster at a meeting at Mueller's hall, North avenue and Sedgewick street, last Sunday. This is the substance of the account given by every morning daily in the city:

"Mayor Harrison was heartily welcomed yesterday at a reception given him at Mueller's hall, Sedgewick street and North avenue, by nineteen Turner and other German societies. Both floors of the building were crowded. The number of people present was estimated at 2,500. The occasion was a flag presentation to the Lassalle Turn Verein, and the mayor had been invited as the guest of honor. His appearance was cheered and he was greeted with considerable enthusiasm by all present. The societies which took part in the affair were: Chicago Turngemeinde, Hennepfer Turngemeinde, Chicago Turngemeinde, Mannheim Turngemeinde, Friedrichshagen Turngemeinde, and a number of turnvereine."

This account is a deliberate falsehood from start to finish. Harrison was not invited—no reception whatever was planned. The whole affair was a palpable political trick engineered, presumably, by Police Inspector Heidebrecht, who took advantage of the meeting (which really had no political significance whatever) to ring in Harrison on the occasion. The "hearty reception" which the latter received consisted mainly of howls, yells and catcalls, interspersed with cries of "Hurrah for John Collins!" Hurrah for the Socialist Party!" Harrison didn't appear to be delighted with this "hearty welcome," and when the immense majority of the audience got up in disgust and quit the hall, leaving the "man of destiny" facing a beggarly array of empty benches, the expression of his classic countenance was hardly to be mistaken for one of keen enjoyment, while Heidebrecht looked across the aching void with an eye which flashed clubs in every glance. The socialist singing societies rose in a body and went their way to their own headquarters and concluded their programme, which had been interrupted by the entrance of the capitalist politicians.

The entire incident is a striking illustration of the depth of falsehood to which the organs of the ruling class will descend in their desperate efforts to elect the man whom a few short months ago they pilloried as a criminal. That the socialist singing societies resent the base attempt to connect them with this villainous scheme, is shown by the following resolution, passed by the Socialist Sangerbund by an absolutely unanimous vote on Thursday, the 28th inst., and published at their request in this paper:

"Whereas, It has been widely published in the capitalist press that we, the members of the Socialist Sangerbund, have accorded a reception to, and endorsed the candidacy of Carter Harrison, democratic candidate for mayor of Chicago, and

"Whereas, We believe that this report has been spread broadcast by the said press for a well-fained purpose, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Socialist Sangerbund, do hereby brand any and all such statements as being unqualifiedly false, as we not only have not endorsed either of the capitalist candidates, but have repudiated both by having already endorsed the candidacy of JOHN COLLINS, the nominee for mayor on the ticket of the SOCIALIST PARTY; and be it further

"Resolved, That we inclose a copy of this resolution to the office of the Workers' Call for publication in the columns in that paper.

OSCAR GRITZKEH,
Secretary Socialist Sangerbund,
Chicago, March 28.

Don't forget that the ticket of THE SOCIALIST PARTY, headed by JOHN COLLINS, stands LAST on the ballot.

The elimination of waste has been brought to great perfection nowadays. Even the votes that are "thrown away" on capitalist parties are manufactured into infusions and policemen's clubs and return in that shape to the original owners.

The "Gray Wolf" Industry and Its Promoters.

THE SUBSERVENCY OF THE MODERN ALDERMAN TO CORPORATE INTERESTS IS ONLY ONE OF THE MANIFESTATIONS OF THE EVOLUTION OF MODERN INDUSTRY. THE REFORMERS WHO SO LOUDLY DECLAIM AGAINST THE "GRAY WOLF" CAN FIND THE REASON FOR THEIR EXISTENCE IN THESE PROVERBIAL WORDS OF LINCOLN:

"I see in the near future a crisis arising, which unwarlike men and makers of money tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power will endeavor to prolong its reign, by working on the prejudices of the people, until all wealth is aggregated in the hands of the few, and the republic is lost."—Abraham Lincoln, 1865.

and adherents in language that cannot be misunderstood. The SOCIALIST PARTY platform declares for the collective ownership of ALL the means of production and distribution by ALL the people. If the candidates of the SOCIALIST PARTY are elected, there will be no franchise question, least of all any question of the extension of franchises. The expiring franchises revert to the city, and the control of the city attaches immediately, the companies having no rights in the renewal or extension of franchises that will for a moment be considered. Whatever else may be said regarding this statement, its distinctness cannot be called in question.

As a side show to the big circus the antics of "Reformer" Harlan are worthy of a passing notice. According to the press reports, he is about to "open fire" upon the "gray wolves" in the interest of a "pure" city council. The particular wards on which his batteries are to open are those selected by the Municipal Voters' League and the corporations, and in each of them he will champion the cause of the "respectable" candidates who have received the endorsement of that august body.

your votes you give the political power to those who are the paid tools of your exploiters. And these tools see to it that your children receive only such instruction as will make them easy victims of the exploiters and the politician's children.

The big capitalists, the men who are interested in the corporations that fatten on your flesh and blood, don't care whether public school keeps or not. Why should they pay taxes to give instruction to the children of the people they want to exploit? Does a robber hand a loaded revolver to the man he intends to plunder?

The capitalists can afford to build their own schools. They can train their own teachers who will educate the rich men's children in such a way that they will understand how to stay on the backs of your children. They always have money to endow colleges, where they can raise men who will tell lies to you in school, on the pulpit and through the press.

They have money to burn, when they want to bribe a judge, like "Hennepfer," who will issue injunctions against you, when you strive for "Mrs. Liberty and happiness." Money plays no role with them, when they want galling guns to teach you a lesson in American liberty. They use strong arms money to pay rience with your chosen pet, Harrison, has shown you, that he does not thank YOU at all for electing him; he represents the OTHER fellows. Teachers! Realize that we are all workingmen, whether laboring with brains or with brain. Realize that your interests are identical with those of the unequal laborer. Become conscious of the fact that we all belong to the great class of exploited.

If you want to be well paid and live under conditions that will relieve your minds from the harassing cares of the daily struggle for existence; if you want to be trained to the full capacity of your wonderful profession; if you want to teach healthy, bright children in congenial and sanitary surroundings; if you want to find joy and speak joy in your daily work, then learn that you can only accomplish this by studying a line of knowledge that has been withheld from you or at best misapplied to you. Study the economic development of human society, not from the capitalist but from the people's text books. Identify yourself with the labor movement and form a trade union. Join the strongest political party in the world, the SOCIALIST PARTY, and fight shoulder to shoulder with your brother workers in all other man to ask for your votes is the present mayor, Carter Harrison, who simply tells you that he will give you two years more of the same kind of medicine he has given you for the past four years. Now, remember that you are laborers and must consider this question from our own point of view. What, then, has happened during Harrison's administration that should lead you to want some more of the same kind?

Well, there was the big building strike, when the workers of this city fought for the right to stand together as men in their unions and their federated bodies. Did Harrison come to their assistance, or did he send the police to help the bosses? The contractors who alone could secure the materials of which buildings are made, and who therefore held the power of life and death over all those who wished to work at any part of the building trade, certainly did not need assistance. They were not the ones whose votes elected Harrison. They were not the ones whose existence is necessary to the well-being of the city of Chicago.

Did the city officials come forward and say to Chicago workers, "Here, you are the ones whose votes elected us to power. This government belongs to you; take it and use it as you wish; now olized opportunities, vainly seeking a master who can grind a profit from their toil. Then the bureau of charities comes in and advocates a whipping post or imprisonment for these men who have been transformed into "deserving husbands" by the men who subscribe to the support of that same bureau of charities.

Owing to the support of Carter Harrison, then, we see as a result of but one side of his four years of administration that the resisting power of the unions has been weakened, the central body of the building trades disorganized, and fifty thousand homes disrupted. Does this sound as if the city of Chicago had been managed in the interest of the workers? Do you want two years more of the same kind?

Are the workers, then, interested in the election of Harney? They are the ones who are to divide. Whoever is mayor, they will have elected him, and since they are doing the electing, let them be careful whom they choose. Judge Harney now claims to be a friend of labor and he has been ransacking his history and outgunning his memory to find one instance where he was good to the producer of wealth. But all he can find is that once when he was selected by the bricklayers to arbitrate

Association, and we hope that the new central body will profit by that experience to guard against the distribution which must always come when interests that are essentially antagonistic are permitted to find lodgment in an organization which avowedly champions the cause of one distinct class.

Some of the contentions of the capitalist candidates on the street railway franchise are distinctly funny. Carter Harrison now comes out in the daily press with a so-called "pledge to the people." This champion of municipal ownership embodies his pledge in six distinct demands for petty reforms, the latter of which states that the "city-nine-year" franchise must be stricken out of FUTURE GRANTS and a plain statement made which will pave the way for ultimate MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP. The pledge is followed by a signed statement which reads as follows: "These are some of the things which will be secured for the people of Chicago under NEW FRAN-CHISES." The "municipal ownership" which Harrison advocates to evidently a thing to be worshiped from afar off, and those who pursue this phantasm may console themselves by remembering that "distance lends enchantment to the view."

A PARADOXICAL SITUATION.

Anthracite coal miners, it would seem, are at present in unusual luck owing to the peculiar nature of the situation as it regards their claims. Paradoxical as it may seem, yet for the present the interests of the two hostile camps of capitalist and laborer apparently are coincident. It is not to the interests of the miners to declare a strike when the suffering entailed upon them through such action is taken into consideration, and yet they are often compelled to do so.
The question of wages and recognition of their union is pressing to the front just at present, and the capitalists do not want to have anything to do with either question, but it looks as if they must, in spite of themselves. And here is where the paradox appears. At present a strike would be disastrous to many capitalist interests. There is, for instance, the great steel trust, just recently formed, which must market its stock and cannot afford to have a strike upon its hands during the operation —particularly a strike in an industry so closely connected with steel and iron production as coal mining undoubtedly is.
Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan is bringing all his influence to bear upon the operators to induce them to come to terms with their men. When Morgan has unloaded, it will be time to attend to the "demands" of the miners in the usual capitalist fashion, but until then the best policy is to carry it off with the miners' organization and spar for time.
Meanwhile the men should take advantage of the situation to get all they possibly can, and if they also understand that whatever success they may obtain is of necessity limited, and resultant only upon the temporary exigencies of their masters, they will make use of such success to prepare for the conflict, which must come in the near future with still greater intensity. If their leaders are really sincere, they in turn will not fail to teach the men who have placed confidence in them, the value of the ballot in bringing permanent success to the cause of labor.

NAKED, BUT UNARMED.

The school teachers are to be congratulated on their success in exposing the methods by which the "highly respectable" citizens attempt to shift the public burdens upon the shoulders of their weaker brethren. But it is just as well to allow a large discount upon the anticipated effectiveness of these exposures. It does not require much penetration to understand that those who have practiced lying, forgery, bribery and perjury to avoid the drain of taxation upon the wealth which they have plundered from labor are not particularly sensitive to "exposure." They know well that these exposures have been so frequent that they now merely create a momentary sensation which is beginning to be looked for periodically, as a spur to the jaded appetite of the "public" for "news." Consequently they become callous over the "exposures," and treat them as a matter of course.

In uncovering the rascality of the tax dodgers, the Teachers' Association have but exposed an effect instead of a cause. The efforts by which these gentle endeavor to retain their phantoms are but veiled compared with the gigantic robbery of labor which is the bed rock and foundation of present society, and the source from whence these gentle exposures spring. A victory, which the association may win in this matter can at best be only temporary and limited. Of course, it is stated that additional property to the amount of $100-000,000 will be placed on the tax lists as a result of their efforts, but we are still dubious, even if this is done that the teachers will benefit thereby to any considerable extent. The capitalist has not exhausted his tricks, and before he is made to disgorge, will manage to convince many of the teachers of their exact position in society to-day —that they are not amongst the abnormal, but the normal, that they are wage workers, to be bought like all other workers in the cheapest market.

If the teachers desire to take the best means of securing a just compensation for their services, let them roll up a heavy vote for John Collins, the candidate of the Socialist party for mayor. His election would do more to secure for them the object of their efforts than a hundred "exposures," which only serve to show that the capitalist hide is of unusual thickness.

LET HIM OWN GLASS KNIFE HIM.

In giving reasons why her son should be returned as alderman in the Twenty-first ward, Mrs. Potter Palmer expresses her distinct recognition of the existence of social and economic classes in this country. The young aspirant for political honors (?) steps into the arena with the following advantages:
He has a university education and has seen large cities both in Europe and America, and both advantages (if they are such) he acquired at the expense of the working class, which he now expects to elect him by their votes. This young man, so far as recorded, has never done a stroke of useful work in his life, with a doubtful exception of a period of six weeks, in which he posed as a bank employee and which position he abandoned to make a European tour and "see the large cities," as his maternal parent says. These recommendations for office are, of course, neither better nor worse than those furnished by other capitalist candidates, and even if they are to be considered an exceptional qualification for office, there is certainly nothing in them which should induce any workingman of average intelligence to vote for their possession. Palmer stands above all for the system which deprives the laborer of opportunity for the very education and travel by virtue of which Palmer bases his claim for political recognition. The working class of the Twenty-first ward have nothing to gain by returning this man to office, as he has not the slightest interest in common with them, belonging as he does to a class for whom culture and leisure are only possible through a system which robs the laborer of his product for their benefit. There is a socialist candidate for alderman in the Twenty-first ward, and the amount of votes he will receive will be a precise indication of the number of workers in that ward who are intelligent enough to understand that Palmer cannot possibly represent any interest of theirs.

THE VAIL MEETINGS.

Where the noted Socialist Writer and Speaker, Com. H. Vail, will stay in Chicago.

Comrade H. Vail, socialist candidate for governor of New Jersey, will be in Chicago and assist the local comrades during the last four days of the campaign. These four days will be crowded with the best possible socialist agitation. Five large mass meetings have been arranged and have been advertised all over the city. The first of these will be held Friday evening, March 23, at Phoenix hall, on Division street near Sedgewick. Comrade Vail will speak in English and Julius Vahl-teich, ex-member of the German reich-tag, in German.

Saturday evening Comrades Chas. H.
Vail and J. S. Wilson will speak at Aurora Hall, corner Harrison street and Milwaukee avenue. Great preparations are being made for the meeting by the members of the Seventeenth ward branch and other adjoining wards. The hall is a large one and will hold fully 1,000 people.

Sunday afternoon there will be a grand mass meeting of all socialists in Pullman at Kensington Turner hall.
Comrades Vail and Wilson will speak.
This meeting has been extremely advertised and will undoubtedly be a great success. The Pullman comrades have been very active during the campaign and are hopeful of a handsome increase in the socialist vote in their district.

The socialists of the west side have made big preparations for a grand rally Sunday evening at the Socialist Temple, 128 W. Western avenue. The speakers will be Comrades Vail and Strickland. The Socialist Temple will hold over 700 people, and it is estimated that it will be taxed to its utmost capacity Sunday evening.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

The weekly report issued by H. G.
Don & Co. states that satisfactory conditions prevail in nearly every line of trade, and at the conclusion of the report given the following in the United States as 22, as against 123 for the corresponding week of last year. The figures speak for themselves.

A bill has been introduced in the Illinois legislature by Representative D.
E. Sullivan which provides for assisting intemperate voters at the ballot box. This solicitude for intemperate undoubtedly arises from a recognition of the fact that those who need this sort of "State help" are not very likely to cast a socialist vote.

The Chicago Chronicle some time ago published a dispatch from Washington, D. C., to the effect that the trusts had entered into a "conspiracy" to elect McKinley for the third term. The "conspiracy" in question amounted to this, that it was proposed that "prosperity" should be continued for four years more, and that through this McKinley was to be re-elected. The discoveries of modern science are often totally overlooked by the "discoveries" in modern politics.

The humbug that raves against the trusts in the daily press and who systematically magnify every opposition to these overgrown combinations of capital, have been provided with another opportunity to exercise their peculiar talent in this direction. Big type headlines announce the fact that Col.
Ellwood is fighting the steel trust, and some unthinking workmen and small dry business men generally get inspired with the hope that the trust may be "downed" in the struggle. But what is Ellwood fighting for? His suit is simply the result of dissimulation with his share of the swag, though the head lines used by the anti-trust press are deliberately calculated to give a different impression.

The case of Russia, that apostle of peace whom steel has canonized, has just given an illustration of his humanity by sending mounted Cossacks to trample down a crowd of students and working people who were looking for better material conditions of life.
Yet, if some relatives of the victims, maddened by frenzy, were to attempt the life of this royal murderer of the people, the capitalist press would sloop over at once with fulsome eulogies of the endangered tyrant.

Some of the labor news from Europe is particularly instructive to members of trade unions here in showing them the necessity of keeping capitalist politics outside of their organizations. The dockers of Marseilles have been on strike for some time, and have received assistance and support directly from the city authorities. This state of affairs is not due to politicians of the type we are familiar with here. The city authorities of Marseilles were placed in office by the workmen of Marseilles.
The workmen of that city voted for their own candidates, men of their own class, who were placed there to look after the interests of the workers, and they are doing it. They will win something.
Why? Because the dockers of Marseilles are as good union men as the police are when working on the docks.
They would no more permit capitalists to represent them in the city council of Marseilles than they would permit non-union men to usurp their places at work. You can elect the same sort of mayor in this city by getting together and voting for John Collins.

According to the editor of the Manchester (England) Guardian, the most alarming feature of the Boer war is that it is becoming a struggle between the proletariat and the property-owning classes. The worst hint of the class struggle to sufficient to send a shiver down the spine of the capitalist, and its appearance in the Transvaal is not conducive to the peaceful "development" of that country in the manner intended by those in whose interests it was "annexed." But, having once made its appearance there, it is going to stay just as it has in every other country on earth.

A rapid transit tunnel, now under construction for the city of New York, will, it is said, net the contractor over $3,000,000 profit for the first year's work, and a total of $10,000,000 when completed. Yet it is safe to assert that if the workmen employed upon this tunnel were to strike for a few cents daily additional pay, this contractor would appeal for aid to the city against his workmen, and would get it immediately. The "freedom of contract," by which one individual can secure $3,000-000 per annum on work done by men who barely receive a subsistence wage for their efforts, is an altogether superior article to the "freedom of contract" upon which wage labor is based.

The Real "Smoke Nuisance."

At a meeting of the judiciary committee last week in this city a "president citizen" blamed the cause of the poor in eloquent language. Amongst the many impositions of the "well-to-do" upon their poor brethren he mentioned the smoke nuisance as the most dis-treating. The wealthy, he declared, could leave the city when the smoke became intolerable, but the poor had to stay right where they were in the thick of it. Something should be done instantly to suppress the smoke nuisance, etc., etc. The speech ended, as it began, in smoke.

THE "UNHOLY ALLIANCE."

Palmer and Pullman to John Collins for the Preservation of the Capitalist System.

The W. C. T. U. of Cook county have "Resolved that the pastors of Chicago be and are hereby invited to preach a sermon before the spring election on the relation of Christian Citizenship to the present conditions in Chicago."

I am not a pastor, and this Temple is not a church, but we are interested in this resolution to this extent. It reveals a tendency in the present evolution of society. Here is the way in which the question of citizenship appeals to one Chicago pastor: "The time is approaching when levelheaded religious people will have to make a bargain with the politician to attend the caucus and the politician will have to promise to attend church, in sheer self-defense of what each holds dear but hitherto have insane kept separate."

What is it that each holds dear?
What is the citizenship on which "both" politicians and "good" religious people agree?

They agree that the present efforts of society shall be sufficiently "reformed" that it may not collapse. And the politicians, not being of sufficient reputation in the roll of reformers are appealing to the clergy to assist in the job.

With alacrity the dear ministers come to the rescue. According to the papers, in this very ward last week a mass meeting was addressed by two pastors, who are preaching very near us this morning in the republican name-line for alderman of this ward because he is a temperance man, forgetting that the more sober and capable the man in old-fashioned politics, the more harm he can do.

In countries where the church is avowedly a part of the political and governmental machinery, whatever the clergy say is taken as we take the speech of a politician, with a grain of salt. In this country we are laboring under the tradition that our clergy are free and therefore they figure promi-nently as makers of public opinion. Behold the ministers are sought, earnestly sought, to cleanse the Augean political stables.

The preachers respond for this reason: They profit by the existing order of things. Business has corrupted politics, and now the religious people propose to unify politics with more BUSI-NESS (business methods, business men); not because corruption could be secured by more corruption, but because business must be protected, or ministers will go out of business.

I have said before that preachers were helpless victims in society, so they are. But in their helplessness they ought to protest. To be made the spokesmen to preserve the system which damns the poor for whom their master class is to become the chief conspirators of current history.

It used to be said that it was folly to bring religion into politics, but the politician now brings his cause to the house of religion as his last hope and fortress.
And behold, the preachers are indowing candidates and saving the old political backs from destruction.

No wonder we have "holiness conventions." Some day the people will arise in a holy protest and proclaim their birthright. Some time they will reject the vinegar of charity and demand the bread of justice.

In that day the preachers who are now indowing the old worn-out politics will repent by catching the vision of a citizenship which makes possible the free lives of free men, in a co-operative society.

WOMANHOOD AWAKENS.

Belgian Federation of Socialist Women Make Urgent Appeal for the Moment.

The Socialist party, believing that all human beings without distinction of sex, have a right to the greatest amount of happiness, has included in its programme the economic, civil and political emancipation of women, and we see to-day the best minds of all countries supporting the demands of woman.
It is well to recognize that the women's movement is not a struggle of the sexes, but before all it is one of the phases of the social evolution most worthy of attention and most affecting it. The interest of the society of to-morrow requires that woman, along with man, should be an independent being, capable of thought, of wishes, and of action.

But if socialism demands for her just conditions of labor, the abolition of the laws that put her out side of the common law, civil equality and the right to vote, woman has in return a duty toward socialism. Here as everywhere right and duty are correlative.

A great many women understand this already: they are inspired by socialist principles. They have organized themselves into professional unions, or have united with the mixed unions of laborers. They have entered the socialist co-operatives. The organization of Belgium consists of twenty groups of women and mixed groups affiliated with the Parti Ouvrier. At Ghent the unions of women laborers have attained a rapid development; in the greater part of the other industrial localities the union movement grows among them from day to day. These are commendable efforts and examples to be imitated. Certainly this is a great deal accomplished already, but it is not yet enough.

It is necessary that in the near future all the professions of women should have their unions. It is necessary, moreover, that women should increase their influence.

of woman, the laborer's family should become the nucleus of the society which we desire: that the wife associate herself with the laborer, the occupation of her husband, that in the hour of pain and struggle she may aid him with all her strength. It is necessary that the wife should be capable of training up her children in such a manner that they may become useful to themselves and to others in life. Remember, the men of to-morrow will be what their mothers make them.

Therefore, we must occupy ourselves not only with all that which helps to change their economic condition as laborers, but, further, with all that which helps them to accomplish their task as wives, mothers and citizens.

Everywhere in our country the awakening has come, but in order to carry the work undertaken to a favorable conclusion, we must make our present appeal to all the desires, all the capacities, all the energies.

To our fellow workers we say: You who have always suffered, you know better than anyone else what we have to hope for from our emancipation, because you know the work without leisure, the insufficient wages, the unhealthy house, the bread too dear.
Unite yourselves, for it is only by association that we can change the conditions of life.

To our more favored sisters who have had the privilege of education we say:
You have contracted a debt to the collectivity, because all privileges ought to be repayed. Come then into our meetings, bring the best eloquence and the brightest intellect to all those among us who have known up to this time only the labor of the shop and the dreariness of the garret.

To our comrades of the Parti Ouvrier we say: Bring to us your experience and your support, because our woman's cause is throughout the cause of the proletariat.

Of our many friends who met or were represented in the woman's congress at Ghent, January 20th, we ask the union of their efforts that we may soon realize, according to the resolution of the congress, the national federation of woman socialists.

The federation will concentrate, develop and extend all the organizations:
Unions, workers groups for propaganda, that in the party have undertaken the task of the economic and social emancipation of woman.

Our friend Beerblock wrote to me recently on this subject: "It is time to break with the prejudice that has believed in the incompetency and inferiority of women. It must be proven that woman as well as man can conduct with energy and wisdom the struggle for 'justice and right.'"

The Belgian Federation of Socialist Women will help to destroy this prejudice and to establish this proof.

Convict System in Georgia Permits the Escape of the "Business Man"
From Punishment.

The Macon, (Ga.), Telegraph states that the convict system of Georgia is rotten from center to circumference and gives the following incident as an illustration:

Some months ago a Bryan county bailliff arrested a negro who was employed at a turpentine still in the county, charged with some trivial offense. The owner of the still was not present when the arrest was made, but soon learned of what had occurred, and arming himself with a shot gun, persuaded the bailliff and his prisoner. He overtook the bailliff in the road and attacked the officer, beating him over the head with the gun and taking the negro away from him. The man then carried the negro back to the still and put him to work as usual. Later this man, who is quite wealthy, and who conducts a large business in his line, was arrested charged with interfering with an officer

AS A BRICKLAYER SEES IT.

Ancient and Modern Building Contrasted. Art of Masonry Degraded by Capitalism. The Contract System and Its Effects. "Rushing" the Bricklayer. Profits Alone Considered Makes Good work Impossible. The Recent Lockout. Limitation of a Day's work. The Class Struggle. What is to Be Done?

Few people fully realize (and least of all the bricklayers) the innumerable benefits the exponents of this craft confer upon the public. The mason is the forerunner of civilization. If we desire to know the character, habits, and, in brief, the civilization attained by the nations of antiquity, we study their architecture. Anyone who has studied ancient architecture is astonished at the degree of precision which is exhibited. All right angles are absolutely true, and the spacing between the columns is perfectly exact; and the refinement, as well as the accuracy, which resembles the precision, with which scientific instruments are adjusted, is in strong contrast to the rough and ready "get-his-story-high-boys" style of the modern builder. The magnificent and colossal structures of antiquity, the marvelous skill exhibited by the workmen the enduring structures they built, proves indisputably that quality, not quantity, was required. The word "rush" or its equivalent was unknown. Men took an interest in their work, their labor represented the highest development of the ancient art of masonry. But economic conditions have changed. Men no longer have the opportunity to embody in their work the aims of their skill.

The public, working in the groove of a system as absurd as it is vicious, now permit the construction of their edifices to be auctioned, and we have the spectacle of a Contractor's Association who bid for these jobs and sublet them, by the hour, to the building trades, in such a manner as to insure a gross profit to themselves. Now, this is the point I wish to bring forward. We are living under an industrial system based on exploitation or profit, and consequently masonry, as well as other occupations, is debased. It has also created a class of men whose interests are hostile to the workers, and who perform no function to add to the wealth of the community, and who are in fact but a part of the parasitical class.

This contract system puts the contractor in possession of the "means of life," to which the bricklayers must have access or starve. Now this possession makes him virtually our master. We have nothing but our labor power, and if we wish to stay on this planet, we must sell ourselves to him.

We are thus forced into involuntary servitude, or voluntary starvation. That's logical, for if I own the tool which you must use to earn your bread, I own you; for without my permission to use that tool you cannot live.

Now, the interest of the contractor is diametrically opposed to the welfare of his wage-slaves. Profit, with a capital "P" is the subject of his thought by day, and his dreams by night. Good mechanical work and good profits cannot be reconciled. The bricklayer is interested in surrounding his trade with such conditions as will be conducive to the highest development of the craft. He wants shorter hours of labor, time and opportunity to do good and "enduring work," and the enactment and enforcement of laws which will enable him to achieve his object and insure him against loss of life or limb while engaged in the construction of the building. If these conditions were to obtain, it would result in a higher grade of work, flimsy structures and the frightful mortality from the collapse of these buildings would become ancient history. The terrible massacre of workmen at the Coliseum would not have occurred had the men not been driven and bulldozed in such a manner as to make a southern slave driver blush for shame, and the collapse of the Windsor hotel, with its appalling loss of life might have been averted if the bricklayers had been given more time to do their work.

But right here, with these desirable conditions of labor, comes the ever-present question of profits, which transcends in importance every other consideration. Profits which bear an inverse ratio to the quality of work produced. While the elimination of the many evils to which bricklayers are subject, is a "consummation devoutly to be wished," yet it can never occur while the contract and profit system are in existence. Briefly stated, the contractors want "long hours and short wages," and the men "short hours and long wages."

Bricklayers are very proud of boasting of the absence of machinery to compete with them. But if these short-sighted individuals were but to reflect for a few moments on the evolution of industry, they would see economic forces operating to curtail the market for their labor, with the same efficiency that the machine now operates to displace labor in other occupations. The natural development of industry as exemplified in the trust renders unnecessary the thousands of bricklayers who were essential when industry was disorganized. It is patent to any thinker that one hundred small factories, as much as 1,000 small factories, with considerably less floor space, and requiring but a fraction of the labor necessary to build and equip 1,000 small factories. Therefore, the bricklayers, in common with other laborers, are displaced by the operation of the trust.

Steel construction has also operated to curtail brickwork. The modern sky "scraper," by its economic function to society, has displaced the little business block, and the modern apartment house (in which people are packed like chickens in a poultry pen) has taken the place of the cottage. These modern economic forces have caused "expansion" in the ranks of the unemployed and "anti-expansion" in their stomachs. Every evolution of industry, every turn of the wheel of progress, causes a corresponding diminution of the labor market, and renders more acute the already keen competition for a day's work existing among the bricklayers.

The admitted purpose of the recent lockout was to disrupt the Building Trades Council, which, by its scope and solidarity, was becoming a power in restraining the tyranny of the contractors.

During this struggle, the class line was clearly drawn. Capitalism asserted itself in such a manner as to dispel any illusion concerning the alleged brotherhood of capital and labor, and also clearly outlined the duty of the executive and judicial authorities of this city.

The Contractors Association in its infamy begged the labor unions to assist them to strengthen their organization, with the plea that competition among the bosses was so keen that reputable contractors were unable to abide by the union rules and compete with irresponsible contractors, who were hiring bricklayers at less than union wages. The unions, with that brand of sanity peculiar to labor unions, never deluded for the fundamental cause of their members working for less than union wages, but listened with favor to the plea of the bosses and made a whip which scourged them unmercifully afterwards.

This association, now feeling secure, threw off its mask of friendship and fell upon the tollers like wolves on a flock of sheep. They, while maintaining the right to a central organization with power to lessen competition among themselves, denied the right of the laborers to a central body, with power to lessen competition among its members by limiting the day's work.

The opposing forces formed themselves for battle. One hundred and fifty contractors, with their allies, the press and mayor, on one side, and 100,000 laborers on the other. Just before hostilities began, the unions gave notice that they as a body would make all the necessary arrangements to construct all buildings, and they argued that the contractors, not being a producing factor in the construction of a building, might with profit to every one be dispensed with. They reckoned without their host, however, and when they started to prove their much-vaunted proposition, met with a great surprise.

They found owners, architects, real estate men, material men, and all those engaged in riding on the back of labor, united in one solid phalanx. The capitalists all over the country donated money to help disrupt the unions, and the manner in which all those who preyed on labor, recognized their interests as a class, it must have been an eye-opener to the tollers, whose class consciousness was conspicuous by its entire absence.

The union men did not realize their political and economic disadvantage, and proudly imagined that by walking the streets of this city with an aching void in their stomach and destitution at home they could bring their wealthy contractors to terms. It took four months of starvation to prove how futile were their efforts, while the contractors, with their allies, were their political and economic masters.

Mayor Harrison was at first inclined to cater to the union vote, but was quickly brought to a sense of his duty by a delegation of real estate men and contractors, and forced to issue an order to arrest and punish to the full extent of the law any union man found anywhere near the affected jobs. As a further proof that the political powers of a city are used to further the interests of the capitalist class they forced Mayor Harrison to suspend operations on all public school houses and all public work affected by the lockout, and this with an utter disregard for the welfare of the public. The council appropriated $2,000,000 for the erection of new school houses, and notwithstanding the urgent need of the school houses, and totally ignoring the demands of thousands of workingmen, who, though they paid for school accommodations, were with an aching heart forced to see their children grow up ignorant owing to the suspension of the school system.

The commendable desire of the unions to limit the day's work was a thorn in the side of the contractors, and was the object of their special vituperation. That adjunct of capitalism, the press, printed columns of matter denouncing as criminal any action of the unions, that would in any way curtail the time-honored wholesale exploitation of labor. Their columns were filled with letters from "labor skinner," eulogizing the gospel of "hard work," and a peculiar fact apparent was that all this preaching came from men who did no work at all, but who grew wealthy from the legal robbery of the tollers.

The contractors are veritable slave drivers, recognizing no standard for a day's work, but continually urging their slaves to greater exertion, and when a workman, from sheer exhaustion, slackens his pace, he is immediately discharged and his place filled from the ranks of the unemployed, usually found waiting on the job. It logically follows that the economic conditions of the tollers determine the amount of bulldozing they will be subjected to.

A few years ago, before the development of industry curtailed the market, 1,500 brick was considered a good day's work. Now a man who has not strength to lay from 2,000 to 3,000 brick cannot hold his job with many contractors. The new stock yards of this city demanded and received 3,000 bricks per day from each bricklayer. It will be readily seen that the effect of unmercifully driving men to their utmost physical limit has made human wrecks of men comparatively young. One of the most pathetic scenes in a labor organization is the spectacle of a man 50 or 60 years of age, confessing his inability to secure or hold his job and demand union wages, and begging the union to grant him an "exempt card," that he may hire himself to contractors for whatever he can get.

This is one of the social ulcers of the present damnable, rotten wage system. The slave who gave the best years of his life to his master, was cared for in old age, but the "free bricklayer," after wrecking his health, to make parasites wealthy, is thrown in the gutter, an outcast, when his gray hair appears. And yet, according to the press, any organization that would limit the day's work so as to employ all under conditions that would not make them prematurely old, is classed as "degenerate."

Why should not your day's work be limited? When you buy goods they are limited. When the contractor buys lumber, brick, or anything else, it has a known value, a certain fixed relation to the currency.

The only commodity that has no known value, that has no fixed relation to the currency, is labor. There is no limit to the ruthless exploitation of the tollers save the limit of his strength and endurance.

The class who own the "means of life" are consistent when they deny you the right to limit the day's work, because any curtailment of the day's work would result in a corresponding diminution of their profits. The evils from which we workmen suffer cannot be attributed to individuals, but to the economic system. Strikes, lockouts and other labor disturbances are but the manifestations of a CLASS STRUGGLE which is raging between the wage slave and his master. It is absurd to talk of arbitration as a means of abolishing strikes while the cause remains. The struggle will end only with the abolition of the capitalist class or the entire subjugation of the tollers.

Now, while we cannot change the system until the tollers, in united intelligent action, by means of the ballot, capture the government of the country, still we can take a step in the right direction by electing a socialist mayor in Chicago. It is apparent to one who has brains enough to give him a headache once in a while, that no party can serve in the interest of "all the people" while there are two classes in society; they must betray one or the other. Yet Haney and Harrison propose to do this impossible feat.

The records of both men show whose interests they represent. During the lockout Harrison arrested you, and Haney jailed you, and was ever ready with an injunction or a "John Doe" warrant to serve on you.

Now, JOHN COLLINS, the Socialist party candidate for mayor, stands for the workmen. He doesn't propose to work in the interest of "all the people." Ultimately he will (when classes are abolished), but at present he is committed to the interests of the wage-slaves.

Now, how can John Collins give our building trades immediate relief? He can use the power vested in him to do away with the contract system in public works, and have all work done in compliance with rules of labor unions; and the election of a socialist mayor will arouse the dormant intellect of the tollers to a sense of their folly in permitting themselves to be the dupes of the old political parties, who are but the twin expressions of capitalism. In their search for the truth they will perceive the absurdity of these so-called issues, and, having by the election of a socialist mayor, the cause of their slavery, they will proceed to abolish it and inaugurate a new order, in which the opportunity to acquire the necessities of life will be as free and abundant as the air and sunlight.

The "full stomach," or "full dinner pail," instead of being the highest aspirations of men, will become but a necessary condition of life.

Learn socialism! Talk socialism! Vote socialism! Remember you have nothing to lose but your misery. You have a world, with all its possibilities of happiness to gain, and, remembering this, cast your vote for the ONLY WORKINGMEN'S PARTY in the coming election, the SOCIALIST PARTY, whose ticket is headed by a workman, JOHN COLLINS, the workmen's candidate for Mayor of Chicago.

A BRICKLAYER.

LABOR ITEMS

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Exchange, Throughout the United States.

Total dividends declared in New York last of March amounted to $75,405,410. This nice little sum went to—trust magnates, not workmen.

Instrument manufacturers are contemplating the formation of a trust. The music of the future will be performed in the trust band wagon.

The big railroad syndicate controlled by Morgan and Harriman is reaching out its tentacles in the direction of the Chicago Great Western Railroad.

A cotton-picking machine, which is said to be a success and which will gather eight bales of cotton per day, regardless of the number of bolls, has been patented by a south Texas—Coming Nation.

Steel manufacturers of Sheffield, England, are about to build a manufactory in the United States for the purpose of "fighting the steel trust," which is another way of saying that they want to get into it and help skin the American wage slave.

Labor unions of Newcastle, Pa., oppose the acceptance of Carnegie's gift of a library to that town, stating that as he robbed the producers all his life, it is an insult to hand back a moiety of the plunder in the name of charity. The Newcastle boys are all right.

The democratic legislature of Missouri has passed an act that deprives the Social Democratic party of using the name Democrat in Missouri. They must be getting afraid, but plain "Socialists" will do just as well. So go ahead, boys, and scare them some more.—Oklahoma Socialist.

Painters who left Chicago in the hope of obtaining work at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo have been compelled to return empty-handed. The rules of the exposition state that only painters who are permanent residents of Buffalo are to be employed on the grounds.

How does it come that any of Carnegie's employers are in need of a dime from that five million dollar charity? If they received all they earned, they wouldn't need it—if they did not receive all they earned, then Andrew is returning only a part of their plundered wages.—Baldwin Exponent.

Socialists of Ann Arbor, Mich., have nominated a full city ticket for the municipal election. Professor Frederick Partridge receiving the nomination for mayor and our energetic comrade D. J. Jeannerette for city clerk. The cause of socialism has been making remarkable progress in Ann Arbor for the last year, showing that a handful of determined socialists can make their presence felt in any community in a short space of time.

Over 100 Italian socialists who formerly affiliated with the De Leon party have decided and joined the S. D. P. They will start a paper called "The Avanti" in New York. For further information write F. M. O'Connor, 182 W. 3rd street, New York. Dandelion has kicked out several more former dues payers for "treason" or something. He has quit issuing charters long ago, and pretty soon only Dan and his whiskers will be left. He's a funny old rooster.

The cowardly democrats of Missouri, fearing the growth of the S. D. P., have enacted a law in the legislature to prohibit any party from using part of some other political name. The S. D. P. will now probably adopt the name of Socialist party and continue the good work. Owing to the activity of the S. D. P. in Washington the effort to disfranchise minority parties in that state was defeated in the legislature by a majority of one vote. The plutocratic hieblings are as active as slave-traders of old—Cleveland Citizen.

Look on the extreme right of your ballot for the ticket of THE SOCIALIST PARTY. JOHN COLLINS for Mayor. Make your X at the head of that column.

Chicago Federation of Labor very properly turned down an attempt to induct one of the capitalist candidates for mayor and condemned the candidacy of both as enemies of organized labor. This policy of keeping capitalist politics out of labor organizations will, if persisted in, be found profitable in the long run.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

The organizer of the Twenty-eighth ward is R. Robbins, 125 W. Washington ave. The La Salle Political and Educational Club held an interesting agitation meeting at their headquarters, Labor Lyceum, 436 S. Halsted street. There was a large crowd present who listened to the eloquent address by Comrade J. B. Smiley.

There was a large meeting last Sunday afternoon at Kensington Turner hall in Pullman. This large hall was comfortably filled with an audience whose enthusiasm was marked. The speakers were Comrades John Collins, F. Sloman and T. J. Morgan.

At the meeting arranged by the Twenty-eighth ward branch last Sunday afternoon at 1233 Lincoln avenue, Comrade C. Caplan filled the place of Comrade Simons as speaker. Comrade A. Olson also made a short address. There was a good crowd present and the addresses made a good impression.

On April 4 Mrs. A. M. Simons will speak on the subject, "What Can Women Do for Socialism?" at the Socialist Temple, 123 Western avenue, at 8 p. m. Everybody welcome. All seats free. These lectures will be continued every Thursday, and on the 11th of April Miss Mary Collins will give an address on "The Disfranchisement of Women."

Four new members were admitted to the roll of Seventeenth ward branch at a meeting last Sunday afternoon at Aurora hall, corner Huron street and Milwaukee avenue. The hall was comfortably filled. The address of Comrade Klenon on the issues of the campaign was well received. Comrade John Collins will speak at Aurora hall next Sunday afternoon at 8 o'clock.

Comrade F. W. Knox gave an address before the Glen Ely local on March 18, and Comrade Evans is to speak there on April 2, while Comrade Charles H. Vail is to visit the Glen Ely local on March 22. More than enough names have been secured to the nomination papers, and local Glen Ely ventures to claim that it will poll ten per cent or more of the total vote in the village.

A large crowd assembled at the headquarters of the Fifteenth ward branch, 315 W. North avenue, last Sunday afternoon to listen to addresses by Comrades Knox and Stangland. The audience was an enthusiastic one and the addresses were well received. After the speaking was over there was an interesting discussion participated in by the audience. Three new members were added to the roll of the branch.

Last Saturday evening Comrade John Collins addressed a meeting of Progressive Lodge 126 A. of Machinists at Hall 611 Masonic Temple. His subject was, "Which Candidate Should the Union Vote For?" After the address a collection was taken up for the benefit of the Socialist Party campaign fund, the sum of $2.97 being realized. The party hereby acknowledges the receipt of same and expresses its obligations to the lodge members.

The candidate of the Socialist party for mayor, Comrade John Collins, addressed a meeting of the Progressive Lodge 126 A. of Machinists at Hall 611 Masonic Temple. His subject was, "Which Candidate Should the Union Vote For?" After the address a collection was taken up for the benefit of the campaign fund, $4.00 being realized. The Socialist party hereby renders its thanks to the members of Reliable Lodge.

The debate between Comrade Simons and A. G. Specht, which was advertised for last Sunday afternoon at 315 Clyburn avenue, did not take place for the very conclusive reason that Mr. Specht failed to show up. This is not the first time that an old party politician has agreed to appear in debate with a socialist and backed out at the crucial moment. However, the large audience which had assembled to hear the debate, were well repaid for their disappointment by an eloquent address by Comrade Simons.

Last Sunday's meeting of the Twenty-eighth ward branch was one of the most successful ever held in Educational Hall. The entertainment provided was of the highest class and attracted an audience that filled the building to its utmost capacity, fully 400 being present. A plentiful lunch was provided for all comers, and a musical and literary programme of unusual excellence followed, which was appreciated thoroughly by those present. Amongst the many features of this part of the programme the singing of the Swedish Socialist Quartette was especially worthy of mention, while the rendering of "Il Trovatore" by Miss Edwina Larsen and a recitation by Julius Mewer drew unstinted plaudits from the audience. An eloquent address, as given by Miss Mary Collins, and the branch added 16 new members to its list as a result of its painstaking efforts to spread the light of socialism in their locality. And in this success the women of the branch have taken their full share, and the energy and efforts of Mrs. Adam Harvey and Miss Inga Johnson have contributed in no slight degree to the growing importance and strength of the Twenty-eighth ward branch.

THE FARM COMRADE.

We seldom read the daily press without becoming more or less in doubt regarding facts. And yet we blindly read about the lost commune, and scarcely doubt the rabble's mendacious acts.

Could we but know the author's name, from whence his information came, and learn his early training; The class he represents, and why He'll tell the truth, and then dry The facts, without explaining;

We'd understand, if he offends The class on whom his breed depends, He'd lose his job, and pay, Unpleasant facts must be suppressed, Or else in gilded colors dressed To take the curse away.

That common people, read and learn, That workmen will we teach and burn, The home of king or saint; Will murder, ruin, kill, annoy, Debauch and riot fight, destroy, Will free from law's restraint.

But common people, we confess, Who read and trust the daily press, Are dull of comprehension; For editors respect the strong. The wealthy class can do no wrong. Which they will care to mention.

Historians should note the chest, And they the same old tale repeat. And priests, "death lofty steeples; All lay the blame, the guilt, the shame, The fearful flood of crime and blood, On the poor people, and the poor."

Five weeks of slavery on bread and greed, A very bad on earth we read.

From center out to border; But France redeemed this day of sin, When "loyal" troops marched bravely in, Restoring "law and order."

But, many foreigners were there, Unbiased, honest, just and fair; Unbought, and not for sale; Old men, the middle aged, and youth, Who dare assert and tell the truth; They tell another tale.

They dare proclaim with voice and pen, A government of workmen, Which rank and wealth deplore; Its justice to the heart appeals; 'Twas free from all official steals, A thing unknown before.

Who dares to say the wealth untold, In bankers' vaults—the hoarded gold, They could not take away; No other government on earth, Though ruled by men of "noble" birth, Would leave it there a day.

Five weeks, while the Commune held sway, No crime was known, but bright as day The sun of justice shone. Brave men and women, side by side, Fought for its maintenance and died Unhonored and unknown.

But, whisper low, in accents hushed: 'Twas not till this Commune was crushed, The flood of death began. 'Twas not the work of men who fight For freedom, harmony and right, The common working man.

Ah, and "Twas men who fight for pay; Who ask no questions, but obey The order of their chief. 'Twas men long trained with scindish skill, For government to burn and kill, Who wrought this shame and grief.

The soldiers did their "duty" well; And made of earth the darkest hell, Who hid the do to-day. And yet, professors, priests and press, Still hide the truth—can they do less And hold their place and pay?

Yet in this lost Commune we see The signs of better things to be, The soldiers gain their own, For war and murder then will cease, And flags be furled in endless peace, And greed be overthrown.

And though at first the world was Who shall subdue the storm they raised, Or who destroy the heaven, Until it permeates the earth, Remove the stain from hell and birth, And make of earth a heaven.

J. E. NASH.

Comrades are requested to notice that the ticket of the SOCIALIST PARTY occupies the LAST COLUMN on the ballot.

Fell on the Fighting Line.

Socialist comrades throughout the city will be grieved and surprised to learn of the sudden death of one of our best and most faithful workers for socialism in Chicago, Erik J. Pihlaja, organizer for the Sixth ward. Comrade Pihlaja was a man of magnificent physique, and to all outward appearances was in perfect health, yet on last Sunday morning at 8 o'clock he died almost instantly as he afterwards discovered from heart disease. Those who were acquainted with our departed comrade can best judge of the loss which the party has sustained by his death. Cheerful, vigorous and untiring in the propaganda of socialism, Comrade Pihlaja was appreciated and respected by every member of the Socialist party who knew him. The executive committee of the party having been notified of his decease, passed the following resolution of condolence and sympathy with his widow and directed that the same appear in the columns of The Workers' Call:

"Whereas, The hand of death has removed our Comrade Erik J. Pihlaja from our midst, and

"Whereas, we recognize his long and faithful services to the cause of socialism, which we held in common with him, therefore be it

"Resolved, That the committee hereby expresses its heartfelt sympathy and condolence with the widow of our departed comrade in the affliction that has befallen her, and further considers that the highest tribute they can pay to his memory is best expressed through still more vigorous efforts on their part to bring nearer to its realization the cause to which our comrade devoted his life's work."

The body was interred in Oakwood cemetery on Tuesday, March 24, many old comrades being present at the funeral. Before the deceased was borne to his last resting place, Comrade Walter Thomas Mills delivered an impressive and eloquent address appropriate to the occasion, and a valiant comrade who had fought long and valiantly for socialism passed away forever from the field on which he had well and nobly played his part.

Couldn't Hold Him.

Comrade Walter A. Allen of Palmer, Mass., writes to inform the Chicago comrades that he is once more at liberty, having been released upon a writ of habeas corpus after an incarceration of thirty days. It may be remembered that Comrade Allen was recently sentenced to one year's imprisonment for circulating a leaflet which attacked the church and schools in a manner that the upholders of those institutions didn't like, although it was admitted by the court that the production was neither blasphemous nor obscene. It was said to be "prejudicial to the morals of the young," and its consequences it was found that no penalty could be enforced. Comrade Allen marvelously told in vigorous language of evils which "good men" unmercifully condemn in selected phrases, and, judging from his letter, he will still continue to provide an uncomfortable situation for those who would like to see him jailed in their efforts to close his mouth for twelve months.

An army officer has just brought home an overcoat belonging to the emperor of China, which he freed from a burning palace in Peking. The "world of graft" is evidently not contented to the North American continent.

Some poet has composed a campaign dirty on "The Ancient Brown Palace That Our Caesar Never Ate." The writer is evidently ignorant of the fact that the "palace" mentioned can't eat their cake. They talk through them instead.

Socialist Pointers

If you are a workman, why not vote the ticket of your class?

Harrison or Haney? How happy the traction companies can be with either!

Be good to yourself by voting the ticket of the SOCIALIST PARTY, JOHN COLLINS for Mayor.

The "blue laws" bogey was especially constructed for the intimidation of green workmen in this campaign.

The workmen have a golden opportunity this spring of showing that they know that their votes are valuable.

The slaughter of workmen in Russia by the Cossacks proves that capitalist "civilization" is everywhere the same.

That awful stiffness is caused by Bryan's efforts to hold his breath while reading Comrade Wajshire's challenge to debate.

In the near future every reputable corporation will have its own special pack of "gray wolves" as a matter of business.

The Municipal Voters' League evidently do not consider Honore Palmer a "gray wolf," even if he is running with the pack.

The party who says he doesn't believe in revolution, but pins his faith upon evolution, only exposes his ignorance of both terms.

In voting for the "best man," don't overlook yourself and your distinct class interests. Vote for socialism and you can make no mistake.

During the past week the red flag has been hoisted both in France and Russia. Some day we will hear the news that it has gone up to stay.

The law is but the will of the dominant class made into a rule for all. This may cast some light upon the futility of so-called labor legislation.

After the election is over the republican and democratic campaigns will close, but the socialists will keep on doing business at the old stand.

Harrison and Haney may be "friends of labor" all right, but they are not friends of the working class.

"The man who owns the machine" better than Bobby Burke and Billy Lorimer.

On Political Stage

Marion, though sorely disgruntled over the result of the nomination, is prevented by a pledge from repeating his performance of four years ago, and as he has no intention of retiring from the political field, he takes this opportunity of making his peace with the capitalist class, and particularly corporations, by pushing the fight for a "clean" council. This champion of the "people" starts his speeches by defining his position, and he is careful always to state that he is not opposed to corporations or in any way antagonistic to its interests, that all he wants is to secure the election of aldermen who, when the franchisees are renewed, will see that the city gets a "just" compensation for its franchisees.

It is only necessary to refer to the daily capitalist press to procure sufficient evidence of the farcical nature of the thing called capitalist politics, so far as it concerns the wage working class. The materials from which the above notes were taken were supplied throughout by the capitalist journals of this city during the last week. It represents nothing but trickery, evasion, hypocrisy and treachery upon the part of the political actors who appear in it, and the only difference between them is of degree, not of kind. And yet, from out of this mass of duplicity, one reality appears which is common to all, viz. the interests of the class who plunder, degrade and deceive the workers. Not one word that they speak or write, not one action that they perform, can in any manner whatever tend to better the material conditions of those upon whose votes they depend for office, and this is so plainly evident to any one who will use his brains to think the matter over, that one is at a loss to decide which is the most wonderful—the colossal assurance of the tools of capitalism, or the unspeakable stupidity of the workmen, who can still be deceived by them.

No apology, therefore, is needed in presenting the claims of a political organization whose very existence is rooted in bringing the claims of the SOCIALIST PARTY to the attention of the wage workers of Chicago and urging a perusal of its platform, upon their notice, we feel certain no comparison is possible between its concise and distinct statements and the shuffling, equivocating and evasive programmes of the capitalist parties—a contrast insisted in at once established. And the same contrast exists between the statements of those who publicly advocate the principles of the SOCIALIST PARTY and those who speak for capitalism. A vote for the latter is worse than thrown away, whilst a ballot cast for the SOCIALIST PARTY, whose candidates for mayor is JOHN COLLINS, is not only a step towards economic freedom, but a protest against being made to play a part in a useless, disgusting and degrading farce enacted for the sole benefit of that class which robs the laborer of the fruit of his toil.

How Will You Vote?

He found their case so strong that he was compelled to decide in their favor. He does not claim anything more than that in a society where laws and customs are fixed by employers he found that this particular body of masters were demanding more of their wage slaves than the whole class of masters thought was desirable to demand. But he forgets to say anything of the countless times when as a judge he has enforced laws made in the interest of the capitalist class against the workers who had been deceived into electing their exploiters into power. He does not tell you of the times when he issued injunctions to fill any loop hole for labor that capitalist legislators might have left in the law. For that is all an injunction is. It is simply a law made on the spot to cover a special case. And as all law is made by the interest of capital, when an injunction is issued it simply means that a special case has been found, which has not been covered, in spite of the fact that the legislature have for generations been enacting general laws for the protection of property against the demands of men. Judge Haney found such a case at Fraser & Chalmers, where the men were on strike. The men had violated no existing law. Although the employers had made thousands of laws to secure the subservience of labor they could find none that would apply to this particular case and so Judge Haney was called upon to announce a new law from the bench which could be enforced without an appeal to a jury. He did this and this fact is an eloquent testimonial as to what he would do if mayor. Whenever an opportunity came for him to grant any special favor to concentrated wealth against the workers of Chicago, we may be sure that he would use all the energy at his disposal in assisting his own class—the employers. Surely when workmen are seeking for some one to carry out their wishes in the majority chair, they can find nothing to interest them in men of the Judge Haney stamp.

What kind of a man do the laborers want? In the first place he should be a union man, a man familiar with the difficulties and struggles of labor in all fields. He should be a man who understands that all wealth being a product of human toil, either of hand or the brain, it can belong only to the toilers. He should be a man who thoroughly realizes that the present government is in the hands of the capitalist class and that the fundamental reason for his election is to change that fact and make the government of the city of Chicago a government of, for and by the laborers of Chicago. In other words, he must be a SOCIALIST. There is a man who fits all these conditions and who is the only man in whom the workers of Chicago can have any interest. That man is JOHN COLLINS and he is at the head of the SOCIALIST ticket.

If he is elected he is pledged to use all the powers of the city government at all times and under all conditions in the interest of the workers. Every vote that is cast for him whether he be elected or not is a protest against the conditions that give rise to injunctions, strikes, tramps and destroyed homes and is the only way in which such a protest can be made. Every cross put above his name is a declaration that one more man has had intelligence enough to know that in a quarrel between masters, slaves get only blown, no matter who wins, and that if a strike is to be made it might far better be for oneself than for any master. Every Socialist vote signifies that the person casting it believes in the abolition of all slavery, wage or chattel, and a free opportunity by all-laborers to use all the tools labor has invented or constructed and keep all the wealth labor has created.

Here then is the only candidate for whom the workers of Chicago can vote and not throw their vote directly into the hands of their worst enemies. A vote for COLLINS is a vote for labor. A vote for Harrison or Haney is a vote for the exploiters of labor. If labor has a chance to choose which will be elected who will get the most votes? Where will your vote go?

Socialist Party Platform

In view of the fact that the municipal elections in Chicago are to take place in April, the Socialist party, in convention assembled, once more affirms its allegiance to the principles of international revolutionary socialism.

In calling upon the working class to rally to the support of the principles of socialism, the Socialists wish to emphasize the fact so often reiterated, that until the complete triumph of the working class, which can only find expression in the overthrow of the capitalist system, be accomplished, any temporary palliatives must of necessity be partial and insufficient. Therefore we present the following immediate measures which our candidates will enforce according to the amount of power conferred upon them, for the consideration of all workmen who desire to achieve the emancipation of their class by means of the ballot:

1st. The employment of all unemployed citizens by the municipality.
2nd. That the municipality shall furnish support and assistance to all workmen upon strike, and aid them with every public power which can be used to help them accomplish their object.

DIFFERENCES IN WAGES.

How One Man Who Produces Nothing Can Earn as Much as 18,000 Others Who Produce

Many remarkable discoveries have been made by investigators from the Chicago university, but none more wonderful than this one published in last Sunday's paper. It seems almost incredible that, in spite of the "prosperity" that everybody is enjoying, the report of a student of that institution, regarding conditions of life in the sweatshops of Chicago should be true. This investigator declares that the average wages in those centers of industry are somewhere about $7 per annum. But this is not all. The further discovery has been made that even this meagre average tends to become still lower. And yet, while this downward tendency has been proceeding, it was generally supposed that the conditions of the working class were almost ideal. The "advance agent of prosperity" had been in office for four years and was re-elected upon the strength of belief in the fulfillment of the promises made by and for him, and still the tendency of sweat-shop wages is downward.

It is satisfactory to notice, however, that outside the sweatshops instances can be given to show that this tendency is not absolutely universal. An employee of the United States Steel and Iron Co., one Chas. Schwab, has been engaged at "wages" amounting to $1,000,000 per year, or about 12,500 times the average wage paid in the sweatshops in Chicago. Probably the entire number of sweat shop employees does not amount to 12,500, so it seems that Schwab "earns" as much as more than all the sweatshop employees in Chicago combined.

It does not at all follow that Schwab really needs 12,500 times as much food, or clothing, or fuel, or other physical necessities as the ordinary sweatshop employee in Chicago. Yet he gets it, and his employer may be deserving it, and that it is the reward of ability. It might be thought that this was impossible if the production of necessities determined the rate of wages in both cases. But, as it does not, there is no such difficulty in discovering the reason why Schwab's work is as valuable as that of 12,500 sweatshop employees.

Schwab, though so well paid, is not engaged in producing anything. The sweatshop people, though ill paid, really do produce things. And this fact, if carefully analyzed, will explain the differences in wages.

Schwab "earns" his millions by cheapening production, and can only do this by cheapening the producers. It is his business to apply improved machinery in iron and steel production, to dispense with every superfluous worker, to intensify the labor of the real producers, to throw upon the labor market every worker whose part in production can be done quicker and more cheaply by the machine and these, by competition with those still engaged, help to bring about the tendency to lower wages. In short, Schwab's business is to reproduce as far as possible in the iron and steel industry the same conditions that prevail in the sweatshops, viz. to get the greatest possible amount of labor power for the minimum of wages. Wages under capitalism constantly tend to this minimum, and Schwab gets his millions because of his ability to increase the rapidity of this tendency in the steel industry. Under socialism, on the contrary, Schwab, if he get 12,500 times as much as another worker, would have to produce 12,500 times as much, a feat which is practically impossible.

Under socialism, instead of receiving barely sufficient to live, would secure the full equivalent of their labor product for their own use.

VINDICATED AT THE POLLS

Class Conscious Socialists of Chicago Repudiate Those Who Opposed Unity of Forces. Vote Shows That the Socialist Party Has the Confidence of the Intelligent Portion of the Working Class. Falsehood and Scurrility Bring Disaster to the Disruptionists. Some Vagaries of Middle Class "Socialism" Outlook for the Future. The Socialist Party Will Carry on the Battle Against Capitalism With Renewed Energy.

Now that the smoke of battle has been cleared away and the capitalist duly elected, we feel the comrades throughout the city should be enlightened somewhat as to the actual state of affairs in the local Socialist movement. That this has not been done before is due to the fact that the Socialist party was too busily engaged in directing the fight against the common enemy, to waste time in exploiting the unfortunate division which resulted in three distinct parties claiming the name of Socialist being placed on the ballot. Doubtless this confusion to no small extent tended to diminish the vote, which might otherwise have been confidently anticipated, and which would certainly have installed the Socialist party of this city upon the official ballot, but even as it is, the result of the election shows conclusively that those who, for reasons best known to themselves, stubbornly opposed the unity of Socialist forces in this city, have gone down in well-merited disaster.

It now, however, becomes appropriate to place before our readers a short sketch of the events which occurred in the local movement subsequent to the national election in November. The Socialist party have consistently stood for unity ever since that date, and in their convention 185 delegates emphasized that position plainly and distinctly. The faction with headquarters at Washington street, however, rejected every advance made in that direction, though everything possible was done to make it acceptable without loss of self-respect. Nothing came of this, and the Socialist party persevere had to abide the result of the election, a final test. That result showed beyond a shadow of doubt that the Socialist party was thoroughly justified in the position it took. The malcontents have been overwhelmingly defeated, and will in all probability have no further significance as a political party in Chicago.

It was no light task, with the limited means at our command to accomplish this victory, but the comrades of the Socialist party braced themselves for the effort. The agitation was carried on with the utmost vigor, large meetings being continuously held in every part of the city, speakers worked day and night to bring before the laborers the principles of Socialism, and literature was systematically distributed, while the disruptionists were utterly unable to carry on any propaganda worthy of the name, relying mainly upon the assumed stupidity of the Socialist voters and their own capacity for "bluff," and whatever effect a few thousand weak, mendacious and confusing handbills might produce. Practically the entire work of Socialist propaganda for the recent election was carried on by the Socialist party.

First reports of the election show that the united Socialist forces of Chicago have polled 4,115 votes, which will almost certainly increase to the neighborhood of 5,000 when the official returns are made public. On the other hand, the Washington street faction are credited with but 1,303, a number which may possibly increase to 2,000 or thereabouts, and without doubt a considerable number of this total was cast through ignorance of the fact that the party had changed its name.

The character of "Socialism" advocated by this insignificant clique is almost worthy of a passing notice. Throughout the campaign it largely took the form of a series of misstatements of the party by which it was so thoroughly thrashed on last Tuesday. To these tactics no reply was necessary. The Socialist party, as before stated, was too busily engaged in Socialist propaganda to notice the calumnies leveled at it by conscious impostors. Scurrility and falsehood spread broadcast through anonymous handbills may serve the turn of those who use them as a necessary adjunct to a suspicious cause, but such weapons we leave to those who prefer to use them. They have no part in our propaganda.

The following incident, which is attested to by one of our watchers, will throw some light upon the conception of Socialism possessed by those who have done their utmost to perpetuate divisions in the ranks of the working class, and it is exactly what might have been expected from them. In the fifth precinct of the Thirty-fifth ward our comrades know only of two members of the S. D. P.—viz., the editor of the Social Democratic Herald and his son. In this precinct, but two votes were cast for the S. D. P. ticket, the additional vote in each case being given to the Maple Street, the der this editor informed the Daily News reporter on the day before election that his party stood for "conservative ideas" and not for "revolution." It might be as well to remark in passing, that this precinct polled twenty votes for the Socialist party ticket. These matters, however, are but transient phases through which the Socialist movement must pass, and are mentioned merely to clear up any possible doubt which may remain in the minds of our readers as to the nature of the internal dissensions which have to some extent retarded the progress of Socialism in Chicago. For the rest, the election of April 3d has abundantly justified our position and repudiated the actions of the disruptionists. From this time forward our attention will, as usual, be exclusively given to Socialist agitation and organization as we have neither time nor inclination to trouble about the remnants of disunion which may yet survive. The outlook for the future is cheering and the battle against capitalism must be pressed with unabated vigor. A solid and coherent body of class-conscious workingmen stand in the ranks of the Socialist party, equipped and ready to enter the field which is now ripening for harvest. Those who oppose may still continue their futile opposition, and those who recognize the deception that has been perpetrated upon them by the spokesmen of disunion, can find an outlet for their energy and activity in the Socialist movement in the ranks of the Socialist party, the justice of whose claims to represent the interests of the working class in this city have been doubly and trebly vindicated in the recent election.

THE FINAL RALLY.

Great Meeting at West 15th St. Turner Hall Bridges Local Campaign To a Close.

Our last Monday evening an audience of some 800 persons attended the final rally of the Socialist Party at West Twelfth Street Turner Hall. A formidable array of speakers were on hand, amongst whom the mayoral candidate, John Collins, was the principal speaker of the evening. The meeting lasted till after 11 p. m., each speaker occupying from fifteen to twenty-five minutes in making his address. The audience was most responsive and enthusiastic, and the points made by the various speakers were heartily applauded. Comrade Collins delivered a powerful address, in which he exposed the falsity of the claims of the capitalist candidates to pose as "friends of labor," and showed conclusively that the laborers, instead of depending upon their enemies for "favors" which they never received, must unite together and enforce their own demands by the collective strength of their numbers. He described how the capitalist class mainly depended upon "trickery and misrepresentation, and taking advantage of race and religious prejudices to keep the workers in ignorance of their true interests, and how socialism alone could rend the web of deception woven around the unsuspecting working class by the parasitical tribe who lived upon their labor. He was followed by Comrades Mills, Morgan and Smiley, who in brief and pointed addresses emphasized what had been said before. Three rousing cheers were then given for the Socialist candidate and three more for the party and the meeting was then declared adjourned.

To Stop Exodus.

Conditions in Porto Rico are such that thousands of laborers are emigrating to Venezuela, leaving the capitalist planters without the supply of wage labor necessary to properly employ their capital. Prompt action has been taken in Washington to meet this emergency, and two tons of American flags are to be shipped at once to the island to restore confidence and check the tide of immigration which is proving so disastrous to the local economy. Wage laborers have often been scared by the threat that their masters would take their capital out of the country in case the workers refused to submit to the rule of exploitation, but the folly of this threat is well evidenced by the fact that the capitalist will move heaven and earth to retain the supply of wage labor, without which his capital is absolutely useless. The situation in Porto Rico is a distinct illustration in miniature of the work of the Socialist movement in this city. The Socialist statement that labor produces all

PRISONER FOR LIFE

Awful Predicament of a Capitalist Profitmonger.

DECLARES "HE CAN'T GET OUT"

Victim Must Stay in a "Business" Prison Solitary for the Interests of His Wage Slaves.

At all hazards, the delusion that the capitalist is only a capitalist for the benefit of the working class, must be maintained in the minds of the latter. Upon every possible occasion the exploiter is represented as an individual who would gladly give up the care and burden of exploitation and devote his time to "philanthropy" were it not that the people whom he fleeces would suffer by such action on his part. The example of Andrew Carnegie in retiring from "business" (with an annual income of fifteen million dollars) has been commented upon by many of his brethren as the ideal course to pursue, and these gentry (with the exception of Russell Sage, who declares bluntly that he means to keep control until death looms on his grip), almost invariably express a strong desire to follow the example of the benevolent (?) Scotchman, but unfortunately the interests of their employees imperatively forbid all hope of entertaining such an idea. An interview with Abraham S. Hewitt, recently reported in the daily papers, may be taken as characteristic of the hypocrisy of the average capitalist upon this subject:

Mr. Hewitt, you evidently do not agree with Mr. Carnegie's view on how a wealthy man's old age should be spent," began the reporter. "I do most thoroughly agree with Mr. Carnegie on that point," replied Mr. Hewitt. "What makes you think I don't?" "Because you don't get out of active business, and yet you are old and wealthy," said the reporter. "I sincerely wish I had a chance to sell out like Mr. Carnegie had. I would jump at it," answered Mr. Hewitt. "Mr. Carnegie has been extremely fortunate. He is at least at liberty, but I am still in prison. I CAN'T GET OUT. At least I can't get out on terms which I feel it would be honorable to accept. I had a chance some time ago to sell out our Trenton works, but the condition was that they should be closed down permanently. This would have thrown about five hundred of our people out of work; people who have been with us for years, and many of whom have bought their own little homes in Trenton. I could not accept such terms; an hour's am with the burden yet on my shoulders, and I suppose death alone would relieve me of it."

"Pity the sorrows of a poor old man" of nearly eighty years, whom five hundred selfish laborers insist upon keeping in prison until death comes to his relief. Imagine the depth of despair into which the aged captive is plunged upon seeing the liberated Carnegie spread his wings and soar into boundless freedom, unhampered by the sordid cares of business, while the unfortunate Hewitt must remain in the Bastille of profit-making for the term of his natural life, incarcerated in that hideous prison by the necessities of the 600, who cannot afford to let him out for fear of being "let out" themselves. Verily, it is a tragical situation. Can nothing be done to set the captive free?

Let us examine the fastenings of his dungeon cell. Let us test the locks and bolts and bars which stand between Mr. Hewitt and liberty. Like the caged starling in Sterne's "Sentimental Journey," Mr. Hewitt constantly repeats the despairing cry, "I can't get out!" "I can't get out!" until his very impotency becomes an invitation to inspect the structure of his cage. By the bye, we hope our readers will overlook the rather strained comparison by which this prisoner of capitalism is likened to a starling. We know, of course, that a venture would have made a more appropriate simile, but then ventures don't talk. They simply gorge themselves to death.

Mr. Hewitt must stay in lest 600 people should be "thrown out of work." Seems to be a law in this fastening somewhere. Is it not the Hewitt class who constantly insist that any man can get work who really looks for it? When 500 these 600 men are tramping over the length and breadth of this country, do not the organs which express the interests of Hewitt's class assert over and over again that these men will not work, that they will run away from work, that there is nothing more to be done than that work, and that their greatest trouble is desiring and avoiding the remunerative work which is thrust upon them at every turn? Is not this the era of "unparalleled prosperity," the mythic epoch in which the "job seeker" man? Why should Hewitt fear that these 600 will suffer? They are not dependent upon him, unless he will admit that the political tool of his class are Marx and Engels, who declare that the political and economic interests of the working class are identical.

It is certainly not this excuse which will prevent him.

Again, the Trenton works (whatever they may be), are certainly not run merely for the sake of "giving employment." If they ceased to yield profit, would Hewitt have any scruples about closing them down regardless of the interests of the 600 employees? Hardly. Doesn't it look altogether reasonable to suppose that the sweet taste of the profits extracted from the Trenton works is at least sufficient consolation to reconcile the prisoner to his captivity? If there were no profits, he could get out, in fact, he would have to. As it is, Mr. Hewitt is evidently a victim, the profits which they insist upon thrusting on him.

The prisoner also labors under the hallucination that he cannot get out without "selling out." How is this? If the works produce profits, is he the only one competent to receive them? Are there not many labor skippers quite as expert as he? Hewitt does not live in Trenton, but in New York, and takes no part whatever in the production process. Are there not managers and superintendents in Trenton who attend to the actual labor squeezing? And couldn't they take the profits with as much ease as he does? Surely, the withdrawal of an individual whose sole function is to appropriate what others produce, need not necessitate the closing down of the works. There are lots of fellows ready to release Hewitt from this task, and give him the freedom which he envies Carnegie. Indeed, he could "emancipate" himself in the same manner without much exertion were he so inclined. The bolts and bars of his prison are by no means so strong as he imagines.

This unfortunate captive should be given way to despair. He might possibly find an incentive to freedom, and a significant hint as to how it may be obtained, by recalling the wonderful escape from prison related by the humorist, Artemus Ward. A young man of noble birth was imprisoned in a dungeon through the malice and treachery of a powerful rival. There he lay for forty long years without food or drink, yet always dreaming of ultimate freedom. At last, one day when he had almost given up hope, a happy inspiration came to him. He opened the window and got out.

It is of course a matter of little moment to socialists whether this old humbug stays in his "business" prison or gets out to make room for another voluntary martyr of the same stripe. But it may be of some service to expose as far as possible the hypocritical attitude assumed by those who exploit the workers and at the same time pose as self-sacrificing victims to the welfare of the community. The profit of capital has been often described as the "reward of abstinence," but it has remained to our pliant plunderers to outdo even this ridiculous profession of asceticism by adding to it the pretence of imprisonment borne solely for the sake of "giving employment" to those whose labor alone makes all wealth possible. And while preparing the proletarian for their economic emancipation, it may not be amiss to endeavor to puncture the superstition so carefully cultivated by philanthropic exploiters of the Hewitt type, that the capitalist is a capitalist merely for the benefit of the working class.

It developed that hardly any of these agencies had taken out the annual license required by law, which costs $200. Crowds of men and women entered complaints of having paid fees to these institutions and received nothing in return. The inquiry was then directed to the police, and the impediment to the capitalist was that these who really desire work

A FORGETFUL CRITIC

Alleged Socialist Discourtesy Irritates Harrison.

SAYS WE ARE "NO GENTLEMEN"

Stickler for Etiquette Forgets the Conduct of His "Gentlemen" in the National Election.

One day last week a number of "emancipated" individuals exploited by Marshall Field, were gathered together in one of their owner's buildings to listen to some alleged reasons why they should vote for Carter Harrison and a continuation of their present prosperous conditions, the address to be delivered by that gentleman himself. There were several Socialists amongst the audience, who were present merely because they deemed it wise policy to put in an appearance at the harangue, as they didn't wish to run the risk of looking for another job, and from them we learn that Harrison expressed himself vigorously upon the conduct of the Socialists who refused to listen to his twaddle in Mueller's Hall two weeks ago. The remainder of his speech is of no consequence to our readers—or for that matter to the audience who listened to it—though but few of them were aware of the fact.

The "man of destiny" asserted that because the Socialists in Mueller's Hall refused to listen to his vapors, they were "no gentlemen." Be it so. If the sort of people who touted for Harrison in the election, the gang who hang around the City Hall, can be described by that appellation, then the Socialists are more than willing to be counted out. The assembly at Mueller's Hall met merely to make a presentation of a flag to one of the numerous German societies in the locality. They were not there to listen to a political address, least of all an address from a capitalist candidate, and they expressed their displeasure and repudiation by leaving him the empty hall in which to expound his oratory.

No violence was offered to Harrison. He was not even ordered out of the building, much less put out. He was not even prevented from speaking. Had a Socialist speaker intruded upon a Harrison meeting and commenced uninvited to make an address, what would the "gentlemen" present have done?

We Socialists have long memories, and when Harrison attempted to read us a lesson in good manners, we may venture to call his attention to the occurrences which took place on State street in the latter part of last October when the Socialists attempted to hold a series of open air meetings just before the national election. A body of "gentlemen," every one of whom would have listened quietly to Harrison's oratory, and who for years have voted him into office, made a systematic and determined onslaught upon the Socialist speakers. They were assaulted, beaten and in some cases stabbed, their stands were overturned, and their meetings broken up by the "gentlemanly" drags and scums of the levee district. The authorities had been duly notified of these meetings, police protection had been requested in due form, and again and again when the howling mob of "gentlemen" were engaged in their cowardly attacks, the intervention of Harrison's police was asked in vain. Harrison knew of these meetings, knew that the police knew of them, knew that permission had been given to hold them, knew that he was mayor was responsible for the preservation of public peace, knew that they would be attacked—and did nothing to prevent it. If he did not encourage, he undoubtedly permitted his "gentlemen" to work their own sweet will undisturbed and unhindered.

And this is the man who considers himself aggrieved because a Socialist audience, who had hired and paid for the use of a hall, and upon whom he was imperiously thrust, refused to listen to his stupid and useless harangue! It was well for him that they were not "gentlemen," or he might have fared worse.

It is about time that capitalist politicians were acquainted with the fact that of all people in this city, the Socialists have no manner of use for them. Whether they label themselves Republicans or Democrats, we recognize them equally as enemies of the working class. We know perfectly well what they have to say and why they say it, and have long ago come to the conclusion that it is a useless waste of our time and their efforts to attempt to convince us that the system for which they stand can ever gain our support. Once a Socialist, always a Socialist, and neither Harrison, Haney, nor any of their following of capitalist windbags need entertain any idea of making converts from our ranks. We know what we want, and how to get it, and we know further that between us there is a great gulf fixed, which cannot be bridged until capitalism has disappeared.

If any of these men wish to obtain a hearing from Socialists they can only obtain it by championing capitalism as against Socialism in debate. Harrison can have an opportunity to speak to Socialists upon no other terms, but he will be gladly afforded this chance if he dares to accept the challenge. Otherwise we have no time to waste in listening to him, being too busily engaged in underceiving those who are yet the dupes of his class.

Suggestions for Agitation.

Springfield, Mass., March 20, 1901.
To All Locals of the S. D. P. and Other Socialist Organizations.

Greeting:—The warm and pleasant weather will soon be here and it is for us as Socialists to take advantage of same by getting out on the highway and byway, teaching Socialism to the people as they stroll along enjoying the pleasures of the gentle evening zephyr after their day of wearisome toil in factory or shop.

The N. E. C., being anxious to do all it possibly can to advance the cause of Socialism this coming spring, summer and fall, has adopted a plan of arranging circuits for open-air speakers and hopes to get the co-operation of every local, and other organizations as well, in making this a grand success.

We propose to arrange "monthly" tours in the various states and have one speaker or more if necessary stump for Socialism.

The idea is to get every local to agree to hold at least one open air meeting each month, and if any organization desires to hold them oftener the N. E. C. will see that speakers are supplied.

Our object is to reduce the expense of each local or organization to the minimum, and the following has been adopted: Each local is required to pay the speaker $2 for his day's services, his railroad fare from the point he had previously left, and to take care of him while he stays with them.

We shall try and arrange the tours so that the railroad expense will be trifling to each local, which will make the entire expense of each meeting a small matter.

We think that by arranging these circuits and sending a different speaker over the route each month a great interest will be taken by all comrades in the work, which will create new enthusiasm, and the result can only be beneficial to the movement of the class-conscious proletariat for economic freedom.

Tours are now being arranged so as to begin our open-air campaign on May 1st at the latest. We submit this to your local or organization, and hope that you comrades are interested enough in the cause to agree to arrange at least one meeting a month on the above basis.

Kindly advise us at once as to the decision arrived at, so that your city or town can be included in the circuit; also how often a speaker will be required. Yours fraternally,

WM. BUTSCHER, Nat'l Secy.

Note.—Any Socialist organization desiring to participate in these meetings can do so by writing to the National Secretary regarding same. We notified all organizations of which we had addresses, and if any organization has failed to receive a notice it is because their address was unknown to us. Let us all join hands in one grand educational campaign for Socialism.

General election is about to take place in Denmark and Social Democrats are making a winning fight. On March 9 every trade unionist in the country contributed to the campaign fund. In Copenhagen 15,000 workers held a mass meeting and protested against the government's action in discharging a postoffice employee for standing for election of a Social Democrat.

THE VAIL MEETINGS

Series of Addresses Brought to a Successful Conclusion.

LARGE AUDIENCES ATTRACTED

Noted Socialist Writer Speaks for the Candidates on the Socialist Party Ticket.

Local Socialist agitation received a strong impulse during the last days of March from the visit of Comrade Chas. H. Vail, the Socialist candidate for governor of New Jersey. A series of four meetings was arranged; which were carried out in the most successful manner and were probably attended by upwards of 3,000 people. Comrade Vail is a strong and forceful speaker, and his expositions of the principles of Socialism left nothing to be desired in the way of effective propaganda. He left this city on Monday morning to continue his tour of agitation through the middle West, and his itinerary may be found in another column of this paper.

The first meeting, which was held on Friday evening, the 29th ult., in Phoenix hall, corner of Division and Sedgwick streets, at 8 p. m., attracted an audience of between six and seven hundred people, who paid the closest attention to the lecturer throughout the entire address and by their frequent applause showed that the points made were duly appreciated. The speaker concluded with a strong appeal for the support of the candidate for mayor on the ticket of the Socialist party, the name of John Collins eliciting loud and continued applause from the audience. A goodly quantity of literature and several hundred copies of the Workers' Call were sold during the progress of the meeting, and a fair sum towards defraying the hall expenses was contributed by those present.

On the following evening at the same hall, a very large audience of about 800 persons was present. The speaker was introduced by the name of John Collins, the name of John Collins eliciting loud and continued applause from the audience. A goodly quantity of literature and several hundred copies of the Workers' Call were sold during the progress of the meeting, and a fair sum towards defraying the hall expenses was contributed by those present.

The third meeting took place at Kensington Turner hall, West Fullman, at 8 p. m. on Sunday afternoon, and was largely attended, the hall being completely filled. Comrades Vail and Simons made eloquent and forceful addresses, which were received with loud and continued applause. A belated follower of De Leon (strange to say the species is not yet wholly extinct in Chicago) attempted to advocate the union-smashing tactics of the "pervert," but was speedily reduced to silence by the logic of the speaker, who took up his challenge. The discussion was greatly relished by those present, and the meeting was brought to a close with rousing cheers for the Socialist party.

Comrade Vail concluded his series of meetings at the Socialist Temple the same evening at 8 p. m., where he and Comrade W. T. Mills held perhaps the most enthusiastic audience that the Temple has yet contained for more than two hours. The building was packed far beyond its seating capacity, many of those present being compelled to stand during the entire time of speaking. The audience showed the keenest appreciation of the manner in which the lecturer presented his subject, and the short and vigorous closing speech of Comrade Mills, which was also heartily applauded, brought to a successful conclusion the Chicago engagement of Comrade Vail, whose work in the cause of Socialism in this city contributed to no slight extent to the magnificent vote polled by the Socialist party on the following Tuesday.

Comrade Vail's campaign is reported to have paid a large sum for the patent rights of an invention owned by parties in Salt Lake City. It is said to be a process for converting crude petroleum into gas for lighting purposes, which will give a more brilliant light than is possible with electricity. The Standard Oil Company was not to be a process for converting crude petroleum into gas for lighting purposes, which will give a more brilliant light than is possible with electricity. There are evidently two sides to the assertion that capitalism stimulates invention.

Single meeting of 100 or more, in each city.

A Century of Economic Development.

Translated from the Polish.

The evolution of the century just closed could be best characterized as the evolution of capitalism. One could say that century stood at its cradle, saw its much promising youth, witnessed its noble desires and dreams and believed that its endeavors were destined to accomplish heaven on earth.

Now, the successor of the 19th century finds it to be in a state of decrepit senility, bereft of faith and vitality and imbued with bitterness and despair. No economic system has ever before awakened such heaven-reaching hopes, none has progressed so brilliantly and rapidly, but none, after so short a career, has reached the climax of its development and passed into the state of old age. No economic system has stirred society so deeply, none has aroused so much enthusiasm and energy, but also none has created so many contradictions, disturbances and confusions of ideas, such desperate hopelessness and discouragement, Mysticism, decadence, and even asceticism—what would the first classic apostles of capitalism say to that, they who believed that the reign of capitalism would be the reign of light, serenity, harmony and joyousness in life.

The starting point of the modern economy was the medieval peasant economy and handicrafts. As long as the chief source of maintenance was the nomadic pasturage, and hunting, land was common property, communal, tribal, or racial, there was no place for private property. It would have been an absurdity to divide land into small parts, to fence them and thus force each single owner to raise for himself a small stock of cattle. With the evolution of peasant-husbandry, the evolution of property begins. For the peasant husbandry which prevailed at the end of the middle ages common tilling of the soil, based upon common property, was not only unnecessary, but formed a hindrance in the evolution of agriculture. The simple agricultural tools demanded individual cultivation of a small piece of land. Only the modern development of the agricultural technique and implements (as steam plows, etc.) require large tracts of land. With the medieval mode of peasant husbandry, with its simple tools, the soil could be much better cultivated and produce much greater results, the more arbitrarily the husbandman could dispose of it and ascertain for himself and his family the products of his soil and the improvements of his land. The communal land ownership had to disappear and make place for the private property in land.

Private ownership was an equally indispensable condition for the evolution of handicraft. Handicraft does not require the collective work of many people, its produce depends upon the individual virtues of the worker, upon his skill and diligence and such virtues develop only when the artisan enjoys perfect freedom in his work, and that freedom is possible only when he owns the tools as well as products of his toil.

Husbandry and handicraft have called forth the evolution of property, which was soon followed by the evolution of the production of commodities and capital. At the beginning of the 19th century we find the three modes of production, viz: peasant economy, artisan and capitalistic production. The evolution of property called forth the evolution of production of commodities and this in turn the evolution of capital from which the 19th century has taken not only its economical but its social character also. The peasant economy has not immediately adopted the specific form of production for exchange, and does not even today practice it everywhere. At first the peasant family satisfied its want by itself and produced for its own consumption only. But with the development of agriculture on the one side and the evolution of handicraft on the other the peasant economy began to produce more than was needed for the support of the family, and commenced to set aside a part of its production for the purpose of exchange or sale, or, in other words, it began to produce commodities. The artisan, however, was from the beginning a producer of commodities, he never produced for himself but always for sale. The artisan was the inventor and representative of the new mode of production, viz: the production of commodities.

As in the middle ages, the representatives of civilization were the classes living on agriculture, so in modern times the evolution of culture came from the towns in which handicrafts developed and created a new form of production. And as 600 years ago the peasants were the representatives of the working classes, so a hundred years ago and at the beginning of the 19th century, the backbone of all popular movements was formed by the artisans. The distinctive character of the new mode of artisan production was purchase and sale of reciprocal exchange. The fundamental such an exchange is the division of labor. The more that division of labor develops the more extensive become the exchange relations, and the production of commodities, with at least the function of exchange, namely, buying and selling, becomes themselves a separate branch of labor-commerce. And for the first time arises from the mode of production of commodities, capital in its most primitive form as commercial capital. Besides the peasant's and artisan's property there develops also "the materialistic property of the merchant."

If capital, as Prof. Brentano says, is "value that by itself produces more value" (Ein mehrwerthbildendes Verth), then the difference between the private property of the peasant and artisan depends upon their own work and cannot be fruitlessly enlarged. Their private property does not create income by itself, but comes as the result of work applied to their property. For that reason their income, as well as their property is limited by their capacity for work and cannot be increased at will. That kind of property therefore is called the small bourgeois property, the property of the artisan or small farmer. In contradistinction to the capitalist property, which can fruitlessly increase. The income from the capital primarily depends upon its size. That ability of capital constantly to increase or its ability to accumulate was, as we will see below, of the utmost importance to the 19th century.

Simultaneously with the commercial capital there also appeared the capital of the money lender. When, however, these two kinds of capital had the ability of increasing property, they also caused the loss of someone else's property. Usury always implies someone's misery. The increasing capital makes us believe that somebody works for it instead of for himself.

At first the increase of the number of men deprived of property was the direct result of the artisan production of commodities. The general process of expropriation of the masses was as follows: Simultaneously with the growth of urban handicrafts grew also the markets for the rural products. This reacted upon the peasant economy, which from now on began to produce for exchange.

The peasant, producing for sale and receiving money, began to have a different significance in the eyes of his feudal lord. As long as the surplus income of the peasant expressed itself only in the consumptive products, his master took from him only so much as he could consume himself. With the movement, however, when that surplus could be exchanged for money, so much was taken that there remained for him nothing else to do but to desert his economy and flee to the towns. The discovery of America, the road to India and the gold mines, etc., have hastened this process by increasing the commercial capital and creating big markets. The mass of accumulated capital, as well as the increasing number of free working hands, created the first steps to the new evolution of capitalist production.

Superficially the new form of production was little distinct from the old one. The merchant gave to the workman the raw material and the tools of production in his home and received back the finished commodity. The next step forward in the evolution of production was that the merchant ceased to give the laborer work at home, but gathered them in his own workshop, where it was easier for him to direct labor and superintend the laborer. Now came the period of manufacture, which reigned in western Europe until the beginning of the 19th century. Previously the development of industry depended upon the increasing number of separate handicrafts, while each artisan produced the whole article. The division of labor increased the number of small workshops as well as the variety of occupations of each individual artisan. The division of labor inside of the big workshop led to the division of occupations in such a way that each separate part of work was continually performed by one and the same workman, and the whole article before completion passed from one hand to another, becoming the product of collective work, which accumulated in one workshop, an ever-increasing number of hands and tools and built up the ever-expanding manufacturing establishments.

This brought about an unusual increase of productivity. The more important consequence of the division of labor, however, was that whenever by its means some branch of industry became divided into many simple manipulations, that the workman grew to be a machine—the machine replaced the workman. The introduction of machines accomplished the evolutionary process of the transformation of handicraft into capitalist production and caused a thorough economical revolution. Manufacturing was changed into the factory system, and owing to the factory the march of capital in the 19th century was unexampled.

Handicraft was continually losing ground. Capitalist production had driven it away from all the fields it occupied. The greater division of labor, the abilities of the merchant manufacturer, enabling him to take advantage of the market, wholesale production—all contributed to make the factory the economic master of the older forms of production.

where goods are produced not to satisfy the wants of single consumers, but for the market, the artisan production could not only not compete with the factory, but was not even able to withstand the competition of the home industry when directed by commercial capital.

There is another reason why the artisan production was driven to the artisan's subjective point of view, but it has no significance from the objective standpoint of production. In these branches of industry in which handicraft exclusively prevails and which work the laborer does at home, the independence of the latter does not outlast the time when it becomes an export industry. Handicraft can yet exist in places only where it is to supply a limited market and so long as the evolution does not outgrow the productive capacity of handicraft. But this does not mean that the number of artisans and small capitalists constantly decreases. In the capitalist evolution small capitals play the role of an agent of technical revolution, and with their disappearance the evolution of capital would cease. In the same moment in which the creation of capital would exclusively fall into the hands of the big capitalists, the enervating fire of production would be extinguished and production itself would cease. We mention this because many a writer begins to imitate Bernstein and to quote the statistics of small establishments and capitals as a proof against the above assertion. Small production is an everlasting source for the evolution of capitalism, and it will disappear only with the disappearance of capitalism. The capitalist evolution constantly creates new branches of production or additional branches that are taken up by handicrafts or small capitalists that were driven away from some other field of production, thus preparing the ground for new conquests of capital.

This evolutionary process, which took place in the industrial centers, also accomplished a revolution in agriculture. The big industry and capitalistic commerce, having taken the first rank in the economic life, have drawn agriculture of all countries into a competitive struggle on the world's market, and made it with regard to production dependent upon them. Agriculture began to accommodate itself to the needs of industry, which it furnishes with raw products, and also to the needs of the towns and industrial markets, where it finds its chief consumers. New wants of these markets have called into life new branches of agricultural production, and the evolution brought about by the evolution of capitalism in the state and society (the growth of government functions, of militarism, the budgets, etc.) reacted upon the overtaxed peasant class by forcing it to produce commodities. This class, lacking capital, is being, like the artisan, forced to the wall and throws upon the labor market an ever-increasing number of hands.

The peasant family who only with the greatest difficulty can support itself from the produce of their own farm, is forced to send its grown-up members to the towns and factories. The peasant economy can but maintain an ever-diminishing number of men. This manifests itself in some countries by the even relatively decreasing rural population and the constantly increasing emigration.

The capitalist evolution by its constantly increasing number of wage laborers, and its having drawn into the process of production women and children, has effected a revolutionary change in the social condition of the population.

Socialist Temple Notes.

Our friends will note the fact that our Sunday morning meeting is combined with the Sunday evening meeting. The Sunday program is as follows:

2:30—Socialist School, A. M. Simons conducting the teaching.

3:30—Socialist Party meeting, different party speakers each Sunday.

7:45—Social Crusade People's meeting, with Schubert String Quartet and singing, the Crusaders alternating with P. G. Strickland in speaking.

Next Sunday evening the speaker is J. Stip Wilson. Comrade Wilson is about to leave for a trip to the Pacific coast. This will be the last opportunity for us to hear him for some months. Come early or you may miss him.

The speaker for Sunday at 3:30 will be A. M. Simons, who will speak on "The Lessons of the Election."

Comrade Klenke speaks for us Tuesday, April 9, 8 p. m.

The Ladies' Auxiliary provides a speaker every Thursday evening. Ladies are invited to bring their husbands.

The entertainment given by the Ladies' Auxiliary will occur Saturday, April 24. Tickets, including refreshments, 35 cents.

The meeting last Sunday night will long be remembered. Comrade Chas. H. Vail gave a remarkably clear and forceful presentation of Socialism and the enthusiastic audience cheered him again and again. Comrade W. T. Mills followed with a speech on the immediate political situation in Chicago. This also met with a most hearty response.

The seating capacity of the Temple was taxed to its utmost. Comrade Vail says that he would like to see many more church buildings converted into Socialist temples.

We have a limited number of copies of the International Socialist Review, returned from the News Company with the covers slightly damaged, so that they cannot be sent out on subscriptions. Any comrade who will call at this office can have twenty-five unsorted copies for 25 cents. This is much less than cost, and the offer is made only to party members, as we might suffer considerable inconvenience and loss if these copies fell into the hands of irresponsible people. This price does not include postage. But for 25 cents we will send 25 of these damaged copies to any officer of an I. S. D. P. local outside of Chicago. Address Charles H. Vail & Co., Publishers, 24 Fifth Avenue, Chicago.

The strike of marine engineers upon the great lakes is rapidly assuming serious proportions, and hundreds of vessels will remain tied up at the docks unless the trouble is settled before the regular navigation season opens.

In London, when asked whether the United States Steel Corporation would not tend to hasten Socialism, Carnegie dodged the question and declared that if he landed in New York penniless again he would get rich. But it's safe to bet he won't try the job.

A sum of $55,000 was paid last week for the privilege of a seat in the New York Stock Exchange, and it is said that the price will rise still higher in the near future. Under the present system it is perfectly natural that a position from which the laborers can be profitably exploited should command a high price on the market.

Thirty-five men in the canning department of the Libby, McNeil & Libby packing plant in the stockyards went on strike for $2 per day in place of the $1.50 which they had been formerly receiving for ten hours' work. The company at once filled their places with white and colored women at a lower figure. There was "nothing to arbitrate."

The threatened strike of the United Mine Workers, which was to go into effect on April 1, has been averted. President Mitchell succeeded in convincing the miners that the present time was most inopportune for a strike. Had it taken place, Mr. J. P. Morgan might have been seriously inconvenienced in his work of perfecting the billion dollar steel trust. When that gigantic task is accomplished the miners may have a try. Meanwhile, everything remains substantially the same.

A British steel magnate named Furness has been giving it as his opinion that the great combinations of iron industry in this country will ultimately collapse of themselves, and small capitalist production be once more reinstated. This conclusion he arrives at through the assertion that "protection as a theory is economically unsound." Mr. Furness will, we suspect be somewhat disappointed to discover that economic evolution has little reverence for either free trade or protection as theories, and that the collapse of the trust in its present form will, instead of giving capitalism a fresh start, abolish it entirely.

At Pola, in Dalmatia, there was a weekly Socialist paper, Il Proletario. It is now published every day.

BELGIUM.

Great preparations are being made for demonstrations at Brussels and other towns in favor of universal suffrage and one man one vote, and not one man three votes, as often happens now for the well-to-do.

DENMARK.

The elections to the Chamber of Deputies (Folkething) will take place in about three weeks' time. The Socialists will run no less than thirty candidates, and hope to be able to increase the number—twelve—of members whom they now have. At this election, for the first time, voting will be by ballot.

SPAIN.

Strikes have occurred in Catalonia because the employers do not carry out the provisions of the recent law relating to the employment of women and children.

MUST BE CONCEALED.

Capitalist Press Deprecates the Indication of Exposing the Class Struggle.

It is interesting to observe the attitude of the ruling classes of society when any prominent individual amongst them sounds a note of alarm which brings to public view undisputed evidence of the reality of the class struggle. A Marx or a Liebknecht may devote years of study to plain expositions of this central sociological truth, and their efforts will be largely neutralized through a policy of silence upon the part of those to whom the idea is unwelcome; but let a Kaiser Wilhelm announce what is practically the same thing in a public speech and the capitalist press, which cannot ignore the utterances of such an exalted personage, handles the entire subject in a manner calculated to make one admire their cleverness in concealing the significance of the statement.

The German emperor in a speech to his troops tells them to be ready to suppress any revolt upon the part of the people against his authority. He refers to a revolutionary struggle of more than fifty years ago as an example which he fears may be repeated and states that he relies upon the bayonets of his troops to repel the insubordinate insurgents.

How, then, does the capitalist press represent the matter? Do they express agreement with the emperor? Or do they "resent his murderous anticipation of the butchery of his subjects? Neither. They take the stand that the Kaiser is needlessly alarmed; that there is no fear of a revolution; that the people are loyal, etc., etc. They pretend to be astounded that the idea should ever be entertained by the emperor that any such revolt as he speaks of should be possible. The conditions which would tend to engender revolts no longer exist, they tell us, and intimate that the Kaiser's words are merely the effect of undue excitement produced by the recent attack upon his person by an irresponsible epileptic.

No, there is no class struggle even if the Kaiser is incautious enough to make public what he relies upon to suppress his manifestation. Such an idea cannot be tolerated in any form. The possibilities of foreign war, the struggle for economic supremacy under unfavorable terms, the disputes of warring capitalist factions within the empire—all these things can be discarded calmly and philosophically; but the probability of a struggle with the class-conscious proletariat—the exploited and plundered laborers of Germany—that is a matter that they cannot yet afford to have dragged into the arena in such a manner as to attract attention. So the dispatches from Germany inform us that "nobody is aware of anything upon which the idea of an outbreak can be based."

The organs of "public opinion" are afraid to state bluntly that the emperor is talking nonsense, and still more afraid to admit that he displays great judgment in preparing for emergencies. In this dilemma they find it safest to assume an attitude of astonishment and depreciation toward the incident.

But the emperor, however, has some reason for his alarm. The presence of fifty-eight members in the German Reichstag, sent there three years ago as the chosen of nearly two and a quarter millions of German workmen who frankly avow revolution as their object, should at least account to some extent for the recent utterances of the Kaiser, but the existence of this revolutionary body (which is constantly increasing) is so utterly concealed in the press dispatches, which contain instead the reassuring news that "the loyalty of the people is unquestioned"—except of course by the Kaiser. It is not the view that the Kaiser takes that renders the millions of "public opinion" uneasy, but rather his indifference in publicly declaring it. They doubtless consider that he has spoken too soon, and that the old policy of representing political and economic conditions as fairly satisfactory should still be continued. But when the point is reached where the symptoms of revolt become unmistakable, a similar speech from the emperor would receive unanimous approval, and the press of all capitalist countries would cry out as with one voice in admiration of the wisdom, forethought and determination of the crowned representative of capitalist law and order. But at present the talk of suppressing discontent by force is both premature and dangerous to capitalist interests, and for that reason alone is viewed with regret by the German press.

SOCIALISM AND LIBERTY.

Triumph of the New Order Will Abolish Classes and Emphasize the Unity of Human Life.

The movement which moves in three times in the Socialist movement slow in getting started, true to the American spirit, once started it goes forward with leaps and bounds. For the hungry souls desiring the kingdom of love, the one mighty task is to fire this great movement with "the love of comrades."

This is more than sentiment. Every new historic movement must find its deep springs in human love or it recoils upon itself. The real emancipation of the workers need be the emancipation of life, the setting free of the soul. The struggle to own the tools, the means of production and distribution, is but the external of the common life coming to its inner freedom and harmony. The proletarian really craves life, abundant life.

The task of firing the Socialist movement with comradeship is all-important. It lacks not heroism, but unity and love. Let these two elements become predominant and no power can stay this oncoming tide of a world's redemption.

Whatever narrowness may have been of necessity engendered in the past must now be laid aside, as we don a worn-out garment. The great plastic world will be aroused, only by an appeal to its noblest and most instinctive. The dinner-pail argument is monopolized by the enemy. Let us offer not a full dinner-pail, per se, but a full life. Socialism offers the possibility of the freedom of each soul. Capitalism has invented and perfected the machine that will free us from drudgery. We need no longer be chained to material things because material things may be made free. No longer need we advance on our stomachs, because meat and drink may be as free as air and sunshine. Socialism comes to appropriate the machine and free the man.

But, you say, man will accept all this because of self-interest, indeed, but it will be that self-interest so freely wrought out that his synonym is love. The self-interest of the ignoble man is the mass of potholes for today at the cost of liberty tomorrow.

The sentiment, "Give me liberty or give me death!" is self-interest, and it is also love. Somewhere in human development the distinction between love and self-interest will forever disappear.

Socialism comes not to plunge the world into a class struggle, but to free us from a class struggle which is already here. It comes not to invert society and make the ruling class the subjects of the working class, but to abolish all classes and absorb humanity into the one great working class of equals and brothers. In other words, it is the best historic and inevitable step of the human race toward the unity of human life which is the underlying fact.

The world is one, the universe is one, society is one. That men are divided is the lie of our underdeveloped state. But he who would bring in the deliverance of man from strife must himself be whole-souled. He must have caught a spark of the eternal fire of liberty and buried it deep in his own warm heart. He who would free the world must in his own soul be free. He must live in the eternal tolerance, drawing not driving. The ego must find its deliverance before it can deliver the world. Our voting for Socialism will be with power when back of the marking of our ballot, tingling through our fingers is the power that creates and is creating the world and leading the universe to its eternal harmony and love.

A Universal Condition.

"Startling" discovery of "frauds" practiced on the commissary department have been made in Manila, and a group of patriots who have been upholding the honor of the flag in the Philippines are under arrest pending investigation. It is said that two and a half millions of dollars' worth of stores have been taken from the government, and that immense quantities of flour, bacon and other goods bearing a government mark have been found in the possession of unauthorized parties. One contractor is reported as having done a business of $100,000 per month in this manner, and to have spent huge sums in entertaining officers in looking over the entire field of capitalist exploitation. It is impossible to apply the conclusion that theft and fraud are everywhere prevalent. In Cuba, in Porto Rico, in the South Africa and Manila, just as in Chicago, the same evidence is present that our boasted "civilization" rests entirely upon a basis of fraud and robbery, which finds its starting point in the exploitation of the masses by the wealthy, and from there permeates the entire social fabric.

Socialist Pointers

Harrison is elected and clubs are trumps.

Municipal ownership—40 twenty years—perhaps.

The "gray wolves" also ran—and most of them got there.

The campaign is always on as far as the Socialists are concerned.

The local socialist agitation took a fresh start on last Wednesday morning.

Perhaps you were not fooled on the first of April, but how about the day following?

The capitalists won. They knew they would. Harrison and Hancy looked alike to them.

Success or failure at an election cannot affect the faith of a man who is grounded in Socialism.

No vote cast for John Collins was "thrown away." Every such vote is a "step towards socialism."

Young Palmer will probably speed a good many sleepless nights trying to figure out how to help the workingmen.

The constant hammering away brings results. Let us keep pounding, and it will come some day, and with a rush.

The only trust which socialism is scheduled to "bust" is the trust which the working class repose in their exploiters.

The result of the election is not calculated to cause the traction companies to "view with alarm" their future prospects.

So far as the interests of the capitalist class were concerned, the result of the election was never doubtful for

Why should an administration elected to lead after the fashion of the concern itself with the troubles of the workingmen?

The workmen of Chicago know what they will get from Carter Harrison. They want into the thing with their eyes open.

Harrison says that "Cullerton is a ghastly spectacle of a human creature." Harrison, to say the least, has Hancy can now go back to his old job of issuing injunctions with the satisfaction of knowing that Harrison stands ready to enforce them.

The "lashing" administered by "reformers" to the "gray wolves" seems to have been mainly effective in making those animals run better in the al-

"Certain corporate interests" will receive attention during the next two years. The interests of the working class can be laid over indefinitely. At least that is what the majority of workingmen said last Tuesday.

State officials in Russia are said to be wearing steel collars to avert assassination. If the "blowhole" episode had not yet reached that country the same officials would have been neglected.

This is how the Cleveland Glimmer sums up the week's doings in the minds of readers.

About a dozen more coal companies in Pennsylvania trustified—All the independent telephone lines in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia are being combined in a $27,000,000 trust—Vanderbilt is grabbing up the trolley lines competing with the street cars in New York and New England—Two more trust companies have gone into the big North American combine—The pawnshops of New York are being consolidated—Standard Oil trust is establishing banks in Europe, Central and South America—Southern iron and steel mills and coal mines are being gathered together in a trust—Independent mills in Pennsylvania are going into a $40,000,000 combine—Two coal trusts in Pennsylvania are forming a $100,000,000 combine—Paper trust has grabbed two more independent plants—Morgan is reaching out to grab the $10,000,000 British electrical traction trust. These are a few trust

The complement of this may be found in Dun and Bradstreet's report of the number of small business failures during the week. Every day the alternative becomes clearer—Socialism, or bust.

The United States Department of Labor reports that average monthly wages for farm laborers in North Carolina are: Men, $3.91; women, $3.71; children, $3.80. Did anybody say "pepper labor?"

Great Premium Offer

It is with pleasure that the Workers' Call announces to its friends and patrons that it has obtained a quantity of the best Socialist books published in the English language to be given as premiums to its subscribers. The books which these books have been obtained make it possible for us to extend to active workers the best premium offer that has ever been made by a Socialist publication. The books which we offer are the very cream of Socialist literature, and should be in the hands of every active comrade. With a little hustling—in a good cause—it is possible for every comrade to obtain them free of cost. This remarkable offer is as follows:

With every two dollars' worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postal, paid for at the rate of 10 cents for yearlies and 35 cents for half-yearlies, we will give a copy of "The People's Marx," an excellent epitome of Karl Marx' "Capital," translated from the French of Gabriel Deville. Retail price, 75 cents. Or "A History of the Commune of 1871," by L. J. Langley, retail price, $1.00.

With every one dollar and fifty cents worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postal, we will give one copy of Eugene Burt's "Silver Cross, or the Carpenter of Nazareth," cloth bound, price 50 cents.

With every one dollar's worth of subscriptions or Workers' Call postal, paid for at the same rate, we will give any two of the following classics of Socialist literature: "Socialism from Utopia to Science," by Frederick Engels; "The Workingman's Program," by Ferdinand Lassalle; "The Right to Be Lazy," by Paul Lafargue; "The State and Socialism," by Gabriel Deville; "Socialism, Evolution and Internationalism," by Gabriel Deville. Retail price of each of the above books, 10 cents.

Also with one dollar's worth of subscriptions we will give any one of the following 25 cent books: "The Civil War in France," by Karl Marx; "Science and the Workingmen," by Ferdinand La Salle; "The Socialist Campaign Book," by J. J. Caffery.

It is unnecessary for us to dilate to any extent upon the merits of the books which we thus place within the easy reach of every comrade in the country.

"The People's Marx" has been introduced to our readers in previous numbers. It contains all the salient points of the parent book, "Capital," and presents them in a form more readily understood by the average mind. "Capital," in its original form is a book for the student. "The People's Marx" is a book for everybody. The other books which we offer are familiar to all Socialists.

In taking advantage of the above offer comrades are requested to make use of the following blank application. Fill it out and send it with your letter:

The Workers' Call, 36 N. Clark St., Chicago.

Comrades:—Enclosed you will find to pay for subscription on the names elsewhere enclosed or to pay for Workers' Call postal of which I advise you in this letter. You may put my name on your roll of agents and may depend upon me to do all I can for the cause of socialism and the success of the Workers' Call. Please send me the following books to which I am entitled as premiums on the above remittance:

The Chicago School of Social Economy.

WILL ORGANIZE A CLUB ANYWHERE.

Any comrade who will join this school as a regular correspondence student and do good work may expect a class of his own and we will furnish him the printed lessons in any quantity he may need them for the use of his students. Book classes are now being undertaken in many places. The best time for meeting is usually on Sunday.

These lessons can be studied and appreciated by children twelve years old or over. Comrade Mills will follow the series of lessons with a course for children as soon as he can arrange to do so.

Organize a Sunday school and we will supply you with the lessons. Comrade Herman Grossbach of Wyoming, in closing his review of the second lesson said: "These lessons are grand and I take the greatest delight in them. Better establish classes in every town of importance and then socialism will come by the overwhelming weight of public sentiment."

This is exactly what we want to do. The best way to help the coming of socialism is to learn how to get hold of the subject "by the handle" yourself.

This is the grand army of the wide world. A good soldier will fight best with the best arms and he best understands them. These lessons are packed full of powder which is both enlightening and action. You can tell where they have been used by the havoc they have wrought in the old school of economics and politics.

Master these lessons and no one living can silence or confound you in your defense of socialism.

Get your neighbors to join a class and study together and you will carry your town for the party of socialism before you know that it will be possible. It will cost you only three dollars for the teacher's tuition and then at the rate of five cents a lesson for the rest of the comrades.

WILL CHURCHILL SCHOOL OF SOCIAL ECONOMY

3902 Langley Ave., Chicago, Ill.

CHattel SLAVERY.

Subject of the Third Lesson Given in the Chicago School of Political Economy.

In the third lesson of the series of twenty lessons, now being given by correspondence by the Chicago School of Social Economy, it is argued that chattel slavery did not exist among primitive peoples, that slavery was caused by war, but was continued in existence by the continued domination of the master and the continued surrender of the slave, and that the change from slavery to serfdom was not a victory won by or for the slaves; it was a change effected by and in the interest of the masters.

The plan of these lessons is to state at length the facts of history of the truths of science, bearing on the lesson, with foot notes, giving the book and page on which the writer depends for support for the statements made. In this work, Comrade Mills avoids all doubtful or disputed points, relying only on the facts and principles which are uniformly admitted by the best scholarship. He then gives briefly in a series of propositions and arguments, under each proposition, his own position on the subject in hand. In these arguments, the historic and scientific groundwork has just been given and the arguments are exhaustive and conclusive.

They are given in simplest and plainest English, and any one can understand them, can easily learn them and on completing this course, will be a safe man to talk for Socialism. Here are the concluding words of this third lesson:

There was never a slave or serf unless he had him there stood a soldier. Whatever change has taken place in the forms of industrial servitude, have taken place under the eye of the soldier and in behalf of the master class. The slave has had as his only choice to serve or die. He should have died. Sometimes he did. Arrangements are now being made to furnish these printed lessons to Socialist workers who wish to organize local classes of the same sort. There are now eleven such classes in process of formation, in as many different states. Under this plan, the teacher becomes a correspondence student in the Chicago school, and is supplied with the printed lessons used in the correspondence work, in any quantity he may need them for the use of each of his students. If you wish to take these lessons or to organize such a local class, send a stamp for particulars to Walter Thomas Mills, 3902 Langley avenue, Chicago.

Capitalism in Cuba.

As an acknowledgment of the progress made by the Cubans in capitalist "civilization," the following tribute is significant:

"There seems to be an entire lack of honesty on the part of the Cuban people," said Representative Warner, who recently returned from Cuba. "They have no conception whatever of honesty, and they are at a loss to understand why persons who administer the government of the island should pay taxes. They have an idea that when a man assumes charge of a public office his duty as a taxpayer ends, and it is proper for him to take his pockets out of the public treasury."

Keep watch on the subscription number on your address label. When that number is the same as the number of the paper on which it is pasted your subscription has expired. Please renew at once so as to avoid any delay as otherwise the paper will be promptly stopped.

Does the man beside you in the shop read a socialist paper?

SCIENCE AND THE WORKINGMEN

IGNIFIED and scientific as Lassalle's "Workingman's Programme" was, the Prussian government could not tolerate it, and brought him before the court to answer an indictment of having publicly incited the unpropertied classes to hatred and contempt of the propertied classes. "Science and the Workingmen" is the speech Lassalle made in his own defense. Here it is that Lassalle, in language bold, and with a spirit of confidence and sincerity, assumes the dignified attitude of a champion of the workingmen. Undoubtedly the author is extravagant in his flattery, yet not for his personal defense, and his brilliant and systematic array of historic facts and philosophic deductions at once inspires the reader with a vision of a herald proclaiming world-wide the cause of the workingmen.

The distinct literary style of this work endows it with a special interest and a desirable quality.

A PLACE FOR WOMEN

The Socialist Movement Affords Them Full Scope.

ON EQUAL TERMS WITH MEN.

Suggestions For Facilitating the Entrance of Women Into the Organization.

It is a well-known fact that there are very few women socialists. In talking the subject over with others to find out the reasons for this, I have had various answers. From women whose husbands are socialists, who themselves are not, I have had replies of this sort: "One socialist in the family is enough." "My husband drives all of my friends away talking socialism; he can't think or talk of anything else." "I don't see any good in it; we are just as poor as we were three years ago when he first got hold of it."

This indifference, or antagonism in some cases, is due to the fact that women do not understand that their interests are the same as those of the husband, father, or brother, who has become a socialist. This they must be made to understand. We women who have studied carefully into the matter see it clearly enough. How shall all other women be made to see it, too?

In Chicago there are about 1,200 Socialist party members. Of these probably not over fifty are women. It is easily seen that to carry on the work as rapidly as it should be, "women must be reached through the men. If socialist men have not succeeded in converting the women nearest and dearest to them they have failed in their most important duty. "She knows me too well; she won't listen to what I tell her," says a brother of his sister. Then you have failed to let her know the respect other people have for you who do listen to you. Our own people do not see all sides of our character. We show them, often only the most common-place side, the part that has to do with the earning of money or the desire for food. If the sister, mother or wife could see the side shown to outsiders, she would be filled with pride and admiration for the man whom she before only tolerated, and would be more ready to listen to what he has to say to her.

"But what is the good of interesting them?" a man asks; "they don't vote; I think a woman's place is at home looking after the house." I do not mean to offend you when I reply that the highest interests of society demand that women be converted to socialism. She has to work the same as a man; capitalism takes her away from the home and puts her into a store or a factory. It makes her compete with you or with your neighbor's children for a chance to live, and, since it does this, you must show her that she must use the same means that you use to do away with capitalism. If you cannot interest her in the subject and cannot convince her that her place is in the party with you, it will be a waste of time to argue with her further, and folly for you to think of anything more serious than passing acquaintance with her. If she is too frivolous or too unstable to grasp the principles of socialism, you may make up your mind that she would never make a fit companion for a workingman. There are plenty of young women who CAN grasp the ideas of socialism, and who realize that they must study it in order to better their condition. "But," you may say, "I don't care for a young woman who is solemn as an owl all the time; I want somebody that can laugh and have a good time." There are plenty of young women, capable of serious thinking, who are also full of fun and high-spirited, and as life is filled with serious moments and grave responsibilities, a woman who is not willing to think seriously could not be a fit wife for any man.

For this reason the wives of socialists must interest themselves in the problems which interest their husbands. The unity of the family depends upon it, and the proper education of their children depends upon it. It is a fact that the wives of socialists are almost strangers to each other. There are plenty of instances where men have been active in the movement for years whose comrades do not know of the existence of wife or children. "It is also true of men who are not socialists," some one replies. Yes, but that is different. Capitalism is already here and does not need the interest or support of the wives of capitalists to keep it in power.

The welfare of the working class depends upon the knowledge that each human being in it must work for the interests of that class. A man who is a socialist neglects one of his nearest and most important duties when he leaves his wife and babies at home always, while he busies himself elsewhere in the cause. He can, at least, stay at home a part of the time and take care of the babies while his wife gets a glimpse of the world which so continually interests him, and the whole family will be helped by the change. He can spend the time teaching socialism to the children, and he will perhaps be changed to join them in their socialism.

First General Committee Meeting After Election.

LARGE ASSEMBLY IS PRESENT

Affiliated With the Springfield N. E. C. While Retaining the Name Socialist Party.

The General Committee of the Socialist Party of Chicago met in regular session last Saturday night at Jung's hall, 184 E. Randolph street, with Comrade J. B. Smiley in the chair. It being the first meeting of the committee after the election, there was an unusually large attendance. It was an interesting session, and matters of importance both to the movement in Chicago and throughout the country came up for consideration. The question of national unity, having been warmly agitated throughout the country for the past few months and the prospects for the consummation of unity of all socialist forces being most favorable, it seemed imperative that the comrades in Chicago state their position in the matter and take steps toward entering a national convention. It seemed the best policy on the part of Chicago socialists, who have stood independent from all national bodies since the presidential election, to affiliate with one of the national parties. Better work would be done for national unity in the ranks of a national party than by retaining an independent organization. Accordingly, on a motion of Comrade Frederick G. Strickland, seconded by Comrade Thomas J. Morgan, the general committee voted unanimously to affiliate with the national executive committee of the Social Democratic party, with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., the organization to retain the name "Socialist Party."

The following changes in the personnel of the general committee were accepted: Ninth and Tenth wards, Morris Kaplan and Louis Hechtman, in place of J. Weiss; Seventeenth ward, M. H. Tift, in place of R. Rothman; Twenty-third ward, R. Rothman, in place of S. Sparks; Twenty-seventh ward, No. 3, John Goebel, in place of John Sefron; Thirty-third ward, Neil Anderson.

The increase in the party membership since the last meeting of the general committee was very gratifying. Seventy-eight new members were proposed and accepted.

A communication from the Twenty-seventh ward branch was read proposing Comrade J. H. Bard for organizer of the North district, was referred back to the branch with the request that they ask the other branches comprising the North district to concur with him.

A communication from the Ladies Auxiliary recommending Mrs. John Collins for lady organizer and committee member was accepted.

Comrade M. H. Tift, of South Chicago, tenders his resignation as a member of the executive committee for the reason that on account of lack of time and inadequate street car service, it was impossible for him to regularly attend its meetings.

City Organizer August Klenke reported that fraternal relations have been established with the Polish Central Committee. He also reported that a movement was on for organizing a socialist body among the Lithuanians. The request of the Lithuanians asking for affiliation on the same conditions as the Polish comrades was concurred in. The organizer was authorized to make all steps necessary to procure permits for holding outdoor meetings and was instructed to make complete arrangements for such meetings.

The executive committee was instructed to prepare printed forms, to be used by delegates in submitting the reports of the various ward branches. A communication from the national executive committee of the S. D. P., with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., levying a special tax of ten cents per member in order to liquidate the large indebtedness accrued during the last national campaign, was approved, and a copy of the communication was ordered sent to each branch, with instruction to remit to the financial secretary.

A resolution from the Seventh ward branch recommending that the tickets for the next Workers' Call picnic be issued immediately, was referred to the executive committee for action. A call for support to an Italian socialist paper to be published in New York was referred to the executive committee, as was also a resolution calling for the publication of the platform at a constitution in book form.

DELUDED PILGRIMS.

British Wage Slaves To Inspect American Workshops.

EXPENSES PAID BY MASTERS.

To Convince Them That They Must Work Harder To Retain Something They Don't Possess.

One of the "problems" which our reformers never feel called upon to handle, but which is often of much interest to the socialists, is a speculative turn of mind, may be found in a study of the question as to whether the sanctity of the employer or the stupidity of the exploited, is the more wonderful. A scheme which is being hatched in England for the purpose of vitalizing British trade is thus worded in a press dispatch:

"London, April 13.—The managers of a number of iron manufacturers of the Manchester district have decided to send out a picked party of British workmen to the United States for the purpose of studying American methods of workmanship in the automobile trade. The districts of New England, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago, and other good centers, will be visited, in the hope of convincing the British workmen of the necessity of improved methods if they desire to retain their share of the world's trade."

Hundreds of thousands, probably millions, of American workmen must have read this notice, coming as it did through the ordinary channels of information controlled by the Associated Press, which secured its publication in every important daily paper in the country. But out of the multitude, how many recognized the extraordinary assumption with which it ended?

Possibly a few thousands only—and it is safe to say that of these few thousands 99 per cent were socialists.

The British workman's "share of the world's trade!" How much is that? We know what is coming to us, thanks to the kindness of Hanna, Dewey, and others of their ilk, who informed us last fall that the PROMISE of a full dinner pail was about our limit. But the British workman seems to be getting a "share of the world's trade." If that is the case, he is evidently better off than we are, and yet he is sent here to see for himself what tools we work with, and imitate our example by adopting the same. Yet it is said that it will be for his benefit, and, if so, it follows that the "share of the world's trade" which he now gets and hopes to retain, is inferior to the promise of the full dinner pail which we enjoy.

It would seem as if there is some contradiction lurking in this matter. Let us see if we can discover it. Are these workmen coming over here of their own accord? No. "The managers of a number of iron manufacturers" are sending them. What is their object in going to this trouble? According to the dispatch they hope that the visitors will be convinced that the condition of their class will be improved by adopting the improved tools which they will see in operation over here. The tour, therefore, is purely philanthropic in character, being engineered solely for the interests of the British workman. Those who send the party across and pay its expenses, do so with no interests of their own in view. They merely desire that the afore-said British workman may, through what he observes here, be enabled to "retain his share of the world's trade." They themselves don't want any more than they have now got. The expedition is, therefore, not a "business" one in any sense. It is gotten up solely by a few altruists who are willing to spend their substance doing good and hoping for nothing in return. It is only, of course, a strange co-incidence that these philanthropists are all engaged in the iron industry themselves, that is, so far as taking profits can be described as engaging in industry.

This explanation will, of course, be accepted as absurd by those who read it. But, nevertheless, it is exactly what the dispatch declares without any ambiguity whatever, and in the plainest possible language. And yet there are few workmen so stupid as not to know that these manufacturers are really looking after their own interests instead of those of the workman, and still fewer, who are watchful enough to detect the fact that the wording of the dispatch makes its meaning appear precisely the reverse.

It is only necessary to take this paragraph in its literal sense to show that it is an absurdity, and that it states what everybody knows is untrue. Why, then, is it worded in such a manner? Because those who construct it rightly assume that a lie, by constant repetition, will be received as truth by workmen who are too indolent to examine it for a moment. It is merely one of a thousand phrases by which the falsehood that the laborer and the capitalist have identical interests, is propagated.

BEFORE AND AFTER

Harrison's Empty Message to the Council on Franchises.

ORGANIZED LABOR IGNORED.

Municipal Ownership Promised Before Election, Vanishes When the Office Is Secured.

Carlton Harrison had been re-elected mayor of Chicago by the votes of the workmen of the city. Thousands of them were influenced by the fact that the platform upon which he stood contained a "municipal ownership plank." The speakers and writers of the Socialist party tried to make plain the fact that it was meaningless, but the great majority of the working class voters who put Harrison in office either did not hear or heed the warning. Now, however, Harrison himself comes forward to corroborate the statements of the socialists. It may, perhaps, interest those that have been deceived by his pre-election promises to read what he has now to say on the subject. Here is his position, now given in his message to the council:

There is nothing in the 30-year act, however, to prevent the city from granting franchises to competing companies to duplicate every mile of rail now laid in the city. Moreover, this act does not apply to all the old lines, and for these reasons the companies are so well entrenched that they may attempt either to dictate terms to the city or to refuse reasonable terms offered them by the city.

There is no desire on the part of the vast majority of the citizens of Chicago to occupy the attitude of confiscating property or repudiating obligations already assumed. The results of the last two majority elections state in plain, unmistakable terms what the citizens believe in and insist upon as a satisfactory settlement of the street car franchise question. The public might be summed up as a demand for:

"Compensation to the city based upon a percentage of the gross receipts."

"A betterment of accommodations."

"A distinct and definite plan for the city's street car."

"A provision for municipal acquisition of the properties at the expiration of the grant."

The first and second points are practically one and the same. When a careful study of the question has shown what compensation the companies can afford to pay, it will devolve upon your honorable body to decide the form in which it is to be paid, whether in straight compensation, in a reduction of fare, or in both forms.

"In addition to these questions the companies must be required to lay the grooved rail in all streets where property owners have laid permanent pavements, while the overhead trolley, as well as the antiquated cable, should be supplanted by the underground trolley, at the least, in the district bounded by Twenty-second street, Western avenue and North avenue."

We ask workmen, and particularly the members of labor organizations, to discover, if they can, where their interests come in in the above statement. We ask them to discover, if they can, any resemblance between what is here stated, and the position taken by the Chicago Federation of Labor on this question, who announced that the organized workmen of this city were absolutely in favor of municipal ownership as the best and only means to realize trades union demands for the workers.

These were: Better pay, shorter hours and improved conditions of labor for the men employed in public transportation. Only last Sunday the legislative committee reiterated the demand for at least trades union conditions. Can these things be found in the mayor's message? No. Yet one word, even remotely relating to them is contained there.

And we would also ask, if they consider that the men who voted the ticket headed by John Collins, the candidate of the Socialist party, "threw their votes away?" John Collins in the mayoral chair would have voted the interests of labor on this question, but Harrison, as the socialist will know, would upon the same question speak and act as the mouthpiece and agent of the capitalist class. He did so, and now we would make the final inquiry, "how many more lessons of this sort will be necessary before the workmen begin to see that the only reason they get nothing is because they place their enemies in office by their votes?"

From Glen Carbon, Ill.

The socialists of Glen Carbon, Ill., have conducted their campaign (1901) for the coming election on the basis of the following platform:

For mayor—M. B. Harth.

For trustees—Glen Carbon, Pease, Weikman and John Hornebach.

For Village Clerk—George Zimmerman.

The comrades of Glen Carbon have elected John Morgan as treasury agent. Comrade Morgan is said to be an able and convincing socialist speaker.

The little capitalist who can see no possibility of socialism in less than a thousand years usually finds no difficulty in perceiving all "vices" at Washington in twenty days.

can expect anything more than the cost of their subsistence from day to day, becomes for them a further use, there may be some grounds for believing that the "reformers" who occupy their time in determining the subsistence point for the laborer, will not be able to pose much longer as "friends" of the working class.

HOW TO SHOWS UNITY.

The result of the recent election shows beyond dispute that socialism is slowly, steadily and surely gaining the attention of the working class in Chicago. But while this in itself is eminently satisfactory, it should never be lost sight of that what has been accomplished in what yet remains to be done. It is of course true that every forward step taken makes the succeeding steps easier, and that the movement, generally speaking, gains in momentum as its volume increases. But, nevertheless, it is useless to disguise the fact that as a political organization socialism is yet in its infancy. That the rate of growth has been remarkably rapid will be plain to all when it is considered that in the space of four years the vote has increased fully tenfold in Chicago alone, and that in the few months which have elapsed since the last national election 1,400 or 1,500 votes have been secured in spite of the division which have existed within the party, and which cannot but have affected it injuriously in the recent election.

Those divisions yet exist, and it may be that the methods employed to eliminate them in the past have not been absolutely the best, though they were undoubtedly the best that could be devised. Like the rest of mankind, socialists must learn from experience, and if the local events which have occurred in this city in the socialist movement during the last twelve months bear any lesson for us, it assuredly is obligatory upon us to discover it and profit thereby.

If there is one thing that this election teaches us, that seems to be as nearly certain as possible, it is that the tactics employed by capitalist political organizations to ensure unity, harmony, and concerted action, are not and cannot be applicable to a socialist movement.

It is quite possible for the "leaders" in the Republican and Democratic parties to make bargains, truces and agreements, in the name of their respective parties with a tolerable certainty that the great mass of the voters attached to each, will rally their action at the polls. The conscious strength of these parties is embodied in those leaders, while a mass of stupid and apathetic voters merely obey their behests without question. On the contrary, the conscious strength of a socialist party must lie in the rank and file of the individuals composing it.

It is worse than useless to cry: "Peace! Peace!" when there is no peace. It is a waste of time attempting to induce certain individuals to "swing their followers" into line for united action when it is recognized that they have power to do so. Unity cannot be secured by saying, "Let us be wise: let us get together and present a united front to the common enemy." The most efficient method, in fact, the only method, by which this result can be obtained is by putting every atom of energy possessed by the party into agitation for socialism, and await the result of the first election as a test.

This method was in reality pursued by the Socialist party, and the result has amply justified the action taken. Nearly 5,500 votes were polled by its candidates on April 22, while the combined of the other two bodies barely reached half as much. This result was only possible by a strict adherence to the clearest socialist propaganda during the campaign. Had time been wasted in calling attention to the inequities, real or supposed, of other socialist parties on the political field, the probabilities are that no one body would have secured a marked numerical preponderance, while the total socialist vote would have been much smaller than it was.

If these differences must arise and run their appointed course, it will be found that the party which makes the greatest and clearest socialist agitation, will ultimately compel unity as a consequence of their efforts in that direction, and as the results of the recent election strongly corroborate that position, there is little likelihood that the Socialist party will abandon it to indulge in internal controversy and vain efforts to secure unity by approaching individuals with proposals to that effect. Socialist unity must come through socialist agitation, and an ever broader recognition of the fact that the strength of the movement must be

THE PART OF THE WORKING CLASS

It is not particularly strange that a band of reformers dubbing themselves a "Social Economic Club" should undertake the discussion of the question as to the possibility of a human being existing on $2.50 per week, seeing that most of them accept the wage system as a permanent institution, and, along with other capitalist superstitions, regard abstinence from enjoyment upon the part of the working class as a commendable action. But it is worthy of remark that most of the participants declared that the sum mentioned was insufficient to sustain life, and that nothing but poverty and misery could result if the attempt were made — a conclusion which certainly does not require a vast amount of intelligence to arrive at, but shows, nevertheless, that even a reformer recognizes a limit to the possibilities of capitalist exploitation. The daily journals also commented unfavorably upon the advisability of making the subject a matter of discussion, hypocritically claiming that in these times of prosperity nobody "ought" to attempt to live upon $2.50 per week, as if it was a matter of choice or voluntary experiment upon the part of those who must perforce manage to exist upon it.

In reading the press reports of the discussion and the editorial comment thereon, the impartial reader would receive the impression that while it was a good thing to live upon the narrow margin of existence possible, still a weekly sum of $2.50 might be considered as rather below that margin, and that while $2.50 might be made to serve, and $2.50 would permit of some things not absolutely necessary, the sum of $2.50 was positively too small to attempt to eke out a living upon without injury to the party attempting it.

But, nevertheless, the gospel of abstinence must be preached to the workers and throughout the whole discussion and comment not the slightest hint was forthcoming that better life conditions for the working class were only possible through securing to them a larger portion of their labor product, while the idea that the workers could possibly appropriate to themselves the full product seemed to be altogether beyond the conception of the "social economists" or their critics, who doubtless pride themselves upon taking a so-called "practical" view of the question. The "problem," as they see it, to solve itself into an endeavor to determine the exact sum upon which human beings can subsist without too rapidly impairing their power for producing profit for their masters. It is the view consciously or unconsciously taken by every supporter of the system by which the workers are plundered and enslaved for the benefit of the possessing class.

One noticeable feature usual in such discussions was omitted. None of the participants suggested that any individual existing upon $2.50 per week would certainly accumulate a sufficient amount to tide over the hypothetical "rainy day," which always figured largely in capitalist eulogies of the virtues of "thrift and abstinence." At any rate, as we have reached the point where the pretence that the laborers

FUTURE LOCAL AGITATION.

The time is now here when the open-air agitation will begin. While almost everyone admits the great value of such agitation, there is generally altogether too little work given to preparation. Each out-of-door meeting should, when possible, be organized with as much care as a hall meeting. Every member of the branch should be present at the beginning of each meeting. Such meetings should be advertised by the circulation of handbills or at least small "throw-cards" or "stickers," which cost almost nothing. If this is done, there will be a large audience present at the beginning of the meeting, which will enable the speaker to do much better than if he is compelled to expand half his time and energy in gathering a crowd. Then there should be some one appointed to see that literature is properly distributed or sold, and that subscriptions are taken to the party press. The platform should be prepared beforehand. There is no longer any excuse for a branch, in Chicago at least, to ask a man to speak from a chair or soap box. There is no virtue in these articles as such, and, while there is no socialist speaker who would be contemptible enough to refuse to speak from such platform if requested, the time has come when no branch in this city cannot afford to have a well-made platform from which to speak. Another thing which should be provided is a large number of application cards for party membership, printed on private postal cards, addressed to the city organizer. These should be distributed at each meeting among the audience and will provide a source of continuous membership in the organization.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

Say, what has become of those criminal prosecutions against G. T. Swift and the Armour Packing Co. for stealing water, that the Chicago American was talking so loud about a while ago. The only man punished up to date is an employee, a laborer, one of the same kind of which over 250,000 voted last week for the perpetration of a system where the wage slaves steal the water, adulterate the goods and finally go to jail for the benefit of the capitalists.

The same thing that happened to the water thieves will happen to the "tax-dodgers," about whom the same Chicago American is making such a tremendous howl. When the dust is cleared away the teachers will be lucky if they have not lost their jobs through "pernicious activity." The little capitalist will be still paying the taxes and the big corporations will be still running the government, and the laborer will be still producing the wealth upon which both capitalist classes are living.

The suppression of the Cuban newspaper "Discussion" for the publication of a cartoon representing Cuba crucified between two thieves, labeled respectively President McKinley and Governor General Wood will come as a shock to those short-sighted though patriotic American citizens who urged the war with Spain in the name of "humanity" and "Cuba Libre." McKinley and the class he represents have been continuously represented as plunderers and thieves by the opposition political press in the United States, but there was no talk of suppression in such cases. It is a different matter altogether, however, when a Cuban journal makes a similar representation. In such case the interests of the American capitalists are directly aimed at, and no reply being possible which would satisfy the Cubans, suppression is resorted to for the purpose of compelling silence.

Not so long ago every large city in the United States, where a municipal election was pending, started a "vice crusade" in the interests of "public morality." The efforts of Chicago reformers in this direction dwindled perceptibly when it became apparent that as between Harrison and Haney, the capitalist class had no particular choice, and after election it promptly and totally disappeared. In New York, however, the sham as it existed, seems to have undergone a peculiar transformation. All the efforts that were directed against prostitution, intemperance, blackmail, "divorcing the police from politics," etc., are now concentrated into a crusade to prevent expectation in street cars and public buildings, and several offenders have already been arrested and fined. In a very short time even this, the last vestige of what was to have been a "great moral awakening," will have disappeared, to revive again when demanded by the political needs of capitalism.

An examination of the recent census returns from India show that fully 5,000,000 human beings have perished from hunger during the last five years, in that country, or at the rate of one million per year. That starvation and capitalist "civilization" are inseparably bound together is proved by the fact that similar conditions, though in less degree, exist in every capitalist country in the world, and it is even more observable in those localities where "progress" is thrust upon the inhabitants with sword and flame. The British occupation of the Transvaal, for instance, has brought famine in its wake to the remnants of the population, while the presence of the forces of the "powers" in Northern China, was sufficient to bring such privation that cannibalism in the occupied region became, so to speak, the order of the day.

One George E. Rusby, a prominent citizen in New York state, has resigned his position as a trustee of a Methodist church. Mr. Rusby objects to the propagation of the gospel and gives his opinion as follows: "I hold that it is not the true mission of our church to propagate creeds and claim that their acceptance will insure salvation, but that, on the contrary, the churches' sole duty is to establish on earth a rule of love, mercy and justice." It is not unlikely that Mr. Rusby arrived at this conclusion through reading accounts of the recent disturbances in China.

Chicago postoffice employees took the opportunity afforded by the appointment of a new postmaster to protest against the length of their hours of labor. The latter appealed to them to continue for a short time and he would see that relief would be shortly forthcoming, and so the report states, "his eloquence and soothing words" prevailed. The next appropriation, which is expected on July 1st, is to be applied to their relief alone. Should this promise not be realized by that time, it is consoling to know that the stock of "eloquent and soothing words" is practically inexhaustible and can most probably be again supplied as a substitute.

Yerkes has established the London labor kitchen by the energy he displayed in getting his scheme for the Chicago, Cross and Manhattan underground railway line operation, and in the purchase of this valuable object he has, it is said, not occasionally at his desk for 12 hours per day. The expert's core gained in seeing the Chicago public, of course, makes him a formidable competitor to the slow-going Briton, who will now have to fight for the privilege of shearing the flock which he had heretofore regarded as his special property. But, as under capitalism, the survival of the fittest is assured, it would seem as if Yerkes stands a good show of getting his shears into the wool first.

It is reported that fully three thousand Russian students have been forcibly drafted into the army as a punishment for their part in the recent revolutionary disturbances. The Russian government will shortly awake to a realization of the fact that they have been unwittingly distributing the leaves of socialism in the most advantageous position for performing its work.

Always willing to add its testimony to the reality of existing "prosperity," the Chicago Bureau of Charities asserts that "the number of professional beggars is unusually large in the residential districts of the city," and demands their arrest on the ground that "some of them are much surprised and grieved when asked if they will work for a meal or the price of a night's lodging." The professional beggar and the professional capitalist might be expected to return a similar answer to the above inquiry. Neither of them are engaged in working for food or shelter. Their business, consisting in "working" other people for these desirable things.

Socialist Temple Notes.

The after-election rally on April 24 was an enthusiastic gathering. Comrade John Collins started the next campaign with a stirring speech. Comrade Collins wants a rest, but there is no rest for the agitator. The vote on the west side was very encouraging.

Comrade May Wood Simons gave a very instructive address Thursday evening. Her appeal to the ladies to join the movement itself and not wait a sex movement, was right to the point. Comrade A. M. Simons advanced class in socialism, at 7:30 Sunday, is growing in numbers and interest. Last Sunday's lesson was on "Man as a Tool-Using Animal." Come with the whole family Sunday afternoon.

Comrade A. M. Simons spoke of the "Lessons of the Recent Election" at 7:30. He was followed by Comrade Lockwood, who gave a chart lecture and told of his work on the socialist wagon and explained what he hoped to accomplish by the proposed automobile. If Comrade Lockwood can induce the rest of his board, including the Appeal to Reason, to stand for unity as he does, we will be very happy. His lecture Sunday was greatly enjoyed.

A large audience greeted Comrade J. Stitt Wilson Sunday evening. The seats were all taken. With the co-operative commonwealth as a basis, Comrade Wilson has a vision of the ideal man which is inspiring.

The music of the Schubert String Quartet was up to the usual high standard. The violin solo by Miss Welch was beautifully rendered. Miss Welch is a pupil of Comrade Kellogg. The speaker for Tuesday, April 27th, is Comrade B. Berlin. Tell your neighbors.

Remember, the ladies provide a lecture for every Thursday evening. Come to the Socialist School at 7:30 Sunday and stay for the party meeting at 8:30, addressed by M. Kaplan.

The Schubert Quartet plays at 8. Comrade Strickland will speak on "The Present Opportunity of Socialism."

Street meeting on Madison street whenever the weather permits. Remember the entertainment given by the ladies Saturday, April 24th. Comrade W. T. Mills will speak. Refreshments will be served. Tickets, 25 cents, which pays for the entire evening.

King Must Amuse Himself.

This is the way an English correspondent ends a letter on the situation in England:

Indeed, in spite of all lamentation over our growing poverty, the signs of luxurious living increase rather than abate. The crowd off to the seaside for Easter is as great as ever and places of amusement in towns are thronged not merely by the multitude at low prices, but by wealthy, or, at least, the spendthrift classes, whose numbers appear to be increasing the more labor and commodity become dearer. What can the King do but follow the fashion?

And the only thing the capitalist class can suggest to keep their head above water as a class, is that the British workingmen accept longer hours at shorter pay and get a move on their shins while working. We suggest that the British workingmen get a move on themselves toward voting for their class interests. If they can be persuaded to think that by investigating how American workingmen work, and trying to equal them, they will be securing their welfare as Englishmen, they will get left for the American workingmen are jealous of their record for fast work, and they have the leaders who will see to it that their lead is maintained at all hazards. Let the English workers take the opportunity they have of showing their brothers over here what fools they are, instead of making asses of themselves by trying to outdo them in work. Let them vote themselves into power and get these fellows whom the correspondent A. G. Wilson designates as the spendthrift classes to meretricious work, or give them the alternative of going without the wherewithal to indulge in luxury.

Not a capitalist paper in this city mentioned the official returns of the socialist vote in their columns. The same policy that carefully conceals the fact of the class struggle accounts for this lack of "journalistic enterprise" on their part.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Ann Arbor, Mich

A Century of Economic Development.

Translated from the Polish.

With the development of the new form of production, commerce grew to be of ever greater importance. For the classic handicraft and peasant form of production, commerce was not indispensable. The peasant and the artisan could buy their means of production directly from the producer and sell their commodities directly to the consumer. The more capitalist production develops the more important and indispensable becomes the evolution of commerce.

The whole present production, as well as the maintenance of the population, depends upon the normal condition of commerce. To-day its significance for the entire social life has grown to dimensions so colossal that even war is becoming less possible; in case of its outbreak, the interruption of commerce would bring to the people much greater destruction than even the most powerful guns or the battlefield. Of no less importance became the development of credit. The latter has entirely changed its economical significance. The medieval usurer was nothing but a parasite on the body social. The credit of the nineteenth century grew to be one of the most powerful levers of economic evolution. Financial institutions and banks became the reservoirs into which there flows all the money of the non-capitalists, and from which they come into the hands of capitalists for the purpose of enlivening production and commerce. Thanks to these reservoirs, the riches of the churches and nobility alike, with the savings of servants and laborers, are transferred into the hands of the capitalists, enter into the process of production and commerce, and become thus capital. On the other hand, the surplus capital accumulated by the capitalists themselves, who are not in a position to use them in productive enterprises, passes through these reservoirs into the hands of other capitalists. Thus the least stimulation is able to spread industry more quickly than ever before. But, on the other hand, credit is to-day more sensitive than ever. It serves not only to enliven the process of production and to sharpen the economical contradictions, but it shakes also the foundations of the whole mechanism of production at the moment when the creditors, in fear of losses, begin to withdraw their capital from the financial institutions.

The ever closer connection of commerce and credit with production has not only caused the latter's previously unheard-of development, but has also brought about a further division of economic functions. The merchant combined in his person, not only the functions of buying and selling, but he also imported commodities, divided, assorted, and stored them. Now there not only exist separate wholesale and retail divisions, but also separate transportation and storing enterprises (transportation companies' elevators and store-houses). At last buying and selling have so largely separated from the other functions of the merchant, that "on change" goods that are far away, or have not been produced yet, are bought and sold; one sells commodities though he does not need them. At this place we should also consider the development of the bank's functions. If previously we could not imagine a capitalist without a store-house of gold, so now the functions of paying and receiving, as well as the administration of money passed into the hands of the banker, by whose mediation the modern capitalist regulates all his money transactions, notwithstanding all the different economical functions have grown to be entirely separated and become entirely independent from each other, so is this independence only a superficial, a legal one.

In reality, however, the dependence of the various economic functions does not lessen the dependence of the different economic classes, but increases it. The weakening of one of these functions suffices to bring all the others to a standstill and dissolution.

In this manner the economy of one country and with further evolution—of the whole world grows into one great and exceedingly intricate mechanism, which is growing every day more and more sensitive to the slightest disturbances. In truth, no other mode of production ever required such a systematic and strong organization as the capitalist; because none was so intricate and sensitive. The present mode of production requires that all the wheels of the big productive and distributive mechanism, no matter how small and insignificant they may be, work regularly, under the penalty of a crash of the whole artificial edifice. While economically the separate individual enterprises become more and more dependent upon each other, legally they remain independent. Owing to this the adjustment of the different groups, the regulation of economical life is left to the capitalist class.

At last one of the most important steps in the economic evolution of the nineteenth century was the coming forward of industrial capitalism and the new kind of capital, commercial and bank (credit) capital, drew their income and grew by means of usury and commerce for various services rendered in different branches and classes of society. The surplus value. With the development of industry grew the importance of the industrial capital, which is to-day the main source from which comes the wealth of not only the factory owner, but also that of the whole capitalist class. Whoever desires to understand the present true character of capital, must accept as the starting point of his studies the investigation of industrial capital. The income from industrial capital divides itself between several categories of the proprietary class. A part of that income goes to the landowners under the name of ground rent. The ground rent owes its existence not so much to the natural limitation of the earth's surface, that cannot be increased at will, as to the fact that land, so necessary to agriculture and industrial production (building-ground for factories, etc.), became a monopoly, before it was taken for the above uses. The capitalist wishing to build a factory of house must rent the ground or buy it, and is thus compelled to divide his profits with the landlord, or, to use the current language, to pay him the rent.

For this reason ground rent is the higher, the more desirable, becomes the land to the industrial capital, the nearer to the industrial centers is its situation, and reaches its climax in the modern populated cities, where it causes the so-called tenement question.

On the other hand, land, under like conditions, brings a higher income the more fruitful it is and the better its situation. Therefore, by reason of the economic evolution of the nineteenth century in all the civilized countries, there took place a rise of rent, and the development of the agricultural credit—land with a higher ground rent could not bear the competition of the land of the industrially undeveloped countries, where the ground rent was lower.

The further consequence of the economic evolution of the twentieth century was the increasing of profits as the result of the increased productivity of labor and the fall of the rate of interest from capital, or, to say the same thing in a different way, the lowering of income from a given unit of capital.

At present, for the purpose of conducting an enterprise, a greater amount of capital is necessary than previously, an amount that is constantly increasing, proportionately to the development of technique. For this reason the amortization of the over-larger capital becomes slower and the rate of interest smaller. But this does not mean that the capitalist draws a lesser income, but that it is becoming ever more difficult to the small capitalist to compete with the big one. Because, even if the rate of interest should be limited to a minimum, the millionaire will always have yet a big income, and the larger his capital, the greater will be his income. The fall of the rate of interest leads to effecting the small capitalists from those fields of production or exchange in which that fall has taken place. Therefore, the immediate result of the fall of the rate of interest is the concentration of capital.

The small capitals thus ejected, either disappear entirely (as during the commercial and industrial crises) or turn to the fields in which production on small scale prevails, and in which there is no need of a big capital, or they create new branches of small production and exchange. When a certain point of evolution is reached, great capitalistic enterprises do not increase in number, but rather decrease. When this point is reached and the single enterprises have attained colossal dimensions, there comes a time when these great capitalistic enterprises begin to combine into one organism of production or exchange. While there may be some difference of opinion as to the usefulness of competition to the whole of society, there is certainly no doubt that to each group of capitalists competing with each other in the same market, competition is a hindrance, and in order to remove it, they combine and regulate production in a manner, not to overproduce the market and to uphold prices at a certain profitable level. The birth of such combines may be hastened and even artificially caused by countries with high tariffs, which protects the combines from foreign competition and adds their formation.

The most liable to combinations were the most important branches of industry, coal and iron mines. At the same time arose the tendency of combining not only one branch of industry into one enterprise, but the bringing of different branches under one management. Many of the railroad corporations possess their own mines, sugar factories and even raise their own sugar beets, etc. Another way leading to the combinations of capital and enterprises under one management is through stock companies. These latter are very characteristic because of the disappearance of the individual capitalist, while capital itself remains. And as credit became a means of putting small savings into the service of the big enterprises, so now the small companies by the division of shares into small parts, contribute to the gathering of big capitals and great surpluses, which thus grow more rapidly into economical power and make the whole social life dependent upon them.

When to all this, we add that the great capitals have the tendency to grow more rapidly than the small ones, then we will have the main reason of the economical evolution of the nineteenth century—the disappearance of the small capital from the main fields of the economic life on the one side, and on the other the concentration of the capitalistic enterprises, with the individual capitalist disappearing.

No century has ever seen such a magnificent development of the productive forces as the nineteenth century. But this development has marked a crash full of heavy sacrifices and catastrophes, in which number the commercial and industrial crises are especially to be mentioned. They are always caused by overproduction, by the tendency peculiar to the capitalistic system to produce and reproduce on an ever larger scale and the ever larger production of commodities. The continuous expansion of the markets, the creation of the international market, the evolution of technique, and credit, etc., have favored the growth of production and exchange.

With the growth of production and the greater distances of the market, the economic mechanism becomes more and more sensitive to the slightest irregularities and disturbances. Favorable circumstances that cause the growth of one branch of industry suffice to call into existence a number of other branches, but, on the other hand, some disturbance in one branch (the closing of a foreign market, for instance) is liable to produce a sudden crash in all the fields of economic life. In such times there took place a terrible loss of energy, commodities lost their value, small capital vanished, production fell, only to begin its race anew at a much rapid pace. Beside the sudden crises, which sweep along the field of production like a destructive violent gale along the sea, there ought to be mentioned the less terrible chronic crises, with their chronic overproduction and never-ceasing loss of energy.

Overproduction could also happen in the previous centuries. But commercial crises in the nineteenth century are inevitable; they are simply a consequence of the law of accumulation of capital, and the necessity of continuous production. The productivity of labor grows incessantly; the big capital enters ever new countries; wealth which the capitalist may turn into capital and invest in enterprises, increases yearly, all he needs is to find a market. The ever-increasing market is the necessary condition of capitalist production, a condition which evolves from the constantly accumulating capital.

As the enlarging of the market has not always kept pace with the growing of capital, therefore, during the nineteenth century there very often prevailed long chronic crises that have spread much misery and suffering among the working population and had not less a hurtful effect than the sudden and brief crash. Meanwhile, new markets are getting scarce and their evolution is growing slower, countries with highly developed industries have sent the accumulated capital to countries where industry was not equally highly developed and capital could find opportunity for investment.

But all the fields of action in Europe and America are too narrow for the surplus of the accumulated capital. Therefore, the evolution of the colonial policy of the last decades of the last decade of the nineteenth century.

It is reported that the ubiquitous J. P. Morgan is laying plans for a vast combination of dry goods and department store interests, at the instigation of John Claflin, the principal stockholder in the K. B. Claflin Company of New York.

Carroll D. Wright, United States labor commissioner, is quoted as saying that the employers' liability laws of the various states are practically worthless as a means of protection to injured employees. Wright always discovers something after everybody else knows all about it.

Charles R. Flint, the rubber magnate, says that he favors industrial combinations for the reason that they prevent panics, stimulate exports, lower prices, and sustain wages. With the usual modesty of his class, he mentions nothing whatever of profits in his summing up. But, of course, everyone knows that profits occupy a very insignificant space in the minds of our modern capitalist of industry.

The new Perham loom is being placed in mills at Lowell, Mass. Unlike others, it has no gears, occupies a third less space and is speedier by 50 to 100 per cent than the most rapid modern loom of today. Placed in an establishment employing 1,500 "hands," one-third are displaced. This, in connection with reported wage reductions in New England, is increasing the misery and hardship of the textile workers.—The Advance.

Brotherhood of Railway Trackmen are strengthening their trust, having absorbed the Independent Canadian union, thus bringing its membership up to 187,000. The boot and shoe workers have also reached across the border and grabbed four unions in Montreal with 3,000 members, two large unions in St. Hyacinthe, and in Quebec and Three Rivers the same result is expected. Concentration is the order of the day.—Cleveland Citizen.

The unfortunate "tax-payers" of Hyde Park have come off second best in their encounter with the gas trust. They wanted 1,600 feet for 72 cents, but the trust wanted $1 and will get it. A temporary injunction restraining them from charging more than the former price was set aside in the Appellate court on the grounds that the circuit court, which issued the injunction, had no power to interfere with prices. The middle class seems to be getting much the same deal in the law courts that labor organizations usually receive, and both will have to learn the truth that the machinery of law exists solely for the interest of the great capitalist class.

MAINLY ECONOMIC

Socialism Uses the Political Form as a Means To an End.

Many people look on the socialist movement as a purely political movement, when in reality it is nothing of the kind. Even many of the comrades speak of concentrating our strength in certain localities and electing men to office just as if the sole aim of the socialist movement were to elect individuals to office.

The socialist movement is an economic one, and it enters the political field simply as the means to an end. The means are the organization of the workers into a class-conscious political body for the subjugation of the political powers (government) for the use of its class; the end the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution, the organization of society in the interests of the working class and the abolition of class distinctions.

It enters politics simply to storm the citadel, the bulwark of the present system, and that is the law-making power, namely, the government whose every branch, executive, judiciary and legislative, is used to further the interests of the ruling, owning class, namely, the capitalist class.

It chooses to enter politics as it wishes to proceed along the line of least resistance, knowing that the workers, being armed with the ballot, and, being numerically in the majority, can at any time they see fit, by the intelligent use of this ballot, change the conditions in society to suit their own needs.

Socialists point out that classes exist to-day. They did not call them into existence, nor do they try and array them against each other. Classes are inherent under the capitalist system, and the very system itself arrays them against each other. At every point of contact there is a clash of interests between these two classes. The very system itself is founded on these class antagonisms. The name under which it is known, namely, the wage system, presupposes classes, namely, those who accept wages and those who give wages. Now, it must be apparent that any man who can employ himself, or employ others, that is, be in the control of the necessities by which he can provide for his own needs, or the necessities which others must use, such as factories, workshops, mines, steamboats, railroads, telegraph lines and land, need not work for wages. Again, one who is not in control of these things is in a position where he is compelled to accept wages, simply because he has not got access to these things and it is essential that he has in order to produce for the needs of himself and family.

So here are the classes—they who own and control but do not wish to use the things which labor must use in order to produce wealth with, who pay wages, namely, just a subsistence for the laborer to keep him from starving, and on the other hand a class having nothing but idleness and starvation, but labor power, brain or hand, as well as a different mode of production.

It must take into the market and sell to some master for wages.

These wages are a peculiar thing. Labor produces all wealth, and has produced all wealth since the beginning of time, even to the very things owned by the capitalists themselves, and which they graciously allow the workers to use for wages. Under the era of modern steam production the worker is simply a machine tender. He is the superintendent of the mechanical agent and placed to watch that it works correctly and makes no mistakes. In doing this part of himself, namely, labor power, is embodied in the finished article. The worker himself is purely part of the raw material, which enters into the finished product. To make up for this wear and tear and build up new labor power for a day's work, he is paid wages, that is, he receives back a portion of that which will be just sufficient to keep him alive, and allow him to get back sufficient strength.

He receives in wages just the cost of his production. As these wages do not equal the full amount of that which he has produced, he finds when he enters the market that he can not buy back all that he has produced, and as the class he belongs to are in the same boat, and they are by far the majority of society, it means that, as they are unable to buy, overproduction is bound to take place.

First slowly and then faster and faster the stocks begin to pile up. Soon the granaries, the mills and mines have stock upon stock on hand, and as there are not purchasers enough, the wheels of industry come to a stop and then the laboring class is punished for having produced too much of the good things of life, and like good philanthropists, leaving it go out of their hands.

Production is being carried on to-day to sell things at a profit, and not to make them for use, and so during this period of overproduction these things will be held to be sold at a profit, even though they may not, and the working class be starving. During this time of overproduction the workers are looking for work, but they are told that as long as the glut in the market exists and no more things can be made to sell at a profit they cannot be employed. It makes little difference though they and their families be starving, the means of production and distribution are owned to grind out profits and dividend, and unless these are in sight the worker cannot be employed, no matter how willing he may try work.

To the worker, however, in order to ward off starvation, access to these things is absolutely essential, and so the possession of the machine becomes an absolute struggle to the death—a struggle for existence.

Under the present system the more productive the machinery, the more precarious is the existence of the workers, and the more are they divorced from their means of subsistence; and consequently, on account of greater production and less employment, the periods of overproduction are brought closer together, and, finally, we get into a stage of constant overproduction and depression. This, then, makes it apparent that the real question before the workers is not politics, but the use and ownership of the means of production and distribution. The interests of all the workers is a common one, and from these interests, the needs and conditions of the working class, the socialist movement springs.

It calls on the workers to become class-conscious and intelligent as regards their interests, to join hands for the emancipation of their class from wage slavery, and the inauguration of the co-operative commonwealth.

In order to achieve this end, which can only be accomplished by the subjugation of the political powers by the workers, organized as a class-conscious body, it asks them to follow the lines of least resistance, namely, the ballot and the political field.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Socialist party have arranged a meeting at the Socialist Temple Thursday evening, April 12. An address will be delivered by Mrs. C. H. Kerr, of Glen Ellyn.

Local Glen Ellyn had its most successful meeting up to date last Tuesday evening, when Comrade May Wood Robinson gave a suggestive talk on "Socialism and the New Education." The village election will be April 18, and the school election April 20. Comrade Morgan is to speak next Tuesday evening.

The German Socialist Women's Club gave an entertainment and social last Sunday afternoon at 55 N. Clark street. The programme was a very entertaining one. Mrs. Otto Luck gave an interesting recitation, and Mrs. Witt gave a humorous selection. Comrade Albert Eisenman made an interesting address on "The Woman Question." The Socialist Song-club and the singing society Froebel assisted in the programme. After the entertainment the floor was cleared for dancing and the younger generation enjoyed itself until the small hours of the morning. The ladies of the club wish to thank all those who were instrumental in making the affair a success.

Professor Draper asserts that the great business men of this country will not become tyrants and overthrow the government, and adds that such a proposition is absurd. So it is, Professor. You are quite right. They don't have to become tyrants because they have already attained that eminence, and why should they wish to overthrow a government which they own? It is an undeniable sign of mental progress when even a professor is able to discern an absurdity that has been already recognized as such by many thousands of socialist workmen.

In sending money to this office for any purpose make all money orders payable to The Workers' Call, and if possible stamps are used and only cash checks accepted.

Trade Unions and Socialism

By Karl Kautsky.

(Reprinted from the International Socialist Review.)

The modern proletarian movement has two kinds of antagonists: One, the straightforward but brutal antagonists, propose to suppress and to crush it by force. This kind has already experienced so many defeats, its method has proved itself to be so abortive, that it is losing to-day, with the thinking and discerning capitalists themselves—at least for the time being—ever more of its credit. All the better does the other kind prosper that says: "Divide and rule," which, since forcible means do not avail, seeks to weaken the proletarian movement by splitting it. These opponents to the rule of the proletariat pose as its friends; they are not brutal, but "ethical," and for this reason they are all the more dangerous. They artfully try to represent different proletarian organizations as being antagonistic; they appear as advocates of sections of the proletarian movement, in order to propagate distrust and even hatred against the entire movement. Some of these precious friends of labor avail themselves of national distinctions to incite workmen against workmen, other turn religious distinctions to the same account. However, the most intelligent and eminent among their number try to create discord between the trades union and the Social Democratic movement. These people always have in mind the example afforded by England. While on the continent of Europe the Social Democracy pushes ahead irresistibly and victoriously, in spite of special arbitrary legislation and of proscriptions, in spite of June butcheries and of bloody May weeks, the Chartism movement in England came to naught about the time when the trades unions were recovering ground, and so it happened that nowhere does the capitalist class wield to-day the political power more supreme than in England, the country possessing the most efficient, the most numerous, the best organized, as well as the freest and most independent working class in the trades union movement. No wonder that this example should excite the envy of all wide-awake capitalist politicians and national economists on the continent of Europe and that their ardent efforts should be directed towards filling the reigning classes as well as the proletarians with enthusiasm for that English pattern.

It stands to reason that one nation can and should learn from others, as it can thereby save a great deal of costly experience. However, to learn from somebody does not mean simply to imitate that person slavishly, but to profit by his experience and knowledge so as to make a sensible and free use of them. If there is a trades union to be organized effectively, it is indispensable to consult the English pattern. Of this nobody was earlier convinced than Marx, who already in 1847 called attention to the English pattern of trades unions; and, if developed so quickly, this is due above all, to the "international" and to the Social Democracy, both of them influenced most powerfully by Marx's teachings.

Not if we have to determine the relation between trades union and Social Democracy, between trade and class organization, between economic and political struggle, in that case we can learn from the English nation only how that relation should NOT be.

Never has this become more evident than just at present, when, in consequence of the collapse of the liberal party, even the PRETENSE of a political influence on the part of the English working class has disappeared and when English trades unionism is anxiously striving to promote the formation of a new independent workingmen's party, in which endeavor it finds itself, however, most hampered by the instincts it itself has fostered, the instinct of trade egoism and of disregard of all efforts towards a more remote and higher aim. The present stage of the English trades union movement is the least suitable one to make its previously existing relation to politics appear in an ideal light.

It has often been remarked that the trades union movement, where it does not go hand in hand with an independent political movement, i. e., where it is not saturated with socialist thought, acquires somewhat the character of the bygone guilds.

It has also frequently been pointed out that this guild-like character shows itself first of all in that the workingmen organized in trades unions form and constitute, similar to the old-time journeymen organized in guilds, an aristocracy of labor, which isolates itself from the unorganized workmen, which raises itself above them, which pushes them down the deeper into the social mire, the quicker it elevates itself. Where, however, the trades union movement is at work in the closest intellectual contact with the political movement of an independent labor party, there the trades unionists come to be the chosen champions of the entire proletariat, there they improve, along with their own condition, that of their class. The increase of duties, resulting therefrom, is compensated by having the economic and political basis of their achievements rendered more solid than that of the achievements of a labor aristocracy. The more such an aristocracy of labor leaves the unskilled, unprotected, unorganized parts of the proletariat to shift economically for themselves, the more the trades unionists become the chosen champions of the entire proletariat, the more they improve, along with their own condition, that of their class. The increase of duties, resulting therefrom, is compensated by having the economic and political basis of their achievements rendered more solid than that of the achievements of a labor aristocracy. The more such an aristocracy of labor leaves the unskilled, unprotected, unorganized parts of the proletariat to shift economically for themselves, the more the trades unionists become the chosen champions of the entire proletariat, the more they improve, along with their own condition, that of their class.

a political party, but always only one part, and indeed often a powerful one, of such a party. If they leave the unorganized workmen to their own political resources instead of uniting with them in one political party, then the former must become the tail of a capitalist party that pretends to be friendly to the workmen, but which, no matter how it tries to protect the interests of its proletarian voters, can never master the necessary courage in face of capitalism and is doomed to fall the sooner, the more the proletarian character of its followers clashes with its own capitalist notions—just as manifested to us by the fate of the liberal party in England.

Then again, of course, England also shows us how much the success of the Social Democracy stands in need of the foundation afforded by a powerful trades union movement. Though, as the writer of this article has been assured by people that have been Chartists themselves, there was a closer connection between Chartism and trades unionism than modern historians of trades unionism suppose, it is a fact that the time when Chartism flourished was one of depression for trades unions; Chartism had no strong and steady economic organizations to fall back upon, and that explains much of the unsteadiness and precariousness of its development.

Modern English socialism, however, placed itself in its beginnings in pretty strong opposition to the trades union movement; a stand that may be easily explained, considering the former conservative character of the trades unions; but which, nevertheless, was wrong and of no advantage to the English Social Democracy. But in the course of time the trades unionists have lost more and more their antipathies to socialism, and, vice versa, the socialists have ever more been losing their antipathies to trades unionism, so we find at an ever-increasing rate the same people at work in both camps, and therefore we may expect that slowly but surely a relation between the two movements will be established similar to the one that has always existed with us in the labor movement of Austria and Germany.

In view of all this we have not the slightest reason to look for outside patterns regarding the relation between trades unions and Social Democracy. The isolation of the trades unions from the balance of the proletariat has not only the injurious effect of splitting and weakening the latter, but it also curtails its chances of development.

We have compared the isolated trades unions to the journeymen's organizations of old—the guilds. What has become of the latter? They have disappeared along with the system of guilds without the least share on their part in surmounting this system. Their prosperity was linked most intimately with that of the masters of the guilds; the downfall of the latter meant that of the former. The same fate is menacing the isolated trade union; it can only prosper if the capitalist system of production at home continues to progress. It progress is very closely bound up with constant and swift enlargement of the capitalist sphere of power and exploitation. As soon as the industrial capital of a country has once reached the limit of its ability to expand briskly, then the time of decline sets in for the isolated trades unions. Such a decline manifests itself the same as with the journeymen's associations of bygone times, not in the decrease of their membership, but in that of their ability and desire to struggle. Instead of at the expense of their exploiters they rather try in partnership with them to maintain and to improve their economic condition by monopolistic isolation of their trade and by increased feeding of the people at large.

Particularly in England, the industrial capital of which has already in many lines reached the limit of rapid expansion, we see signs of such reactionary tendencies, a. g., with its textile workers, who not only frequently vote for the conservatives, but who are also reactionary in an economic sense, who rave about bi-metallicism and child labor, etc.

In the most striking manner, however, the reactionary tendency of some isolated trades unions of England discloses itself in the trade alliances, which since 1850 have appeared now in one and then in another trade. These alliances are based upon agreements between a trades union and a combine of manufacturers, whereby the manufacturers agree to only employ members of the trades unions, and these on their part pledge themselves to only work for the manufacturers belonging to the combine, i. e., only for those manufacturers that sell their products at the higher prices decided upon by the combine. In this way all competition against the combine will be rendered impossible. These trade alliances, which are praised by our bourgeois friends as labor as the commencement of harmony between capital and labor, propose therefore nothing less than to induce the workmen to share in the scheme of the combine to raise prices and to exploit the public. They are expected to assist the manufacturers in feeding the community and to receive in return a part of the booty. In this manner it is not any more the capitalist but the community that would be the beneficiary of the trades unions, or rather of the aristocracy of labor, which has turned from an exploited person into an exploiter.

However, the trade alliances between capital and labor are as great as the harm of the trades unions

WILL ORGANIZE A CLUB ANYWHERE.

Any comrade who will join this school as a regular correspondence student and do good work may organize a club of his own and we will furnish him the printed lessons in any quantity he may need them for the use of his students. Such classes are now being undertaken in many places. The best time for meeting is usually on Sunday.

These lessons can be studied and appreciated by children twelve years old or over. Comrade Mills will show this series of lessons with a course for children as soon as we can arrange to do so.

Organize a Sunday School and we will supply you with the lessons. Comrade Herman Grossbach of Wyoming, in closing his review of the second lesson said: "These lessons are grand and I take the greatest delight in them. Better established classes in every town of importance and then socialism will come by the overwhelming weight of public sentiment."

This is exactly what we want to do. The best way to help the coming of socialism is to learn how to get hold of the subject "by the handle" yourself.

This is the Grand Army of the world. A good soldier will fight best with the best arms and his best ammunition. These lessons are packed full of powder which in both socialism and in every day life. You can tell where they have been only by the havoc they have wrought in the old school of economics and politics.

Master these lessons and no one living can silence or confound you in your defense of socialism. Get your neighbors to join a class and study together and you will carry your town for the party of socialism before you know it. It will cost you only three dollars for the teacher's tuition and then at the rate of five cents a lesson for the rest of the comrades. Send a stamp for particulars to Corporation "Blue Laws" for the Guidance of Employes.

WHERE THEY GET THE POWER.

Authority to Regulate Personal Habits a Gift From Workmen to the Capitalist Class.

Perhaps one of the most valuable services that capitalism must render to its economic successor must be found in the fact that in its development, the subjection and slavery of the working class becomes always more and more apparent. The old ideas of personal liberty, which must be admitted had some foundation to rest upon prior to the concentration of capital, are being exploded upon all sides by the restrictions and regulations imposed upon the working classes, through the exigencies of capitalist profit-making. As the system develops, the "reserve army of industry" becomes ever larger, the competition for the privilege of working ever keener, and the sifting and sorting of the selected ones is carried on in a manner which every year becomes more humiliating and degrading. Never was the truth brought out more clearly that the laborer, in the eyes of the employing class, is not a man, but a commodity, than at the present.

Applicants for work in most of the large establishments must submit to an inspection, in which their most private affairs must be exposed for the consideration of the employer, to aid him in selecting the most profitable labor power on the market, and when this test is passed, the slave that has been fortunate enough to secure a master is compelled to submit to a series of rules and regulations of personal conduct, prescribed by his owner, that the fear of want and hunger alone makes bearable.

A few days ago a workman, whose name for good reasons must be withheld from publication, brought to this office, a verbatim copy of a circular, issued by the Chicago and Great Western Railway, which perhaps will show better than anything else how thoroughly the ruling class realize the power which they possess over their wage slaves. And, paradoxical as it may seem, there can be no question but that many of the employes of this corporation, whose votes were influenced in the recent election by the campaign charges, of "blue laws" brought against one or other of the capitalist candidates, will submit to the "blue laws" prescribed in this document without the slightest idea that they could be voted out of existence by united action on the part of the working class.

We here reprint this evidence of capitalist arrogance and working class servility:

Dubuque, Iowa, March 1, 1901.

CIRCULAR NO. 17.

To All Concerned:

This company has no place in its ranks for men who drink, gamble, or fail to pay their bills promptly, and any such in the service are requested to resign at once.

In future any employe known to drink or whose breath smells of liquor, or who is seen in or around a saloon, a combination saloon and boarding house, or a combination saloon and store, will be immediately dismissed, regardless of record or age in service, and no excuse or explanation will be accepted.

The service letters and references to other roads of such men will state: "Dismissed for drinking."

This applies to men when off duty as well as when at work.

The terms "drink" and "liquor" mean beer, ale and wine, as well as stronger intoxicants.

The term "employe" means engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, yardmasters, switchmen, call boys, agents, operators, clerks and other office employes on this division.

Any employe, furnished or compensated on account of unpaid debt, will not be retained, unless able to prove to the satisfaction of the superintendent, that delay in payment is unavoidable, and not due to dissolute or extravagant habits.

R. W. EDWARDS, Supt. C. & G. W. Ry.

Our informant states that, while this pronouncement has evoked a considerable amount of carefully concealed "indignation" from the "free men," for whose guidance it was drafted, it will, nevertheless, be universally accepted as a law from which there is no appeal. And this is as it should be. Those who have voted into the hands of another class the power to regulate their personal conduct in this fashion, have no just ground of complaint, when that power is so exercised by those to whom it is given.

Perhaps the most ludicrous aspect of the matter may be seen in the fact that the votes of the workmen can be gathered in thousands as a protest against "blue laws" proposed to be enacted by the community, while those promulgated by a private corporation never seem to impress upon the workers the obvious truth that the latter can be voted out of existence quite as easily as the former.

Many men also, who declare against the supposed "tyranny of socialism," are utterly unable to see that capitalist rule is even now in reality socialism.

the very "tyranny" which socialists are idiotically charged with desiring to introduce.

No matter how loudly the company may proclaim the necessity of the strictest temperance amongst its employes, no man who is subject to the rules laid down in "Circular No. 17," but will feel that his individual liberty is being interfered with, and resent such interference, so far as he dares express himself.

That resentment may take form in different ways. It may find expression in "swear words," spoken on the quiet, it may show itself in questioning the "right" of the company to enforce its regulations, or it may be manifested in a desire to show dissatisfaction by indulging in "beer, ale and wine, or stronger intoxicants," when the risk of detection may be safely taken, or it may perhaps be resented through a socialist vote.

It will be readily seen that while "curses, not loud, but deep," may redress to some extent the feelings of the individual who utters them, they are altogether useless, so far as effecting the repeal of the obnoxious regulations are concerned. It is equally true that secret indignance in the things prescribed is just as useless, while as far as questioning the "right" of the company—that is a mere waste of time. The company claims no "right" in the circular. It merely states that it will do so and so if its demands are not complied with. That circular would never have appeared, had the company not been conscious of its POWER to enforce the demands contained therein.

And this power is not inherent in the officials of the company. It belongs to the capitalist system of production solely. It appears when private property in the means of production divides society into two classes, the possessors and the non-possessors. It is upheld by the will of the majority, and as the majority are non-possessors, the whole matter ultimately resolves itself into this—that THE POWER, WHICH THE COMPANY POSSESSES TO REGULATE THE PERSONAL HABITS OF ITS EMPLOYEES IS A GIFT FROM THE EMPLOYEES THEMSELVES.

It is not likely that if the latter could reason this matter out for themselves, they would support the system with their votes. But it is just because they cannot or will not do this, that they do support it—just because of this that the capitalist class has the power which they possess over their wage slaves. And, paradoxical as it may seem, there can be no question but that many of the employes of this corporation, whose votes were influenced in the recent election by the campaign charges, of "blue laws" brought against one or other of the capitalist candidates, will submit to the "blue laws" prescribed in this document without the slightest idea that they could be voted out of existence by united action on the part of the working class.

MISSION OF THE PROLETAIRE

The Accomplishment of Socialism is the Highest and Noblest Task Imposed Upon Mankind.

The central fact in all societies of man, let them be in families, tribes, states or cities, is the art and industry of maintaining life according to the standards of the time. This fact is always obviously present, always predominant, and always focusing about itself, the chief activity of the race. Man may occasionally be a fighter, a speaker, a law-maker, a singer, a writer, a prayer, but he always is an eater of food, a maker of garments, a builder of houses, a lover of comforts. Upon this center, by whatever crimes and delusions the adjustment may be postponed, the final adjustment of all true and rational government must surely settle. Government will not remain with select men of cunning. It will not remain with a few who hold the keys of Gehenna, because they hold them, it will not remain with the word master, the sword master,

The race had always one prevailing experience, namely, its bread getting. And that, its broadest unbroken experience, though ever present to offer itself as the true basis for government art and religion, was nevertheless always missed by the fathers of their countries, and so the children of all countries have waited for one experience so sufficiently clear, strong and extensive as to be the basis of a civilization, so general and so true to its keel as might be worked by no local disturbance by no erratic prophets or conquerors, by no fictitious centers of anarchy. That experience is being carefully wrought out for us by capitalism.

The working class, always the basis of society, have been united by the moving iron bands of the modern machine. The world market, which, in looking for purchasers in all lands, all peoples amenable to capitalist methods, is making the one experience the world had long waited for. Having created out of the world's race, creed and color diversities, ONE CLASS—the proletariat—to this, the world's civilization, as I have pointed out, must henceforth gravitate: to this the governments of the world must henceforth, accommodate themselves; and the banner of this mighty army of light and leading is held by the hands of the men who agitate for socialism, comrades, by you and I.

If you are a worker who reads this, does it appeal to you how grand the destiny is that your triumphant march lifts you to as he fails himself by

Chicago American's Definitions of "Socialism."

TELLS ALL THAT IT IS NOT.

For the Confusion of Stupid Persons Who Will Not Inquire

"Every intelligent man must study socialism" is the caption of an editorial which appeared in the Chicago American of April 16th, and which starts out as follows:

"There is nothing more stupid and, of course, more unproductive, than the mis-called socialism which advocates a division of property, equality of reward, and so on."

This sounds well for a beginning, and will be accepted by every socialist as truth, with some reservation. That there may be nothing more stupid than the above may possibly be true, but there are ideas about socialism which are equally stupid and unproductive, and the Chicago American reproduces a dozen or so of them in its editorial. And here are some of them:

"Socialism has existed on the earth for hundreds of centuries."

or the gold master; it will and must settle with the broad masses. This law points the way to justice and to socialism; this leads to the center.

Let us call these never-absent activities, and the motive to them, by the general name of "production." Now draw a little circle on your paper. I say that all our social institutions should emanate from within that circle in the spirit and in the letter. The public life must be drawn socially, as it is physically, from this ring of useful and necessary labor, and for this we socialists firmly and intelligently agitate.

The world will yet enjoy the abundant blessings of this righteous and final adjustment of its affairs from the economic center and then men will see and smile at the childishness of the time when we suffered our social center of gravity to move with those groups of adventurers now known as capitalists, who have succeeded in setting ever against that fixed, natural and eternal center of society a false fugitive point, viz. their own shifting devices, whereby THE MEANS OF CONTROLLING THE MEANS OF PRODUCTION; whether money, charters, laws, swords, or any other temporarily successful lies, become greater than production itself and the producers.

There is no use attempting to understand any age, as the dilettante seek to do it, by the study of its art, its verses and its theology; for these three will be found upon examination to be unrelated strangers in every age, expressive of some experience a long way behind, or some hopes a long way ahead; as co-temporary criteria they tell nothing.

The confusion of the world in its governmental and social relations has been due to this strange circumstance, that its art, religion and philosophies were never of native growth, were always outside the camp, misplaced, plainly, unaccommodating, and incompatible with the people's actual way of living.

In fact, civilization, art and the rest of these, came in generally as immigrants or conquerors, out of kilter with those they had left behind and never getting quite into kilter with those they adopted. Thus every civilization is a history that we know of has been created and then his own gully and cruel cupid? How many capitalists to-day are any wise aware of the work which in their sin and by their sin, they have been appointed to do, that in making a free slave they have prepared a crown for the monarch of the coming age?

Am I not, therefore, warranted in devoting the closing sentences of this paper to that man of the future, the proletarian man, who to-day so unworthily holds his hand aloof from and yet so near to the helm of the world's future steership? Is this not a splendid ethical motif to the thoughtful worker? Once realizing that in the process of the ages the social center of power, liberty, progress, fellowship, joyfulness, abundance and all the blessedness of true civilization has settled at his feet—can he go back to any wallowing? What religion can offer to the workman a nobler, higher, holier reason for being right with everybody than this mission of his in the proletariat, to hold in clean hands the trust which the world has given him, to take charge of its future civilizations.

Special May Day Issue.

In last week's issue the notice of the special May Day edition of The Workers' Call contained a serious error which calls for rectification. It was stated that orders for bundles of that issue should be sent to the office of the paper, 111 South Jefferson street, Chicago, Ill., by Thursday, April 26th. This should have read "Thursday, April 25th," as the paper will appear on Saturday, April 27th. All comrades and party members are urged to see that their branches take as many copies as they can possibly use, as a special effort will be made to secure the edition on most convenient and satisfactory terms.

There are no copies of the special May Day issue left at the office of the paper, 111 South Jefferson street, Chicago, Ill., and no more will be printed.

"When Louis XI. destroyed the power of the nobles and enforced community of weights, measures and money throughout France he acted as a socialist."

"Cromwell's movement was socialism with religion for a basis and moral courage for motive power."

"The American revolution was socialism pure and simple."

"The great leaders of the revolution were socialists and the throwing overboard of the tea was 'militant socialism' with a vengeance."

"It was a socialistic movement that elected Sam Jones mayor of Toledo a few days ago."

"It was a socialistic movement that elected Tom Johnson mayor of Cleveland."

Now the writer who got this stuff together is not necessarily a stupid person himself. He is merely writing for stupid persons, which is an altogether different thing. If he were ignorant enough to really believe that these things that he mentions were socialism, his job on the American would not be worth two minutes' purchase. If he knows enough about socialism to brand the "dividing up" theory as stupid, he also knows enough to know that it is not what he represents it to be.

And he knows enough also to understand that if he really did give a correct definition of what socialism is, he could not get one line of it into the Chicago American, and he is not stupid enough to waste his time in trying. The sort of job that he holds demands that men write things that they know to be both false and stupid, so no blame attaches to him. The policy of the paper is his guide, and that policy demands that socialism be misrepresented.

THE CHICAGO AMERICAN HAS BEEN THE GREATEST POLITICAL PARTY IN GERMANY in the Socialist Party. Although its members are poor men, their enthusiasm makes up for their poverty, and the fund which they raise annually in their political campaign vastly exceeds any other in the empire.

This statement is in the main correct, the only doubtful part being that relating to the annual fund—but that is not a matter of importance.

There are probably over three million socialists in Germany. Three years ago they polled with a limited franchise nearly two and a quarter million votes. They have a platform stating the aims and objects of the socialist movement, which has been drawn up as clearly and distinctly as the best ability in the party could devise. That platform would be accepted by every socialist in the world. It is procurable everywhere and the Chicago American would not experience the slightest difficulty in procuring it. It is even highly probable that there are copies of it at this moment in their office. But will they publish it in their columns and inform their readers editorially that it defines socialism according to the ideas of the greatest political party in Germany? No. They would not entertain the idea for one moment.

Every civilized country in the world has a socialist movement, with party platforms and definitions of socialism which are practically identical with each other. You could not get the Chicago American to notice one of them, except perhaps to mutilate and falsify it.

But nevertheless the American is going to discuss socialism in future issues, as may be learned from the concluding paragraph of the editorial:

"For the information of our readers we have tried and will try in the editorial columns of the American occasionally to review as intelligently as we can, and without any prejudice, the various movements of the world that come appropriately under the heading of socialism."

That paragraph is false from start to finish. The American has never discussed socialism, is not doing so now, and does not propose to do so in the future. Their incursions are written especially for stupid persons, for the purpose of adding confusion to stupidity. They have not the slightest intention of writing as "intelligently as they can," and any of their paid writers who would be foolish enough to do so would speedily learn that things are not always what they seem. There will be no writing on socialism for the "information of their readers," as they declare, but there will be writing on things that are not socialism for the confusion of their readers instead.

The changes will be rung upon Louis XI., Oliver Cromwell, the Boston tea party, Sam Jones, Tom Johnson, theosophy, metaphysics, religion, anarchism, and every other miscellaneous ownership, the potencies, trades unions, the "Golden Rule," organized charity, "eternal principles," the "common people," and a thousand and one other miscellaneous oddities of the same nature—but socialism will be avoided as if it were a pestilence. The Chicago American cannot afford to meddle with the gaudies article, and will construct a number of counterfeits, all different from each other and all specially designed for the confusion of the individual who attempts to study "socialism" from them.

It is true that all "intelligent men should study socialism," as the American says, but that statement bars out those of its readers who expect an exposition of socialism in its columns. An intelligent man who wants information on that subject will not waste time in looking for it in a capitalist newspaper.

Before concluding, it is perhaps only fair to our readers to give a definition of socialism, the truth from which socialism springs and which is accepted by every political socialist party in the world. We quote from Marx and Engels, two socialists whose writings and views are not likely to be discussed in the columns of the Chicago American:

"In every historical epoch the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, first of all, the political and intellectual history of that epoch; and consequently the whole history of mankind (since the dissolution of primitive tribal society holding land in common ownership) has been a history of class struggles, contests between exploiting and exploited, ruling and oppressed classes; that the history of these class struggles forms a series of evolutions in which, nowadays, a stage has been reached where the exploited and oppressed class—the working class—can not attain its emancipation from the sway of the exploiting and ruling class—the capitalists—without at the same time and once for all emancipating society at large from all exploitation, oppression, class domination and class antagonisms."

Will the American start with this proposition as a basis? No, it will not even mention it, although it contains the key to the whole philosophy of socialism, and is accepted by every socialist party in the world.

IN GENTLE ACCENTS

How "Social Riots" in "Best Circles" Are to be Rebuked.

NO "VICE CRUSADE" REQUIRED

Conditions Which Produce "Easter Offerings" From Gambling Tables Must Not be Disturbed.

A New York clergyman complains that the "holy week" has been marked by "social riots" in that city and asserts that a goodly proportion of the so-called "Easter offerings" came from winnings at the gambling tables. He gives the following incident as an illustration:

Two young men came to New York from Pittsburg for Easter vacation. They brought little with them except social credentials, which took them into the BEST CIRCLES. Luck went their way, and a game played on Good Friday night, so the minister relating it said, netted them such a large sum that they left one hotel and went to another more expensive. On Saturday they were called upon by a woman, not the hostess, who remonstrated with them mildly for keeping so much of their winnings. Presently it developed that the woman was not so much exercised over the sin of gambling as she was to obtain an Easter offering for a certain charity. So, when the young men suggested giving $50 out of their winnings to the charity in question, she consented at once, but asked that the money be put on a plate in a certain church on Easter Sunday morning. This was done and has been reported in that church's Easter offering. It was not, however, put on the plate by the young winners, but by some one hired by them to perform the act, the same one in question reporting the matter to the clergyman, who reported it to the conference, expressing surprise at the generosity of the young givers, because he did not know whence the money came.

The same clergyman reports further:

Two unmarried women, officers in a West Side congregation charity, have been making a practice of attending receptions, noting the winners and calling upon them later for contributions. Easter vacation proved a harvest, and, while the clergyman reporting the case did not know the amount they had raised, since it was not put on the collection plate, he said the charity in question had recently announced the receipt of considerable sums of money from the young women interested in it.

It is impossible, of course, that this very reprehensible method of amassing money should pass without the censure of the spheroids of New York city. This is how they intend to ease their alleged consciences in dealing with the matter:

Further conferences are to be held, the ministers say, most of them SMALL AND INFORMAL, and probably attended by ministers of different denominations. The aim is, if possible, to counteract present conditions, without STIRRING UP AND ADVERTISING THE SINS OF THOSE CONDITIONS.

Verily, the clergy are "wise in their generation," and display a remarkable perception in safeguarding their material interests in circumstances like the above. No "vice crusade," inaugurated with blowing of trumpets and beating of drums, is needed to deal with the peccadilloes indulged in by the "best circles." No talk of "suppression" by the power of the law, no "scoring" and "flogging" from the coward's castle known as the pulpit, no flood of "denunciations" such as is meted out to the vulgar Teasman's protected fair joints and gambling dens, just before election, no mighty "moral waves" of regeneration—none of these "strategic" measures are applicable in this case. All that is required is a few "small and informal meetings" where "what" can be rebuked in a whisper, "without stirring up and advertising" the "conditions" which produce it.

The "conditions" must on no account be interfered with. It is better to "make friends of the masses of unrighteousness," better to become hypocrites and cowards, than venture to expose "conditions" which create "sin"—and ministerial salaries.

This "sin" against which the New York ministers are preparing to "tear you as gently as any sucking dove" is a peculiar thing. The "Easter offerings" derived from the "best circles" are quite acceptable when they are the direct result of the unpaid labor of the working class, when they represent the blood, sweat and toll wrung from those who produce all wealth. But when the "best circles" gamble with each other for what has been extracted from the laborers, and present the results to religious "charities," under the name of "Easter offerings," the action at once becomes—may it softly, as that "conditions" may not be disturbed—"sinful," but the gift will be accepted just the same.

Direct capitalist robbery of the working class is in the highest degree "moral." But the robbery of one capitalist by another (except, of course, in "legitimate business," or stock exchange operations), is a matter for condemnation—in "small and informal meetings," so that the wrong-evidence may not be badly offended. For, although "man does not live by bread alone," it is nevertheless undeniable that great inequivalence would come from a possible deprivation of that very essential article, and as the "best circles" are the masters of the board, and

A "patriotic" American whose "business" takes him occasionally to the British government offices in London (and this sort as a rule are extremely "patriotic") is indignant because the term "subject" instead of "citizen" has been applied to Americans in a British foreign office document. It seems that this office in announcing the receipt of some gold medals awarded by McKinley to certain officers and seamen of a British steamship who had saved human life in the recent hurricane at Galveston, stated that the awards were given "for saving the lives of American subjects." Probably our "patriot" has been a trifle hasty. He should have made sure the rescued ones didn't belong to the working class, before giving vent to his indignation.

It has been decided by a judge of the United States supreme court at New Orleans, that there is no law to prevent the shipment of mules from the United States to South Africa, and the suit brought by the Rev. Samuel Pearson, was in consequence dismissed. The judge actually quoted from Thomas Jefferson to sustain his opinion, and Democrats who have mules to sell will no doubt feel more at ease when they learn that they can appeal to the founder of their political faith to justify their business transactions with the British government. On the other hand Democrats who have "sympathy" for the Boers, will have to content themselves with an effort to arouse "public sentiment" against this portion of the "Jeffersonian" doctrine which has been used to assist in the destruction of two republics by a monarchy.

Press dispatches state that a number of German military officers have been examining the army recruits, and discovered that "gross ignorance regarding public personnel and events" prevailed among the majority of those examined. This will no doubt be satisfactory news to the Kaiser, as it will afford him a favorable field for facilitating his pet doctrine, that the soldiers should turn their weapons upon their own class, in defense of his "sacred person." The more ignorant the recruit is, the more likely he is to accept without question the murderous policy of the ruling class, but it is not altogether certain that the average German recruit is quite as ignorant as his masters would wish to have him. There are between two and three million Socialists there whose mission it is to dispel "gross ignorance" of this sort.

The occasion of a banquet at the Iroquois club in this city last Saturday furnished an opportunity for several political fossils to again affirm their hostility to social progress and their veneration of the ancient, discredited past. A return to the worship of that abstract fetish labeled "Jeffersonian ideals" was recommended as the only possible salvation for the republic. But the idealism of these reactionaries was speedily translated into the material by a denunciation of monopolies and trusts, which they asserted were destroying "republican simplicity and virtue," or in other words, the freedom of the little capitalist to exploit labor. In taking the name of an extinct Indian tribe the club certainly displayed a remarkable sense of the appropriate. The political ideas represented by its members will play about as prominent a part in future economic history as the dead and gone savages whose name they have adopted.

A Baltimore clergyman has created a "sensation" in ecclesiastical circles by declaring that a "deadly repentance" does not assure salvation, and that the last effort of the minister over a departing sinner is merely a "useless puff of prayer." Naturally enough, as such a declaration tends to belittle the usefulness of the clerical fraternity, it is promptly resented by them, and one indignant minister quotes the case of the penitent thief on the cross as an argument in favor of the "eleventh hour" view of the case. Come to think of it, he is in all probability correct. If a common, ordinary, disreputable thief, whose methods of business were clearly illegal, can enter the kingdom by a profession of repentance at the last moment, surely a respectable thief, whose life has been spent in robbing the workers according to law, is at least fully as eligible, if penitent. That Baltimore man doesn't know his business, or he would never have made a break of this sort.

THE INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY.

It may be well to call the attention of party members and readers of the Workers' Call to the fact, that as is usual after elections have been decided, the energy of the comrades in circulating party literature relaxes to some extent. This condition of affairs is clearly discernible in the diminished amount of subscriptions reaching this office since April 2, and it is imperative that the activity of the comrades should be renewed as soon as possible to insure the continuance of the party organ. Some time must yet elapse before the open air meetings are in full swing, and it cannot be better utilized than in increasing the power and scope of the party press. With over 1,200 party members this task should be light if the work can be properly apportioned and every member take hold to the best of his ability. The securing of only one subscriber per week by each party member does not appear a very formidable undertaking, and yet were it put in operation the financial difficulties which have intermittently beset the publication of the party organ would quickly vanish. Open air propaganda when extensively conducted always creates an increased demand for party literature, and preparations are being made to make it a marked feature during the coming summer. In the meantime our comrades are urgently requested to put forth their best efforts in behalf of this paper, by securing as many new subscribers as possible, as the need at this particular time is most pressing and cannot be neglected without serious danger.

THE INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY.

While little is yet known regarding the "Independent Labor Party" which is said to be forming in New York, it will be interesting to Socialists to watch the development of the idea. If newspaper reports are to be trusted the nucleus from which the party is to spring into being is sufficiently large to warrant the belief that a new phase in the labor movement is about to make its appearance. Twenty-one of the largest labor organizations connected with the United Council of the building trades of Greater New York, and claiming to represent 60,000 men, are, it is said, to inaugurate the new departure—if new departure it be.

The value of this movement will depend entirely upon the meaning to be given to the word "independent" by the general sense of the body forming it. If by "independent" it is meant that the association shall hold religiously aloof from the politics of either of the capitalist parties, and rely upon their own strength to enforce measures beneficial to the interests of labor, there is a future for it in working along the same lines as the Socialists and ultimately merging with them. If, on the other hand, by "independent" is meant acting as a "balance of power" with either the Republicans or Democrats in order to secure "rotations," it may be confidently asserted that failure is inevitable. The capitalist politicians have always proved more than a match for the workmen when the latter have been duped into playing this game. It requires only a superficial glance at the history of the labor movement to understand that in the numerous cases in which this policy has been adopted the workmen instead of acting as a "balance of power" became merely a shuttlecock to be baited to and fro between the expert political players, representing capitalistic interests.

These remarks are necessary because it is not yet quite clear with the meager information at hand as to which policy is to be adopted. It is stated that the party is to "fight their enemies who have dealt them a terrible blow by the annulment of the prevailing rate of wages and the stone drawing laws."

It is not at all difficult to secure the promises of capitalist politicians regarding "labor legislation" to be enacted, and it is admitted that in variously business men have been pained. But in almost every case the enforcement of these laws has been neglected, and when an attempt has been made to secure their enforcement, a compliant body of legislators have always been found to declare them "unconstitutional," and the entire force has necessarily to be acted over and over again without securing any tangible result.

The capitalist politicians are never the first to cry quits at this game. It does not weary them, they being specially trained to play it. The workmen, on the other hand, should have learned by this time that their efforts must inevitably be neutralized in the attempt to play two sham opponents against each other, just for the reason that their attitude of mutual opposition is only necessary to render the struggle of the workers for better material conditions impotent and abortive.

If the Independent Labor party is to accomplish any change for the better in the lot of the workers, it must read into the word "independent" the only possible meaning it can bear, and determine that it shall hold no parity whatever with the political tools of the capitalist parties. They should be able to see that the path of the labor movement in all lands is strewn with the wrecks of organizations which started out with sanguine hopes of success, but perished through becoming mere adjuncts to the tail of the capitalist kite. In short they must recognize the truth which Socialists long have declared that the emancipation of the working class must be the act of the working class itself. The question is now before them—"How?"

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

One of the fundamental demands of the socialists in all countries has been for an educational system that will provide for a complete and adequate education for every member of the community. One of the strongest complaints that they lodge against the present system is that the vast fund of knowledge which is already at the disposal of man is monopolized by a few, and that therefore its possible benefits to mankind are restricted to a very small minority of the population. The socialists demand that this knowledge shall be diffused throughout the entire community and used to lighten the burdens of all the people, instead of being confined to laboratories and libraries and used simply as a means to maintain the rule of the few and the exploitation of the mass.

Hence it is that the socialists demand that provision be made for the education of every child in the community. They demand that all possible obstacles shall be removed to the attainment of such an education, and finally that the education itself shall be of a character to develop the entire personality, and not a mere process of stuffing and preparation for a submissive slavery.

As has always been the case with all measures advocated by the socialists, bourgeois reformers and politicians have pretended to champion these educational measures. And as is also invariably the case, whenever an opportunity is offered for any positive action along these lines the socialists are left to fight the battle alone. Thus it has happened that while the Social Settlement, Teachers' Federation, Kindergarten Associations, Civic Federation and reformers in general have always advocated such measures, now that legislation is actually proposed to secure them, all these various bodies are discreetly silent and it remains for the socialist laborers to alone agitate to the end that the introduction of such bills shall not become wholly a

Indeed so little has been said by these friends of education that few people are even aware that bills have been introduced into the Illinois legislature, which if enacted into law would go a long way toward giving every child in this state an opportunity to fit himself for manhood and citizenship. These bills provide for the maintenance of kindergartens in all the public schools of the state, for the establishment of libraries in the larger villages and cities, for the transportation of children to and from the school, where their homes are too far distant to permit walking, for free text-books to be owned by the state and loaned to the pupils, and for a system of high schools which would make it possible for a much larger proportion of the children to obtain an advanced education. To be sure these bills fall far short of the socialist demands, especially in that no provision is made for the feeding of the children, which is demanded by any rational system of education. Moreover the socialists are fully aware that these bills are not introduced with any intention that they should ever be enacted into law. Nevertheless we feel that we would be neglecting our duty as socialists if we did not do all in our power to place the movers of these bills in a position where their insincerity might be apparent.

At the same time we wish to seize this opportunity to impress upon the workers of Chicago and of Illinois the necessity of waiting with the only party that has the courage to demand that the children of the workers of this state shall not be shut out from the opportunity to gain an education. As to the merits of the bills there is absolutely no question. The premise that an adequate education should be guaranteed to every individual is so thoroughly demonstrated as to admit of no denial. That such an education can be secured without all these measures and many additional, is equally certain.

The opposition to them comes wholly from two sources,—one open, the other concealed. The first is from the parochial schools which see their material interests threatened by the appearance of efficient public schools. These are raising a great hue and cry, but as their motive is so apparent they need no further notice. The other source of opposition is the general hostility on the part of capitalism to the growing intelligence of its slaves. This hostility does not show itself in the newspapers nor cry from the house-tops when it uses the religious bodies as mouth-pieces. It works quietly and gains its ends by a policy of suppression. This is what is threatened in the present instance. The bills will be quietly smothered in committee and nothing more will be heard of them, save when at some future time it is necessary to throw dust in the eyes of some branch of the workers by telling them how hard Mr. So-and-so worked to secure better educational "privileges for the masses."

The "intelligent" man who calls himself a Socialist, but who votes the ticket of a capitalist party because he is waiting until the Socialist vote grows bigger, no doubt expects that ignorance will lead wisdom into the same manner that ignorance by force of numbers holds him in the capitalist voting traps. It might be well to inform him that it will be necessary for him to brush up his "intelligence" before voting the Socialist ticket and in that way only can the

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

A cartoon in the Inter Ocean of April 13, represents "Cuba Libre" as a crying infant in a bath tub, stretching forth his hand to grasp a cake marked "Cuban Treasury," which has just out of his reach. The picture bears the legend: "He Won't Be Happy Till He Gets It," and is doubtless intended to portray the greedy, grasping nature of the Cuban in wanting things that belong to him. Just as if the American politician wouldn't raise him if any foreigner stood between him and the object for which he was elected, the possession and control of the treasury.

Of course the Cuban, not being "capable of self-government," could not be safely trusted with control of the treasury. He would proceed to loot it instantly, say those who prevent him from getting it. They do not see that if the charge is true, they virtually admit that the Cuban is "capable of self-government," for the looting of the treasury is the chief evidence nowadays that the political crackman who performs the job is strictly up to date with present ideas of government, as Neely, the first American politician to hold office in the island, proved in less than two months.

The question is not whether the treasury is to be looted, but rather who will do the looting. And it apparently seems that if the Cuban really "won't be happy till he gets it," he may make up his mind to accept his pilgrimage here below as a progress through a "vale of tears." There are quite a number of boys "too strong to work," as Mr. Dooley would say, who stand ready to perpetuate the unhappiness of the Cuban so far as the treasury is concerned. All looting and other "rights" in Cuba are reserved for the "boss."

And this looks all the more certain because of the action of the Cuban convention in rejecting the so-called Platt amendment. It has given the capitalist press of this country an opportunity to declare that Cuba has forfeited all its "rights" and that congress must now assume a "protectorate" over the island in the interest of "good government" and unrestricted capitalist exploitation. And so the dream of "Cuba Libre" vanishes into thin air, to await realization when capitalism gives place to socialism.

In affairs relating to Porto Rico, however, Washington officialdom has had an opportunity to pose as a friend of the "lower classes," which it has not neglected to make the most of. A deputation of Porto Ricans, who came to the capital to protest against the Hollander tax law, which was passed by the local legislature, have been turned down on the ground that they represented the rich land owners of the island, who were endeavoring to shift taxation of their property and throw the burden upon the lower classes. With righteous indignation the United States government rejected the plea of the representatives of the propertied classes and insisted that the tax must stand.

This stinging rebuke to greed is not quite so disinterested as might be supposed at first glance. Here is the reason as given by the correspondent of the Chicago Tribune at Washington: "It appears that the planters are opposing the Hollander law, because it requires payment of taxes on land. This will make it unprofitable to hold large tracts of unoccupied land. The planters wish to hold their plantations out of the market until times improve, when they HOPE TO SELL under the stimulus of the boom American occupation is expected to bring sooner or later." All of which merely signifies that the American capitalist class doesn't propose to boom things for the benefit of the Porto Rican land owners. And as to how all this concerns the laborers of Porto Rico—well there is a growing socialist movement in the island, to the members of which may be safely left the burden of explaining this latest capitalist move.

Three suicides and three attempted suicides were recorded as occurring on last Friday in this city. Five of the tragedies are attributed to poverty and despondency through lack of employment, which is a pretty fair endorsement of the competitive system, which "brings out the best that is in us." One of the cases was that of a boy of 17, the sole support of his family, who had vainly tried for months to secure work, and, becoming desperate, sent a bullet through his head. It really looks as if the most correct measure of capitalist "prosperity" will in the future be found in the statistics of suicides amongst the workers.

The test of strength which seems to be impending between the workers and the iron and steel trust is important for the possibilities that may follow. The trust for stock jobbing reasons may yield for the time being, but the struggle cannot be deferred permanently and the lesson must ultimately be learned. All the efforts of Socialists are not half so potent upon organized labor as the disintegrating influence exercised upon them by the organization of capital expressed in the trust. From the outlook it seems probable that the workmen in the steel and iron industry will have an excellent chance, to learn just how Schwab "earns" his $1,000,000 per annum.

Don't run out of Socialist ammunition. Call postals can always be obtained at this office.

PROFESSIONAL BEGGARS.

Why the Mendicant Who Piles His Trade on the Streets in Relief to Capitalism.

According to the Tribune of April 14 the pastor and congregation of the Avondale Presbyterian Church in Cincinnati, O., are at their wits' end because there are no "poor" in the parish, and consequently the church members are deprived of the opportunity to exercise the virtue of "charity." They have gone into the highways and byways seeking in vain for some one in want of "relief," but have found none such. To such straits have they been reduced in consequence that the "Ladies Aid Society" of the parish has determined to borrow some "poor" from neighboring parishes or even to kidnap them in order to justify their existence as an "aid" society. The prospect of living in a "beggarless parish" is so repugnant to these "good" ladies that they must have recourse to unusual methods to procure what the "good" people of other cities consider a nuisance.

In the same paper an article appears in which Chicago is said to be the "mecca of professional beggars," and proposes methods for getting relief from, instead of giving relief to, the beggars in question. This is how the superintendent of Associated Charities would proceed, according to the report:

"The remedy for these importations," repeated Superintendent Birknell, "is in the hands of the people. Between now and sunrise tomorrow morning the people of Chicago could break up street begging past all hope of resurrection. Simply for each citizen to resolve to give nothing to the street alms-seeker under any consideration would be the end of it."

So it seems that the "charitable" people of Cincinnati are suffering from a lack of the things that the "charitable" people of Chicago consider a nuisance. How can these things be? Is it possible that "human nature" is different in these cities? If a limited supply of beggars is a desirable thing, why should an attempt be made to get rid of all of them in Chicago? Suppose it should succeed, would not the "good" people of Chicago be reduced to the lamentable condition of their Cincinnati neighbors?

But there is after all no contradiction involved. The "Ladies Aid Society" visits beggars all right, but not street beggars. The "charitable" people of Chicago do not object to beggary as such, but to the form it takes when outside of their control. It is the street beggar that is objectionable, the fellow who advertises his condition to all and sundry, instead of applying for relief from the "proper channels," to-wit—the "Ladies Aid Societies" and other organized bodies of the same nature.

And this individual is just as objectionable in Cincinnati as he is in Chicago. He is objectionable from various points of view. He refuses to be exploited, preferring rather to exploit others, which is good capitalist doctrine. He regards all efforts to discover whether he is "deserving" or not, as unwarrantable interference with his "business"—which it is, in his standpoint. He is in some sort a visible contradiction to the alleged prosperity of the community, a thing which cannot stand too much exposure. He represents a public who don't know anything about him, rather than apply to those who insist upon getting every detail of his inside history as a preliminary to determine whether they shall give him anything or not, for he is essentially a "business man" in his way and has no time to waste on irrelevant matters; the stock speech which he has prepared for all occasions must suffice. Finally he is objected to because he usually has a comfortable home and money in the bank, which if true, is perhaps the strongest reason why he should continue on the street, instead of getting himself tagged and numbered and listed on the books of an organized association, which will take good care that he doesn't get a chance to accumulate anything under their supervision.

The professional mendicant is not primarily a product of capitalist society. He flourished under the feudal system and was considered an institution during that economic stage, and his calling was by no means regarded as objectionable. The church recognized him as a component part of society and relieved his wants without attempting to "organize" him. But with the gradual growth of capitalism the profession fell into disrepute. The system which demanded organized control of the laborers and perforce to deal with the professional mendicant and it did so through legal regulations and restrictions which have gradually evolved the organized, charitable societies of the present. Unorganized beggary is therefore out of harmony with the system of capitalism and is accordingly despised and condemned by the ruling class.

It is not difficult to understand why the Cincinnati parish may lack beggars. It is most probably a so-called "residence district" peopled by the "better classes," in which an unorganized beggar dare not ply his business under pain of instant arrest, and where the increased value of the ground prohibits the settlement of "deserving poor" in the locality. Such places exist in all large cities, and as their atmosphere is not healthy for the wandering mendicant, that individual avoids them, preferring the "business" district as a more fruitful field of operation. And this perverse habit makes him a "problem" which "organized charity" is unable to solve, and which is likely to remain unsolved until "human nature" is changed or capitalism has passed away.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Office Social Democratic Party of the United States of America, Headquarters at Springfield, Mass.

Comrades—The first of May will soon be here, when we should begin our campaign in the open air. Several weeks ago locals were notified of the proposed circuits in contemplation of arrangement, but as yet but few have replied.

Comrades, this is your opportunity to reach your fellow men and teach them their socialism, and we trust that you are all interested enough in the cause to take hold of this plan and carry it out to the fullest extent.

Therefore, comrades, take action at once and make up your minds to push the cause of the social revolution all you can this summer. The more locals participating, the less the expense per meeting will be, so, comrades, put your shoulders once more to the wheel and push hard for socialism.

All comrades are also reminded that dues should be paid promptly the first day of every month, and financial secretaries are especially requested to see to it that all comrades keep paid up. This is one of the most essential features of our propaganda work, and should not be neglected by any party member.

Comrades, attend to this matter at once.

Yours fraternally,
WM. BUTCHER, Nat'l Sec'y.

"The Strenuous Life."

The following description of an orgie which evidently escaped the notice of the numerous societies for the suppression of "vice" appears in the Chicago Inter Ocean of April 24th: "Clad only in a narrow band of black velvet ribbon fastened around her shapely neck, Miss Delano danced, to the delight of the best element of Milwaukee society Saturday night, and wound up the entertainment with a champagne bath."

"She appeared on the stage attired in street costume and went through her various movements. The gray and bald heads had seen these in costume before, and after watching her a few minutes, they turned to converse with each other and to sip their beer."

"In a little while those who glanced at the stage uttered exclamations of surprise which attracted the attention of the others. Miss Delano had begun to disrobe in the presence of the audience, and was at the same time keeping step with the music. As each article of feminine apparel was cast aside the applause grew louder."

"It took a full half hour for her to divest herself of all she wore but the little narrow strip of ribbon around her neck. That was forgotten under the inspiration and excitement of the applause which had reached a perfect frenzy. Men who had for nearly half a century been in the center of the most strenuous of Milwaukee life lost their self-control and cajoled about the hall like yearlings."

"When the imposing form of Miss Delano had disappeared behind the scenes, unable longer to restrain themselves, the members rushed upon the stage as one man and carried the dancer about the hall on their shoulders. This revelry was kept up until all were nearly exhausted."

"At the conclusion of the entertainment in the hall most of the members and the dancer repaired to the Oriental cafe for lunch. After the meal champagne was ordered and Miss Delano consented to repeat her performance. At the conclusion of the dance this time the members placed her on a table and, filling their glasses to the brim, threw the contents over her, giving her a champagne bath."

It is almost certain that the next municipal election in Milwaukee will see a demand made for "civic purity," and various other brands of "reform," by people who are recognized as the "best element" in Milwaukee society, and it is an even chance that some of the strenuous billy goats who "cavort around the hall" at the jamboree will be foremost in aiding the good work. Capitalist "morality" is truly a fearful and wonderful thing.

Every Socialist should equip himself with a bundle of the "May-day" number.

The absorption of the Havana American Co. by the American Tobacco Co. (the trust) will make things interesting for the cigar makers' international union. They will have to show some very workmanlike should not enter politics, aye, and class politics at that.

As a Contractor Sees It

By Alfred R. Andrews.

I was much interested in an article in the Workers' Call of March 25th, headed "As a Bricklayer Sees It," and signed "A Bricklayer." The article, in large part, is directed against the contractor. After reading it one might infer that the contractor is an evil person whose sole business it is to make life a burden for his employees. Being a contractor myself, I was much interested in the article. In the main I quite agree with "Comrade Bricklayer," but as socialists we must have the whole truth in regard to any matter, therefore I desire to add somewhat to his remarks. There is a mistaken idea current that the contractor is a capitalist. Just here the laboring man errs, for he is prone to think that the contractor is the cause of his hardships and therefore he directs all his efforts toward remedying his condition against the contractor, instead of looking beyond to see why it is that we have him in our midst.

The contractor is not a capitalist, neither is he the cause of the laboring man's discomfort. The much abused contractor is merely the agent of the capitalist. He is not the owner of the machine, but the man who hires the men to make the machine. The contractor is merely one of the products of our present economic system. Do away with him, and the capitalist would immediately secure the services of a harder taskmaster. Another false impression entertained by many is that the contractor does not work, except to go about here and there and collect his profits. While this may be true of a few, the great majority of men engaged in the contracting business do a great deal of mental work, as well as physical—laying out work, devising economic means of gathering material and fitting it up in place, instructing incompetent mechanics, and, in fine, bringing order out of chaos.

In any social system such an over-seer would always be essential to a systematic progress. Theoretically the profit system upon which the contractor depends for an existence, might imply large dividends. Practically, with the few exceptions, he gets but a fair living wage for his efforts in the capacity of a man in charge of affairs. Frequently even this is not the case. So it happens that the contractor is a laboring man and belongs to the laboring class, and is compensated for his services by a profit system, which to him amounts to but little more than a wage. The process may be said to be as follows: The capitalist engages the contractor to secure the labor and collect the material and see that it is properly assembled so as to form the desired structure. His profit, or wage, is the difference between the amount given him and the amount expended for labor and material. It may be more or less, and frequently, in these days of competition, amounts to but very little, if anything.

In order to compete with his fellows on an equal footing, the conscientious contractor desires that labor be given an established fee per day, so that in estimating, he may know what to depend upon. Therefore I think I am right when I say that almost without exception, reputable contractors look with great favor upon all labor unions in their efforts to regulate the wage scale. In fact, I have heard more opposition to the union from men in the ranks than from the contractors themselves. I think I am safe in saying that it is immaterial to the average contractor how high the scale of wages, or how short the hours, provided he is given reasonable assurance that they are stable and will continue in force for a certain length of time.

Another great fallacy is the idea that contractors are fighting the mechanics, and as an example the recent lockout and strike is cited. Before the organization of labor, unscrupulous contractors may have beat down the wages of their employees, but thanks to the labor unions, this is no longer possible, and both contractors and workmen rejoice in it. But this was not the cause of the recent trouble. The real cause, to my mind, lay in the desire of the contractors to bring about the very thing the labor unions were striving to attain, viz., stability in wages, length of working hours, etc. I do not say that the contractors had in mind the welfare of their employees, or were aware of the good they were doing, except in so far as it reverted to themselves. But the facts are that due to unscrupulous and shortsighted members of the unions, matters were getting in a chaotic state. Mechanics on buildings were becoming arbitrary and unreasonable. Everywhere there seemed to be a concerted movement on the part of certain members of the unions to make as much inconvenience as possible and harass the contractor to the limit of his patience. I think I may say that this was a source of great annoyance to many of the union members themselves. When matters came to that point where contractors could no longer estimate on work with any certainty, due to the chaotic state of affairs, the rupture came. It takes five to ten days to get the contractor back in his stride, and so it came about that the whole body of labor looked upon him as a common enemy. The abolition of the Building Trades Council was the bone of contention. Naturally the union men fought hard for the maintenance of their central body and they were quite justified in doing so. This organization was right in principle, but had in practice, it had become degenerate. No adequate steps were taken to purify it from within.

so its destruction was demanded from without. "The central organization" of the trades unions had conducted the affairs of the unions in an orderly manner, and without outsiders with consideration, at the same time making it their business to maintain stability in their rules and regulations of the unions, showing no discrimination or favoritism. I feel sure that the contractors of Chicago would have considered the interests of such an organization as being identical with their own. So, under our present economic system, it behooves the mechanic and the contractor to get together on the most friendly terms, in as much as their interests are largely identical. If they must fight, let them "unite forces and wage war against the man of great wealth, who desires to get his work done at less than the cost of production. The most ready way to rid ourselves of the evil fruit is to strike at the root of the tree. The system is wrong. The working man holds in his hand the key to the new dispensation. Let him with dignity and confidence step firmly to the polls and show to the world that he stands for justice and equity."

Miners and iron workers by the hundreds of thousands are having wages reduced in England. Cause? Can't compete with American "pauper" labor.

Union holders have decided to demand an increase on the minimum wage scale of $2.75 per day, and the proposition is to be presented to the foundry owners of Chicago as soon as possible.

Of the 14 "labor bills" that the grade unions brought before the Nebraska legislature all but two insignificant ones were turned down. Service, "em right. Why do they elect politicians? Why don't they elect their own people?"

Half of the employees of the American Sheet Steel Co. at McKeesport, Pa., are on strike because seven of their number were discharged for the crime of joining a new organization, lodge of the Amalgamated Association.

New York advises say Standard oil crowd secured control of coffee trust and sent price up one cent a pound. This means that Rockefeller and his piratical crew will clean up, by this advance, an additional $6,500,000 a year.

Newspaper reports state that Tom L. Johnson, the "reformer" who has been elected mayor of Cleveland, proposes to give the city a "business administration," which is about the best method of showing the workmen of Cleveland their folly in electing him.

Morgan syndicate has gobbled $1,000,000 of coal lands in Pennsylvania. Half a dozen towns with their lighting and water plants are included in the purchase, and it is said that the syndicate holds "options" on other coal lands in the state worth $100,000,000. Looks as if the name "billion-dollar steel trust" is fast outgrowing its numerical adjective.

Work on the Chicago postoffice building is in danger of being suspended unless the wages of stone-derrick workers are advanced 50 cents per day. Sixteen of the twenty-two non-union men of that industry have joined the union, and the contractor's assurance that no future labor troubles were probable have received the usual confirmation in the form of a threatened strike.

The laugh is on the tobacco jobber, a useless person. Recently the tobacco trust, feeling that it needed a few additional millions in fat dividends, raised the price on plug tobacco one cent a pound. The jobbers tried to shift the tax on to the shoulders of the retailers, but the trust stepped in and sold to the retailers at the original figure, and it looks now as though the combine is preparing to wipe the jobbers out of existence. Small loss.

In spite of the fiasco of the Ketchum blacklisting case, one Michael Driscoll is bringing suit against the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago R. R. for $100,000 damages on account of being blacklisted in the great strike of 1894. Like Ketchum, the plaintiff may get "judgment," but the prospect of cash is probably remote. It may be that when the necessary experience is gone through Mr. Driscoll will be able to understand what "law" means in the hands of the other fellow.

Perhaps you may not know it. Mr. Workman, but the "balance of trade" in your country is expected to reach $700,000,000 this year. That means that you have worked longer hours, produced far more and received proportionately less than the "pauper" laborer of Europe, against whom your masters are ever ready to "protect" you. If also means many other things too numerous to mention, but it doesn't mean that you or your class are going to get any of the $700,000,000 aforesaid. Add it is for that reason alone that the "balance of trade" is termed "favorable."

A Question of "Rights."

Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has decided that the American Federation of Labor has no "right" to induce apprentices working in a factory to become members of the Glass Workers' union, holding that the manufacturer had the "right" to employ workmen independent of any labor union, and the "right" also to adopt a system of apprenticeship excluding apprentices from membership in such union, and that an union had a "right" to interfere. If members of the labor unions when reading this decision would substitute the word "power" wherever "right" occurs, they might perhaps place themselves in a position to disavow some invaluable information about "rights" which would prove exceedingly painful later on.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

The Working Class Having Again Placed Their Demands on Power Must Take the Consequences.

The workmen of Chicago—the producers and those engaged in the necessary labor attendant upon production—have conspired by their vote to be governed by a mayor who represents the class which profits by the system under which production is now carried on.

A union man—John Collins—representing the interests of labor, has been defeated as a result of grabbing at the polls. Laborers who have nothing to lose but wretched conditions of life, have passed up the opportunity of registering a kick in the most effective manner against these conditions, and have deliberately voted for some more of the misery to which they have been accustomed.

A workman, whose whole energy is devoted to enlightening his fellow workmen, standing on a platform which proposed that the city should employ the unemployed, educate the children and feed and clothe them when necessary to their attendance at school, assist workmen on strike to better their conditions, give the best medical and hospital care free of charge to the sick and injured, produce, a workman on such a platform has been defeated by the votes of workmen in the election just past!

And for whom? And for what reason? For a man who belongs to the class which profits by the laborer's misery and which, for that reason, wishes to keep him down forever. A man who has proved worthy by his past service in that respect for his class, a man who believes it best to try to scare the workmen by showing them the gatling guns in the possession of the police, who, when he finds that fails, orders his policemen to club the workmen who strike to get enough of their product to live decently, who, whenever this doesn't accomplish his purpose, orders that the limit be given to any striker arrested for trying to keep another from taking his job—such a man has been chosen by the workmen of Chicago for mayor. He stood for 20-year franchises, for no "blue laws," that is, let the saloon-keeper alone; I profit by his adulterated beer and his foul-gut whiskey; the saloon-keeper must have personal liberty—my policemen will take care that the "drunks" are fined heavily, and we know who get the swag. We stood for the rights of capitalists. Who would antagonize capitalists. If their rights need a defender? Surely not other capitalists, for he says "the rights of capitalists." That includes all capitalists. Then he must be defending them as against others than capitalists. And who are they? Laborers; of course, producers, those who work, those whom capitalists exploit! Yes, workmen! Yes, against you! This is your Charles H. Harrison.

The workmen were asked to vote for one of their own number and for their own interests; for a union man and for the interests of working class solidarity; for a platform solely in their interests, first, last and always, and they chose Harrison and 20-year franchises.

The noise is over, the talking to workmen has ceased until another election, the friend of the workmen who has been defeated, is tired and sore and curses his luck, the friend of the workmen who was successful proceeds to take a rest, the capitalists who win hasten to brush the paraphernalia off the stage, the capitalist press urges that, now that it is over, let everybody settle down to business again, and the skinning of labor goes on as before. But, after the capitalists have disposed of their part of the affair and go about their business, confident that the working men will always remain fools and will always respond when called upon to empower an enemy, with the authority of life and death over them, the class-conscious workmen gather their what from the chaff and they find that the good seed has taken root wherever the ground has not been stony, and that there are few fools among the workmen by the number of the increase in the votes for the party of the workmen—the Socialist party.

They find that, notwithstanding all "arts of perfidy and ignorance on the part of the workers, and all sorts of cunning on the part of the exploiters, that light is entering the lives of an increasing number of workmen, and as the count is made each member of freedom's army is re-empowered by the knowledge that the ranks are swelling and that at once a larger number of workers go about to plant the seeds of socialism in the soil which capitalism is manuring unconsciously for its fruitful acceptance.

Stands for "The Open Door"

Among last week's firms perhaps the prosecution of "Hinky Dink" for keeping his saloon open Sunday, takes first rank. A simple-minded woman who was uneducated enough to take the cry of "reform" seriously, ventured to prosecute the respectable saloonman on the above mentioned charge. The foolish creature who thought that an "open violation of the law" would meet certain punishment in the courts was speedily undeceived. "Dink" owned everything in sight, and the result was a foregone conclusion. The city prosecuting attorney wouldn't prosecute, the witnesses failed to appear, and after the attorney for the defense had abused the complainant sufficiently, "Dink" was acquitted amidst general laughter. Everybody knew that his saloon was open, just as everybody knew that practically everyone of the 2,500 saloons in the city are open on Sundays, and everybody knew that there is a law requiring them to be closed on that day. And, finally, everybody (reformers and those excepted) knew that this violation of the law incurred no penalty. But it seems that Mrs. Boyd has not yet comprehended the nature of "our institutions," as she has preferred charges against the city prosecuting attorney for "neglect of duty," or some trifling dereliction of that sort.

STANDS UNSHAKEN.

Comrades of Marxian Economic Demonstrated by the Course of Recent Events.

After several years of closest scrutiny under the searching rays of scientific investigation, the economic teachings of Karl Marx stand forth more triumphant than ever. One after another the waves of latter day scientific criticism were shattered by the massive rock of facts and logic, on which scientific socialism is founded. Defeated all along the line, our adversaries retreated into the obscurity whence they had arisen. Bernstein alone still walks among the desolate ruins of his artificial conception of a steadily increasing middle class.

The course of economic evolution demonstrated only too plainly how well Marx had recognized the leading factors in the problem. Even while his recent opponents were still ransacking the dusty shelves of cuber-covered abstractions for further proofs, the busy wheels of economic progress were slowly but surely fashioning the events that ended in the tragedies of the Philippines, South Africa and China.

In the clear light of Marx's materialistic (economic) conception of history, we plainly perceive that concentration of capital and increased productivity of labor must lead to an accumulation of unemployed funds and to a glut in the market. This naturally forces the capitalist to find new fields of investment and other markets outside of the overstocked and limited territory. Hence expansion and its foster child, militarism, with their natural consequences—denial of the rights guaranteed by the declaration of independence, rise of a class of snobs and an emperor in Washington.

In reply to the tale of an increasing middle class, the defenders of Marx, assisted by the evolution of industry, were enabled to point out that concentration of the industries into fewer hands, reduces ever richer and richer people to the ranks of wage workers. For even millionaires are unable to compete with billion-dollar trusts and gigantic organizations. As such they are subject to the will of the employer as much as the poorest laborer, and proletarians in the sense that in superintending and directing they are doing useful work for the benefit of idle men. That their wages are called salary and assume dimensions out of all proportion with the value of their work does not alter this proposition. And when Bernstein quoted statistics in proof of the alleged fact that the volume of deposits by small capitalists was increasing, Vandervelde's investigations showed that 90 per cent of this increase was made up of small deposits from $5 to $100 per year. The remaining 10 per cent were large deposits made by a few individuals.

Our intellectual duels with the ineffectual disciples of Henry George always resulted in victories for the socialists, who, armed with the sharp weapons from the Marxian armory, easily pierced the armor of the inadequate and one-sided single-tax theory. For land is only one form of capital, and it is illogical to abolish private property in land and leave private property in all the other means of production untouched. It is useless to abolish rent, and to leave wage slavery intact. It is childish to cry out against monopoly in land and pass in silence the class struggle.

The often repeated argument that the laboring class is not sufficiently educated to assume the control of the industries and take the political power into its own hands, was adequately met by the explanation that the industries have been thoroughly organized by the capitalists, until now the whole vast machinery of production is handled exclusively by workmen.

Only the political power remains to be conquered. And in order to do this, we faithfully follow Marx's advice to organize and educate the workers, heedless of the protesting cry of the theorist, who believes that society will grow into socialism like a caterpillar into a butterfly. More than ever we emphasize the necessity of forming trade-unions for men, women and even children. Stronger than ever are our means for the support of the existing trade unions, even though the fanatic may raise the feeble and childish cry: "Smash the unions!" Louder than ever rises our warning: "Workers, unite!" And most earnestly let us add the fervent wish: "Socialists, unite!"

A Superfluous Recommendation.

A "Committee of Fifteen" in New York city have made the startling discovery that "vice" is under police protection, that gambling and poolrooms are being operated in open violation of the law and that the passion for gambling had increased to such an extent as to become a "menace to the community." It might be thought that this information would hardly come under the head of "news," it being the normal condition of every large city in the land to a greater or lesser degree, but what is really remarkable about it is that the committee of fifteen reported that "they do not think that the best interests of the city will be served by a violent attempt to suppress the evil." Now, what we would like to know is, how this committee of fifteen were picked up, and how it came that they could reach a conclusion so utterly different from that of the average "reformer," to whom "suppression" as a remedy for vice was the only conceivable method. The committee recommended the necessity of providing suitable places of meeting where the people might come together and discuss the evils that menace their social life and the remedy therefore.

The committee of fifteen was doubtless unaware that such places are already provided in New York, in the numerous socialist lecture halls and clubrooms throughout the city, or they would have seen at once that their recommendation was superfluous. However, perhaps it is natural enough that when the "reformer" discards "suppression" as useless, he should in his bewilderment propose means that are already in operation, but of whose existence he was totally ignorant.

Election Returns Elsewhere.

The following items regarding the result of recent municipal elections are compiled from our exchanges. It will be seen that almost without exception they report substantial gains for the Socialist cause.

Sixty-two votes were cast in St. Joseph, Mich., for the Socialist candidates, an increase of 100 per cent over November.

Benton Harbor, Mich., shows 276 votes for mayor, against 51 last November. Gain of 450 per cent.

Socialist vote in Battle Creek, Mich., amounted to 373, a gain of 253 over last fall.

Kaplan City, Kan., gives 174 Socialist votes.

Winona, Minn., comes to the front with 436 votes for candidate for alderman at large.

City election in Colorado Springs, Colo., shows 24 votes again 30 in November.

In St. Louis only a few Socialist votes were counted, the judges and clerks throwing them out in hundreds. The S. D. P. vote was given as 827 and the S. L. P. 227. St. Louis comrades recognize the farcical nature of the count, and are determined to work harder than ever to make it impossible in the future.

Sedalia, Mo., polls 117 votes for Socialist candidates, against 61 last November.

Socialist vote in Two Rivers, Wis., 94, as against 65 last fall.

Municipal election in Canton, O., S. D. P. 41, S. L. P. 45. Last November, S. D. P. 29, S. L. P. 59.

St. Clair, Mich., reports 61 S. D. P. votes and 10 S. L. P. Gain over last year, 33.

Village of Kell, Wis., elected a Socialist "president" by 113 votes to 90.

Big gains reported from Adams, Mass. Average vote for municipal candidates 218. Head of the ticket received 360. Last fall Debs and Harrison received but 70 votes in this town.

Dayton, O., shows large increase. Shows again of 103 per cent over the vote of last fall, which amounted to 400.

Socialist candidate for mayor in Fairbault, Minn., received 42 votes.

Sheboygan, Wis., reports 1,857 votes for Charles Born, candidate for mayor. Comrade Born came within less than 100 votes of winning the seat. Four Socialists have been elected to the city council.

Englewood Socialists.

Members of the 31st and 32d wards intend adding to the interest and usefulness of their meetings the coming summer through the medium of a chorus.

Several members met last Sunday and held their first rehearsal. Comrade Wehrwein, their enthusiastic and capable leader, hopes to be able to make his locality a new center of activity in socialist work. The chorus is to form the entering wedge. Any members of these wards or friends in the locality are most cordially invited to join with this movement. The meetings for rehearsal are held each Sunday at 10 a. m. at 1777 Seventy-second street with Comrade Wehrwein.

Thirty-second ward directory meets at 4410 South Halsted street second and fourth Mondays of each month at 8 p. m. G. F. Lowrie, secretary, 6401 Parnell avenue.

The Northern Illinois.

A meeting of delegates from the wards comprising the North organization district was held April 14, 1901, at 329 Sheffield avenue. Delegates were present from the 31st, 22d, 32d, 25th and 27th wards. Comrade Kasov was elected chairman and Comrade Daniels secretary.

On motion it was agreed to accept the offer of the party to pay five dollars a week to the district organizer.

It was decided by unanimous vote that we guarantee five dollars a week to the organizer.

The following comrades were nominated for district organizer: J. H. Bards, Geo. H. Sigelby and Robert Bards.

It was moved that the delegates return to their respective branches with a report of what has been done, and that we meet again to take final action. The motion carried.

The ward branches were requested to discuss the question whether the district is too large for one organizer.

On motion the meeting adjourned to meet again Sunday, April 28, at 329 Sheffield avenue, at 10 a. m.

H. N. Daniels, Secretary.

Are you still hunting for subscribers?

Socialist Pointers

What a mighty army it would be for Socialism if each Call subscriber were a Call hustler.

The truisms are teaching socialism. It is our privilege to direct the teaching so it will not go astray.

You never know who will buy a Workers' Call card, and it costs no money to ask people to buy.

Even the "amash the trust" issue is dead. Three-cent car fare is the only live issue. It is so harmless.

Everybody in Chicago should hear of Socialism from the people's platform—the soap-box—this summer.

Mayor Jones of Toledo would like to be a Socialist, but the Socialists will not let him. Cruel Socialists!

Chicago not only stands for union, but it bustles for it. Union of Socialists, not necessarily of leaders.

The Cigar Makers' union is in a fight against the trust. You can help them by smoking union-made cigars.

The truisms have no use for unions. Pure and simple methods are scheduled for a good hard blow from them.

Japan has a Socialist party. Everywhere capitalism produces the power that eventually is to overthrow it.

The special May day issue will be one that you will be proud to show to your friends. Early orders are in order.

Tom Johnson with his three-cent car fare schemes is a long way from Socialism, but he will do as a decoy duck.

Business halts at Springfield until Lorimer gets well. The Socialists, you know, would interfere with individual action.

Do the party workers realize that great things are expected of them in the way of making sales of picnic tickets?

The small cities are now forging ahead of the large cities in the race for Socialism. Go it, little ones; we are not jealous.

The legislature acts as if it were about to forget all the municipal ownership plans on which its members were elected.

The Workers' Call is your paper. You never see a banker going around with Call cards in his pocket for subscribers.

The election returns showed that the Chicago board took itself altogether too seriously, but the voters had it sized up correctly.

English Socialists want to start a daily paper. So do Chicago Socialists, for that matter, but talk doesn't do these little things.

Branches can increase their membership by securing subscribers to The Workers' Call in their neighborhood. The scheme is easy.

The law is not for Hinky Dink. It is for the fellows who get on soap boxes and stir up discontent with the existing order of things.

Mark Hanna does not have to be a friend of the coal miner this summer. There is nothing in it for him now, so they must fight their own battles.

It is heralded abroad that Mayor Harrison was re-elected on a municipal ownership platform, but it is doubtful if the mayor knows anything about it.

The secret of Pierpont Morgan's trip to Europe is out. He went over to buy a blooded pup, and he did not work for the money he paid for it with, either.

Chicago made the best showing of any of the big cities in the spring election. Chicago is all right and it is for union with a big U and the kind that sticks.

An alderman complains that street work is hampered because old men are hired as laborers. The old men should be shot. The capitalists are through with them.

The steel trust manager gets $1,000,000 a year and he don't belong to any labor union. He is only looking out for his fellow laborers to see where he can cut their wages.

The labor unions have been successful in the past because their enemies were divided. Now they meet the trust and the only place they can hold it down is at the ballot box.

The building trade laborers of New York are talking about independent political action. Independent of their brother laborers they will accomplish nothing. In union there is strength.

The number with which your subscription expires will be found in your paper. This space is No. 112. If the number of your paper corresponds with this number your subscription expires.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

THE WORKERS' CALL is published by the SOCIALIST PARTY of Chicago and has for its aim the education of the workers along the lines of scientific, class-conscious, revolutionary socialism. For this purpose only it appears.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

THIRD YEAR.—WHOLE No. 112

CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1901.

PRICE ONE CENT.

OPEN LETTER TO WM. J. BRYAN.

Chicago, April 3, 1901.
Hon. William J. Bryan,
Lincoln, Nebraska.

Dear Sir—
For a long time I have wished to write to you. I have waited until now because I knew that if my letter should reach you in the midst of a political campaign, it would receive no attention other than the usual courteous acknowledgment. The present lull in politics seems to be my opportunity. I have never met you, though I believe our firm was of counsel for you in some litigation about your book, "The First Battle." As your only supporter in this office, I have suffered enough chaffing and more serious tests to qualify me to speak to you. Besides this, I am a Pike County boy, near where you went to college and found your wife, which serves as an additional bond of understanding between us. I wrote the enclosed pamphlet on money for private circulation among my friends and as a challenge to some of them, who twitted me about my views, but refused to sit down and discuss the question to a finish on its merits. I supported you in 1896, and still agree with you on the money question; but for reasons hereinafter stated, I was unable to support you in 1900. Though I had contributed to the campaign fund in charge of Colonel Harvey as early as 1896. The campaign of 1896 and the course of events thereafter gradually opened my eyes to the fact that no party organized on old lines would ever be able to nationalize our money system, which is what the Chicago Platform in effect meant; to do this would cut too deeply into the prerogative of our "business men" to control the government for private profit. I saw that nothing would ever solve the money question short of an elemental upheaval of the working masses, and that when such a movement came it would solve many other things besides; that the money question then would become only an incidental matter. This led me to study socialism, and I became a socialist.

It requires a mental effort for one who has received a conventional education to overcome his education far enough to study socialism and find out what it means. He has no such to spare. It also requires time, in some cases, to study, but for the mental change to take place. It requires the unlearning of an old morality and the acceptance of a new. Speaking broadly, as a lawyer to a lawyer, it requires the substitution of equity principles in lieu of common law rights. The study of bimetalism and government paper money is an excellent preparation for this transition. A man who can see that a gold dollar, though of fixed weight, is not at all times and under all circumstances the same dollar, is in a fair way to see some other thing. Moreover, a lawyer can see, if he reflects a little, that legal and political institutions are amended and changed from time to time to correspond with changes in economic and industrial conditions; that economic relations are in reality the basic relations of human society; that legal relations are only the shadow of such economic relations; and that after all the "business men" are only acting in self-defense in asserting secretly or openly, as exigencies may require, their power to control the legislatures and courts of the country. I enclose a leaflet in which this idea is followed out, and which I commend to your repeated perusal and reflection. It constitutes the only rational and satisfactory philosophy of history that has ever been suggested. It is the only thing which is worthy of the name of a science of politics or science of government, a study which I believe you have endeavored to promote in some of our colleges. But you will find, Mr. Bryan, that the science of government, which is the science of the people, is the one and only science which is barred from the otherwise all-embracing curriculum of our universities. The professor who attempts to teach this science is promptly rebuffed as being overstepped the limits of science. Our universities not less than our legislatures and courts are controlled by the same forces.

Jefferson's Declaration of Independence declares that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. This is a clause that I have never quoted and commented on by you. The protection of property is not a part of Jeffersonian democracy. It is one of the objects for which the Union was formed as stated in the preamble to the federal constitution. It was carelessly discarded in later state constitutions, to give a democratic justification for what had in fact been the practice; but it is wholly subversive of Jeffersonian principles, not less so than chattel slavery, which also existed in the face of those principles. Life and property are deadly antagonistic. The crime of murder is sometimes justifiable in law; but no crime against property is ever justifiable, not even if done to save life. You may kill the body of the owner, but may not touch the ownership. Property is the Holy Ghost of the present order; no sin against it can ever be forgiven. The protection of property means the sacrifice of life. The protection of life demands as its first condition the sacrifice of the private ownership of social tools of production. Do not quibble over the word "property," which has several meanings, a capitalist property owned solely for profit, but not used by its owner; and individual property used exclusively by its owner, without the assistance of others. A constitution which is established for the protection of life, liberty and property is unworkable. Our own history proves this. It will either protect property and destroy life, which is now happening, or it will protect life and destroy (capitalist) property. The protection of capitalist property not only destroys life, it also destroys individual property, and in the long run also destroys itself. I have met many people (non-socialists) who do not believe that you are sincere in your professions for truth, justice, equal rights, etc. I believe that you are, and have always so. But I am now going to satisfy myself on this point. If I have been the victim of a delusion it is time I knew it. No doubt many of my socialist comrades have anticipated me, and have been pouring the hot shot into you with little regard for your feelings; but I hope you have not been so much offended that it has become impossible for you to learn what socialism is and what it is not. A money reformer whose views have been persistently misrepresented by his opponents, learns by bitter experience how important it is in articulating others, not to misstate their position. A wise man sometimes changes his mind, a fool never does. I know how humiliating it is to make a change. I am older than you (forty-five) and have had to change my views several times, because I have lived through at least two stages of industry. I may change them again if economic conditions change. I have none of your wit, your erudition, or gift of leading men; but I have all of the earnestness and sincerity which I concede to you; and I challenge you or any other man who has a sense of equity, to investigate the relation of employer and employee under modern industrial conditions, and then say that such relation is equitable and conducive to liberty and happiness and ought to be left to so-called free competition between the parties, as at present.

sent. The relation of employer and employee is as much a matter of public concern as the relation of husband and wife. In fact, in many lines of industry these two relations have more than one point of similarity. We all know that the stifling of freedom by this relation of employment has twice defeated you, and that it forms an impassable barrier to the election of any candidate running on a platform which does not contain the most positive assurance to the business men that their control of the government will not be interfered with, as did the Democratic platform of 1896. When this relation of employment has become the predominant industrial relation, either with or without trusts, Jeffersonian democracy no longer works as it did when tools were personal instead of social and wage labor was not the prevailing system. The abolition of this relation involves the whole question of Socialism vs. Capitalism. It seems strange that while you oppose private bank money, and favor what in effect amounts to a nationalization of our money system, you appear to favor private ownership of other things, not barren money, that seek to acquire by fraud and force, because when once acquired it works under the present order of things by fraud and force spontaneously AD INFINITUM. The love of money which is to be produced by one's labor is of a Platonic and innocent kind; it has its limits. But the love of money produced by others and which can be acquired without useful labor is a different thing; it has no limits and is truly the root of all kinds of evil from the petty larceny, called fair profits, to a full-blown war for expansion. If you put money by depriving it of the power of reproduction, you have taken away the possibility of acquiring it without labor and have destroyed in men the holy lust for it. Productive money for one man means barren labor for another man. Are you for the man with productive money or for the man with barren labor? In every audience that you address there are people longing to hear you say what you mean by fair profits and fair losses. Can you say that after repeated disappointments what shall they think of you? Will you turn back and retire from the field to inglorious ease, or will you stand up in a fair fight, ready to give and take the hard knocks that will give each other when fighting not merely for liberty, but for the very existence of themselves and their children. If it is asked what right I have to bore a busy man with a long letter, I can cite a case in point. Your own letter to Cleveland on the silver question, dated April 11, 1896, is a masterpiece of this character, and fully expresses the disappointment (but mildly) men sometimes feel towards leaders whom they formerly admired. Do not be offended. You taught me how to do it. But on referring to your letter, I now realize what a dull pupil I am. If I had paraphrased your scathing questions to Cleveland, I should have done better. Socialism is not a disease. It is a growth which is steadily taking place in all civilized countries as the legitimate outcome of the present stage of human development, more particularly as the outcome of the wonderful power that man has recently attained over nature through discoveries and inventions and the substitution of co-operative tools to place of individual tools. These tools are now such as to be utterly unfit to be owned and controlled by one individual, and when so owned constitute a hindrance to progress, being only a refined, expanded and intensified form of exploiting what was formerly slave labor. Old-fashioned chattel slavery was a considerable extent a household affair, which afforded little or no profit. There were only a few branches of industry in which it could be systematically exploited on a large scale. Hence it was profitable only in certain localities. But these new and marvellous co-operative tools, the joint product of ages of human struggle, have under private ownership the useless play of blind forces. Life surely is master, and death only the servant that ministers to it. And we ourselves, a part of life, have been, are, and will be the bearers of a great message. A message which we shall bring to one another first, to flash it forth finally beyond the earthly sphere. In all ages, the wonders of Spring brought a message of gladness to men. This joy of life found expression among ancient nations in festivals, by which either Nature itself or the gods were honored. Later on, when the Christian gospel began to spread, the priests changed the resurrection of Nature into the resurrection of the "Son of Man." The revival of matter and force became a regeneration of heart and spirit. But Christian doctrine labored under one cardinal mistake. It tried to establish a spiritual kingdom without changing the system of private ownership. It had nothing to say against exploitation and slavery. It neglected the fundamental truth, that men must eat, drink and have clothing and shelter, before they can devote themselves to religion. Out of this fundamental error grew all the irreconcilable contradictions between economic and political life on one hand, and religious professions on the other. A hungry man has no patience to listen to moral lessons. A homeless and shivering man has no heart to spiritual exhortations. While private property rules, there must be class-struggles. And since even a church cannot exist without private property it will always be found on the side of the economically stronger. Religion becomes the hand-maid of capitalism. Therefore it was necessary to preach abstinence to those who had nothing. Therefore poverty was extolled as an essential condition for preparing spiritual purity. Therefore the masses must be inoculated with the spirit of meekness and submission, for only so can class-rule be maintained. Thus we see in our days the anomaly that the most industrially developed nations show the contradictions between public life and religious doctrine most clearly outlined. Where all the necessities of life are most easily and most abundantly produced, there the suffering of the masses is greatest. Where the gospel of love is most loudly proclaimed, there the greatest brutality against the weaker members of society is manifested. And where the churches, built with the surplus values of exploitation, are most magnificent, there the victims of exploitation, the pariahs of Western civilization, are most subject to maltreatment by the established guardians of law and order. It remains for Western Christianity to reveal the most detestable hypocrisy in all its nakedness; for a Western poet to write the verses:

Life. We shall celebrate our spiritual resurrection—after our arrival at the fourth dimension. The problems of the future will be solved when their time is ripe. First we must master the riddles of terrestrial life. To fathom them, we no longer look to Christian doctrines for inspiration. A new power has arisen out of the ashes of the ashes of old Christianity, SOCIALISM. The child of the economic forces, the neglect of which forced Christianity to its doom, socialism primarily endeavors to correct this fundamental mistake. The first condition of a higher evolution is a more perfect environment. Deriving strength and comfort from our own powers, we once more change the celebration of resurrection into a festival of Nature. May-day is the expression of the proletarian hope that the new system of collectivism will triumph over the barbarian capitalism and bring to the world Justice, Freedom and Peace. But a far deeper meaning than that of the supremacy of Labor is concealed in our Mayday celebrations. Society will not celebrate its resurrection, but the victory of evolution. Not the old man in a new spiritual body, but the old man with all his powers fully developed will be the sovereign of the world. And this hope is not founded on the divine promise given in any imaginary paradise, but on the natural evolution of eternal laws. Only a strong soil and a favorable climate will produce strong plants. A healthy mind can only dwell in a healthy body. The highest state of health in a physique as perfect as possible will only be attained by a faithful observance of natural laws. Therefore we answer the ascetic's hoarse cry of: "Deny yourselves!" by the glad shout: "Live and enjoy!" Therefore we wish to establish a system of society that will enable all human beings to freely satisfy their natural wants in a natural manner. Then human nature, its lower desires satisfied and at rest, will give room to higher aspirations. The ideals of past ages will become realities. We shall at last be enabled to direct our best activities to purer aims. We are now gradually reaching the stage when man will consciously control the production of everything that he consumes and everything that he produces. Once the conquest of our economic environment is accomplished, we shall penetrate deeper and deeper into the secrets of nature. Our power to determine the form of our living will grow more and more. We are the children of Nature. And our mother is immortal. By the natural evolution of her eternal laws which we represent, we must in course of time reach a point, when we shall be able to control the power that prolongs and intensifies life infinitely. Through the conscious application of scientifically established laws, we shall reach the threshold of divinity. Our own efforts will help to create a type of man as far superior to the "civilized" type as the latter is to the primal savage. The scriptural man in the image of God will be a god in the image of man through the science of the future. In the new world we shall have the alphabet of a new life: To impregnate our lives with that enthusiasm which will elevate us beyond the depressing influence of our daily drudgery. To work—not for the purpose of making money, but for the attainment of a noble end. To devote ourselves—not to the winning of sordid gain, but to a high purpose, and to adhere to it faithfully, no matter whether it brings fortune or misfortune. To strive for the highest happiness, but for that sublime satisfaction which is the reward of being true to the divine spark in our breast. To cultivate—not business talent, but the highest qualities of our nature. To train ourselves by constant self-discipline to a superior personality. To educate ourselves to a higher world of manhood different from the standard of capitalist perfection. A manhood that calmly passes by gold and fame, when it is in want and might have them by renouncing its ideals. A womanhood that, having no law but love, has the courage to follow the bidding of the heart and smile in proud disdain at the criticism of the world. A manhood that knows no master but the eternal yearning for freedom. A womanhood that will "redeem and lift man higher yet." All this—not for the sake of winning material happiness, but for the sake of having that inner peace and harmony which is the truest happiness. A manhood that dares to distrust humanity with absolute liberty, stepping forth from the slavery of human law into the freedom of the new world.

THE PERIODICAL POLITICAL STRUGGLE—AS IT APPEARS, AND AS IT REALLY IS.

MAY-DAY—A PROLETARIAN SERMON.

Speeding through boundless space toward its unknown fate, mother Earth is once more turning our hemisphere to that source of light, warmth and terrestrial life, the Sun. Touched by the magic wand of electro-magnetism, the slumbering forces gradually awake, and the old and strange mystery of Nature's resurrection is once again enacted before our wondering eyes. Fresh verdure, new flowers, and a thousand-fold life in field, forest and stream call us forth from our stuffy dens to witness the miracle. As incomprehensible to those who, at the end of a long life, see it for the last time, as to those who for the first time become conscious of it, this resurrection brings with it a sweet and calming assurance that "whatever is, is good."

And the abiding host of human pigmies is filled with an indescribable longing, the survival of bygone days, when the race was closer to Nature's bosom than now. A great wave of hope rushes through the timid and doubting heart. This majestic procession of countless spheres must lead to some definite goal. This change of life and apparent death must be more than Turn then from lying To us slow dying In that bright world to which they led. Where fast and faster Our iron master, The thing we made, forever drives, Bids us grind pleasure And fashion pleasure For other hopes and other lives!

And while from a thousand pulpits the glad shout is ringing: "Christ has arisen!" child labor has made its entrance into these modern infernos, the factories. Little hands, too tiny and tender for such work, toil night after night amid the dizzy spinning wheels. Weary eyes, that ought to sparkle and gladden a mother's heart, watch with a tired and dull glance this never ending torture. Little feet, so weak and sore, and so long for the first faint gleam of dawn. And when the rosy children of the exploiters greet the lovely spring morning with bright faces, the hollowed little waifs totter with faltering steps toward their wretched beds. No crown of thorns or cross of Calvary needed for these little ones. Guiltless, for their souls have not had time to awake and commit any sin, they carry day by day a burden, "heavier than the weight of dreams." The premises of Christian conceptions have long been overthrown. The dogma is shattered and torn. Christian festivals are still observed, but the Christian spirit is gone. Vainly the priests are striving to reconcile the old, old doctrines with the progress of modern science. With a sigh of regret, we have laid the beautiful, but unscientific, fairy tales of the New Testament with the other cherished dreams of our early life. We shall celebrate our spiritual resurrection—after our arrival at the fourth dimension. The problems of the future will be solved when their time is ripe. First we must master the riddles of terrestrial life. To fathom them, we no longer look to Christian doctrines for inspiration. A new power has arisen out of the ashes of the ashes of old Christianity, SOCIALISM. The child of the economic forces, the neglect of which forced Christianity to its doom, socialism primarily endeavors to correct this fundamental mistake. The first condition of a higher evolution is a more perfect environment. Deriving strength and comfort from our own powers, we once more change the celebration of resurrection into a festival of Nature. May-day is the expression of the proletarian hope that the new system of collectivism will triumph over the barbarian capitalism and bring to the world Justice, Freedom and Peace. But a far deeper meaning than that of the supremacy of Labor is concealed in our Mayday celebrations. Society will not celebrate its resurrection, but the victory of evolution. Not the old man in a new spiritual body, but the old man with all his powers fully developed will be the sovereign of the world. And this hope is not founded on the divine promise given in any imaginary paradise, but on the natural evolution of eternal laws. Only a strong soil and a favorable climate will produce strong plants. A healthy mind can only dwell in a healthy body. The highest state of health in a physique as perfect as possible will only be attained by a faithful observance of natural laws. Therefore we answer the ascetic's hoarse cry of: "Deny yourselves!" by the glad shout: "Live and enjoy!" Therefore we wish to establish a system of society that will enable all human beings to freely satisfy their natural wants in a natural manner. Then human nature, its lower desires satisfied and at rest, will give room to higher aspirations. The ideals of past ages will become realities. We shall at last be enabled to direct our best activities to purer aims. We are now gradually reaching the stage when man will consciously control the production of everything that he consumes and everything that he produces. Once the conquest of our economic environment is accomplished, we shall penetrate deeper and deeper into the secrets of nature. Our power to determine the form of our living will grow more and more. We are the children of Nature. And our mother is immortal. By the natural evolution of her eternal laws which we represent, we must in course of time reach a point, when we shall be able to control the power that prolongs and intensifies life infinitely. Through the conscious application of scientifically established laws, we shall reach the threshold of divinity. Our own efforts will help to create a type of man as far superior to the "civilized" type as the latter is to the primal savage. The scriptural man in the image of God will be a god in the image of man through the science of the future. In the new world we shall have the alphabet of a new life: To impregnate our lives with that enthusiasm which will elevate us beyond the depressing influence of our daily drudgery. To work—not for the purpose of making money, but for the attainment of a noble end. To devote ourselves—not to the winning of sordid gain, but to a high purpose, and to adhere to it faithfully, no matter whether it brings fortune or misfortune. To strive for the highest happiness, but for that sublime satisfaction which is the reward of being true to the divine spark in our breast. To cultivate—not business talent, but the highest qualities of our nature. To train ourselves by constant self-discipline to a superior personality. To educate ourselves to a higher world of manhood different from the standard of capitalist perfection. A manhood that calmly passes by gold and fame, when it is in want and might have them by renouncing its ideals. A womanhood that, having no law but love, has the courage to follow the bidding of the heart and smile in proud disdain at the criticism of the world. A manhood that knows no master but the eternal yearning for freedom. A womanhood that will "redeem and lift man higher yet." All this—not for the sake of winning material happiness, but for the sake of having that inner peace and harmony which is the truest happiness. A manhood that dares to distrust humanity with absolute liberty, stepping forth from the slavery of human law into the freedom of the new world.

being "brought to its knees" by the power of the unions. While this sort of thing makes pleasant reading for the unthinking workers, it might be as well to remind them that it is better to avoid shouting until out of the wood. What has happened is distinctly a temporary concession. The union men have been re-instated and the statu quo is to be observed until July 1st. After that date the questions at issue are open for discussion, and while we hope that united labor may be able to hold their own in the conflict that will certainly ensue, it is well that they should beware of being lulled into false security, by big type headlines, which pretend to make what is really a trace appear as a victory. Last week we called attention to the situation, and stated that there was a probability that the capitalists would by timely concessions, stave off an immediate conflict, so that their stock jobbing deals might go through undisturbed, and this is really what has occurred. The question of union or non-union labor has yet to be fought out, and as we were right in our first prediction we will venture to make another which we ask the workers in the iron industry to remember. It is this. When the threatened strike actually arrives and hundreds of thousands of workers are engaged in an industrial battle with their masters, those papers which are now inflating the minds of the workmen with exaggerated accounts of "victory," will when the crisis comes, desert them in favor of the trust owners. They will find lots of excuses for doing so, and all that remains is to wait and watch them do it.

HOW THE "DEFICIT" WILL BE MET.

A lugubrious howl now ascends from the British "taxpayer" who finds himself confronted with a "deficit" which must be provided for, and which cannot be shifted upon the impoverished proletariat of England, who have already been stripped of everything but the bare necessities of life. The expenses incurred in "holding up" the two South African Republics, must come out of the "swag" already extracted from the British workman and as that individual very sensibly declines to "get a move on himself" by working harder, there is little hope that he can be made to contribute anything extra towards relieving the burdens of his plunderers. The best that can be done now is to pay on the installment plan by adding the deficit to the National Debt and annually appropriating part of the surplus value produced by the workers, towards paying the interest thereon. In the mean time the resources of the subjugated republics must be developed by the cheapest possible labor, the Cape to Cairo railroad pushed ahead, and all preparations made for exploiting the country to the southward of the Transvaal, so that by strict economy and unremitting attention to business the native African labor can be utilized to relieve the strain. While there yet remain communities to exploit and new territories to be brought to the world market, and a stupid and ignorant proletariat can be induced to supply with their own carcasses, the necessary power for such work, the "taxpayer" in question need not give up hope although the immediate strain may deplete his accumulations to some extent. But it is not so much the amount of the "deficit" that worries the British bourgeoisie. Had they a free hand in exploitation the outlay would cause little alarm, as they know how to repossess themselves in such cases. But the fact that the outside world is getting into the game and diminishing their chances through competition, is the real condition which is "viewed with alarm" in Britain. The "market" is narrowing fast and the plunder must be shared with rivals who grew yearly more formidable. Hence these tears.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

Once again the day which by common consent of the militant working class of all countries, is celebrated as marking the aspirations of the world's disinherited, is at hand, and once again those who thrive upon unpaid labor through possession of the means of production, are watching anxiously the growth of the revolt against their rule, which finds an expression in the demonstrations through which May Day is observed. Not so many years ago the ruling classes for weeks previous to the day in question made extensive preparations for suppressing by armed forces the discontent which they expected to manifest itself in street rioting and similar disturbances, on the day which the proletariat had devoted to the cause of labor, and although these preparations are as longer necessary, the capitalist classes have little reason to congratulate themselves upon the fact. With a perfect understanding of the class consciousness which exists among themselves, they are able to watch its growth amongst the laborers and comprehend the significance of May Day demonstrations growing ever larger in numbers and ever more peaceful in character, which tells them unmistakably that their wage slaves have no intention of dissipating their strength in aimless and futile efforts for immediate revolt, but are now gathering organizing and conserving their forces so that when the final struggle comes, one decisive blow may for ever settle the fate of capitalist class rule. As May Day has been established by the militant workers, and has been the first in history as established, it is fitting that its distinct class character should be emphasized in its celebration. And this character is not only thus emphasized, but becomes more and more distinct with every recurring anniversary. The men who march in the May day demonstrations of Europe and the United States understand thoroughly that the present system which deprives them of economic liberty, is merely a transient social phase through which the world is passing. Their mental horizon is not bounded by the necessities of capitalism. They see a future in which exploitation or man by his fellow has no place, a future in which the producer shall have the full use and enjoyment of that which he has produced, a future in which economic classes have no existence, a future which though representing the highest development of the entire human race, must yet be attained through a great, historical and final class struggle.

Days of celebration have in past ages been chosen by the ruling classes. Birthdays of sovereigns, days commemorating some tremendous slaughter with which the name of some successful military butcher is connected, days celebrating the political victories of rising capitalism, days set apart in honor of superstitious beliefs of fasting and feasting, of mourning and rejoicing, appear upon the calendars of every nation on earth — all of them different in date and all of them referring to the past.

In complete contradistinction to these stands the day of the proletariat, a day selected by themselves instead of by their masters, a day observed upon the same date by the workers, thus making manifest the fact that class solidarity overleaps national boundaries, and, finally a day set of remembrance, not dedicated to the worship of the past, but expressive of the aspirations of the class who hold the future in their hands, and recognize the importance of the mission which the evolution of social forces has imposed upon them.

The fact that the day itself was chosen by the workers, invests it with a peculiar significance and importance. In the past the days in which the laborer was permitted to obtain a respite from incessant toil, were chosen by the ruling class, and the slaves were expected to express their gratitude for such temporary release. The day we celebrate bears no trace of this subservience. It was established in spite of the opposition of capitalism, and it marks the appearance of a new political and economic power, which shall supplant the present order in the fulness of time. It is a day of significance of revolt guided by knowledge, of faith in a future deduced from the history of the past, of the freedom that lies ahead and the slavery through which the knowledge of that freedom has been made possible. It is a day of anticipation — not of retrospect. And in this spirit the First day of May is observed by the proletariat of the world. While the streets of European cities are echoing of the tramp of countless thousands of marching feet of May day demonstrators, the representatives of the ruling classes recognizing the import of this annual observance, display their fear and hatred, by seeking every method to incite violence as an excuse for the butchery which always ensues when a pretext is given for interference in the name of "Law and Order." These attempts, to the great disgust of those who make them become less effective year by year. Could they persuade themselves that this was due to a loss of revolutionary character, they would be found patronizing May day, even if it was originated in the teeth of their opposition. But they understand that the peaceable character of these observances is a greater menace by far to the continuance of their class supremacy, than a thousand futile street riots which could easily be suppressed by the armed forces at their disposal. May day remains as it has always been, a recognition of the existence, importance and significance of the class struggle on the part of the workers, which becomes every year more clear and distinct, and which in turn impresses upon the economic rulers the certainty that their regime is fast producing, marshalling, and organizing the forces which will transform the present world of masters and slaves into a habitation fitted for free men.

The General Committee will meet on Saturday May 4th at 3 p. m. sharp at Schiller Hall 34 floor Schiller Building, 103 E. Randolph St. All Delegates are requested to attend.

MAY DAY IN THE PAST.

Foreign anarchists are said to be threatening the lives of the Czar, the Kaiser, and the King of Italy. Foreign anarchists have been exceedingly active of late in taking human life and burning, looting and otherwise destroying property, as their recent descent upon China amply testifies.

The weekly report of E. G. Dean & Co. starts out as follows:

"Favorable crop reports, heavy bank clearings, record-breaking railroad earnings, a large distribution of spring and summer goods, and easy collections give the business situation an encouraging aspect."

And concludes thus:

"Failures for the week numbered 200 in the United States, against 134 last year, and 21 in Canada, against 13 last year."

Yes, the "business situation" is indeed "encouraging."

Arrangements have been completed for the building of a steel plant at Saint St. Marie, which will be capitalized at $20,000,000, the motive power to be secured from the falls of the St. Mary river. The cheapness of this power and the proximity of the plant to the Lake Superior iron mines will enable the cost of production to be materially reduced. Just now the materials for the two billion dollar steel trust are being assembled with remarkable rapidity.

Employees of the Gould system of railroads will no doubt be delighted to hear that the injunction restraining Count Boni De Castellane from spending the results of their toil in any manner which he sees fit, has been dissolved. An injunction restraining Count Boni De Castellane from spending the results of their toil in any manner which he sees fit, has been dissolved. An injunction restraining Count Boni De Castellane from spending the results of their toil in any manner which he sees fit, has been dissolved.

It seems that the burning of the Winter Palace in Peking will deprive Kaiser Wilhelm of the pleasure of revelling in stolen goods as the report states that the building contained a large quantity of "rare Chinese art treasures and miscellaneous articles plundered from the palaces of Peking and intended as presents for the German Emperor." But probably William can reimburse himself by demanding a cooling station, as recompense for the loss of the treasures to which he was appointed to act as "receiver."

Scully, the prosecutor who didn't prosecute in the "Hinky Dink" saloon case, has been "suspended" for one month and this "exemplary punishment" is hailed everywhere as a triumph for "reform." But Hinky Dink's saloon will be open for business every Sunday, just the same, as every other ginmill in the city. And Mr. Scully will also be open for business when his months vacation has expired. And this state of affairs is going to remain just as it is, while the "saloon element" controls forty thousand votes, and the Prohibitionists a mere few thousand. It takes actual demonstration to convince many "good" people of the simple truth that the tail doesn't wag the dog.

Kropotkin's declaration that "the trusts are not a menace to the man who labors with his hands" is merely a recognition of the fact that the working class everywhere under capitalism get but the cost of their production. The "menace" of the trusts exists only for the owner of small means of production who can't get into the trust, and who cannot hold his own in competition with it. The man who has nothing but his labor power to sell is not affected to any considerable extent. Lack of employment existed before the trusts made their appearance and was always a "menace" to the working class, but the trust is in no particular manner responsible for results that are always inherent in the capitalist system of production.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer in his speech on the War Budget in the British Parliament declared to the Liberals and Tories, "You have had your feast, and now comes the reckoning. You may laugh or not as you please." The Chancellor is not altogether correct. The feast has yet to come. The increased taxation is but the expense incurred in eating the other fellow from the banquet hall. The capitalists, Liberal or Tory did not declare war just for the satisfaction of fighting. They expected the feast afterwards as a reward. Of course whether their expectations are realized or not is another matter, but it is good capitalist policy to pretend that as the war was carried out merely for the sake of promoting "civilization" nothing remains but to pay the bill.

When the "sacred right to work" comes into collision with the "sacred right to blacklist" the former is always outclassed.

The General Committee will meet on Saturday May 4th at 3 p. m. sharp at Schiller Hall 34 floor Schiller Building, 103 E. Randolph St. All Delegates are requested to attend.

MODERN SLAVERY

An Exposition of Present Industrial Conditions.

SERMON BY W. T. BROWN.

Taken William Lloyd Garrison as Text to Explain Attitude of Those Who Oppose Modern Slavery.

Rev. William T. Brown of Plymouth Church spoke last evening on "William Lloyd Garrison: The Intolerable Iniquity of Slavery." In introduction the pastor detailed the incidents in the life of the great abolition leader and his struggle against slavery. These were used simply as the text, however, for a discussion of the modern industrial system. On this point he said:

"I have but one purpose in speaking of this theme tonight, and that is to call your attention to the fact that slavery exists today as really as it existed fifty years ago in the Southern States. I mean to say that our entire system of commerce and industry—its whole organization and operation—involves these same two classes—masters on the one side and slaves on the other. We do not call it slavery, it is true; at least most of us do not. And most of us regard it as the most natural and wise system in the world. And as the people of fifty years ago looked upon Garrison in his extravagant denunciation of the system then existing, so the people of today look upon any one who indulges in equally strong language concerning our economic order. The social agitators of today are looked upon with the same feeling by the masters of this time that the anti-slavery agitators of fifty years ago were regarded.

"What do these workingmen want? What are these wage-slaves asserting as their rights? Why, for the most part, they are not asserting any rights at all. They are not asking for any rights. They are demanding concessions. They are pleading for favors. And every time a workingman or a body of workingmen in any way, shape or manner ask for more pay or shorter hours of labor or any other thing, they simply acknowledge the justice of their condition as slaves. They proclaim themselves contented to remain slaves. And they are doing all in their power to perpetuate a condition of slavery. A man will demand the rights of a man. A slave has no rights, and he will not demand any. He will demand favors, concessions, steps at a time, and various things of that sort.

"Today we have on our hands another irrepressible conflict. We call it the 'class struggle.' And the same sort of dense intellects and dulled moral sense say the same things to us that they said to Garrison. They accused him of stirring up strife needlessly. 'What do you mean by talking about a conflict?' Don't you know that that is a dangerous word to throw out among the people promiscuously? We don't want to hear about conflict. We don't like this setting of section against section and class against class.' The circulation of the Liberator was forbidden among the slaves. And on all hands was Garrison rated severely for sowing the seeds of discord among the slaves, setting them against their masters and precipitating trouble. His foolish contemporaries could not see that the trouble was already there and had been there during all the existence of slavery. And these people who denounced Garrison so vigorously had not a word to say in denunciation of the slaveholders or the defendants of that hideous institution.

"And now we hear the same old cry. 'Why do you talk about 'class struggle'?' What do you mean by thus stirring up class hatred between man and man? We don't want to hear about the class struggle. We have no patience with these disturbers of the peace. Why not talk of class love? Why not talk of brotherhood between employers and employees, between capital and labor? Why not talk of peace instead of conflict?' And so is repeated the same old folly of fifty years ago. The great mass of men learn nothing save by bitter experience. They can get an idea into their heads only through a crack in a broken skull. They have no eyes to see that the source of troubles is in the system itself, and not in those who would establish justice in its place. They do not see that the classes are here because industrial evolution and economic necessity have created them, that the struggle is here and has been here for years, and that it is the part of wisdom to see it and frankly recognize it. We do not get rid of a disagreeable fact by denying it or ignoring it. And he who tries that plan is a coward.

"There was one solution and only one for the question of negro slavery. And that solution was freedom. There was no half-way station, no 'step at a time' to be taken. If the slave was a man, then the rights of a man were his. If he was not a man, then the whole emancipation movement was an insanity. The right to property in things is not disputed, was not then. The right to property in men was denied, and there was no possible compromise in the matter.

"Neither is there now. The laborer is a man or he is a beast of burden. If he is a beast of burden, he is entitled only to those rights which are accorded to a beast of burden, and he should be turned over to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. That is precisely what a good many people are advocating. They want that policy adopted. A beast of burden is entitled to have enough to eat and a decent shelter. It must be treated humanely. It must not be abused. It must not be overworked. Its hours of labor must be reasonable. And any one caught in the act of abusing an animal can be arrested and fined. So far as I can see that is all that is being proposed either by these alleged friends of labor in the ranks of capitalism or by a very large part of organized labor today. Humane treatment; that is the cry. The laborer is not getting enough to eat. He cannot buy sufficient clothing. He cannot afford a good house as he ought to have. He cannot live a decent life as a workingman. These things must be secured for him. Let us have an eight-hour day. Let us have factory inspectors. Let us have the regulation of wages so that the workingman shall have a 'living wage,' enough to replace the energy lost in the process of the day's labor, so as to be ready the next day to repeat the same routine. Not a word in all this as to the rights of the laborer.

"I want to say to you as strongly as I can that I will have nothing to do with that kind of procedure. I will not be a party to a lie. I will not take off my hat to the institution of slavery in any form. I will make no terms with it. I will insist that nothing but freedom will answer. I insist that the least a man has a right to demand is his rights as a man. The least a workingman has a right to ask for is the full product of his labor less what may be his just proportion of what is needed to maintain the only sort of government that is needed, and that is industrial administration. Here is the key that unlocks the door of freedom for every wage slave. What do you want? What do you demand as your right? What do you understand to be the rights of man? Here is the civilization which labor of hand and brain co-operating with nature has produced. Every particle of it has been produced by labor. Here it is before you: these cities, these houses, these streets, these railroads, these factories, these commodities of every sort, the ships on every sea, the whole equipment of civilization. Here it is before you. It is the product of your hands and your brains. Your labor has created it. And the land and the sky, the rivers and lakes and seas, the mines and forests, and all the resources of nature no one created. They are the inheritance of all. And he who would keep any man from their enjoyment is a robber, a highwayman, a criminal.

"I have said tonight that the system of wage slavery is an intolerable iniquity. And that is exactly what I mean. I mean to say that no words are strong enough to express the hideous and horrible iniquity of this system. I believe it to be far more degrading and demoralizing, both to owners and owned, than negro slavery was. And it is more dangerous than that because it is far more subtle. It seems difficult for you and me, I suppose, to understand how the men and women who owned slaves down South managed to justify the thing; how they could escape seeing the evil of it. One would suppose that the widespread immorality which it created and fostered would have made an impression, especially upon the women and upon the religious leaders of that time in the South. They knew perfectly well what was going on. And yet every sort of crime and vice was winked at and ignored. Inasmuch as the negroes were regarded as property, they were not regarded as human. It was, therefore, no sin to do what one liked with his own property.

"The fact is, the maintenance of negro slavery simply undermined religion and morality and produced a nation of hypocrites. And that is precisely what industrial slavery is doing. It is making the master class a lot of hypocrites. And there is no escape for the members of that class from hypocrisy, except by frankly admitting the existence of the system, repudiating it as evil and making common cause with the working class for its overthrow. The members of the master class in industry and commerce are living a lie—a bare, plain lie. And that lie enters into all they do and all they say. It cannot be otherwise. We can all see how it was under the other kind of slavery. We can understand what a horrible lie every religious service was, what hypocrisy every sermon, every prayer, every bill of sale, every commercial transaction was. These people lived a lie, and there was more of genuine religion among the slaves than among the masters, because it was less degrading to bear a wrong than to do a wrong. Today our rich men pose before the world as a false light. They pretend to be what they are not. They act upon the assumption that the property which they possess and of which they make whatever disposition they like, belongs to them. But it does not belong to them. They

Mass Meeting Held in West Twelfth Street Turner Hall.

MANY UNIONS REPRESENTED

Socialist Speakers Urge Passage of Educational Bills Now Before the Legislature.

One of the most significant meetings that has ever been held in this city was the gathering at the Twelfth Street Turner Hall last Sunday afternoon. This was not because of the large size of the audience so much as the character of the persons present and the action taken. The meeting was called by Section Chicago of the Socialist Party to urge the passage of the educational bills now before the legislature, which were referred to in our last issue. It has been recognized that while no one as yet has dared to make any open opposition to these bills on their merits and while practically every member of the legislature admits the desirability of their enactment it is thoroughly understood that they are to be killed in committee in obedience to capitalist influence. Hence it was that the socialists determined to make it known that the only possible way in which these or any other measures affecting the welfare of the laborers could be secured is through the Socialist Party.

The following organizations were represented by regularly elected delegates:

- Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, Local No. 375.
- Cooper's International Union, Local No. 34.
- Stove Molders and Steel Range Union.
- Custom Pants Operators' Union, Local No. 1.
- United Metal Workers of Chicago, Local No. 2.
- Journymen Bakers' and Confectioners' International Union, Local No. 2.
- United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local No. 419.
- Painters and Decorators Union No. 231.
- Carpenters and Joiners, N. 15 and No. 419.
- Society for Ethical Culture, Vorwärts Turnverein.
- La Salle Turnverein.
- Alma Turnverein.
- International Minnerchor.
- Cigar Makers Union No. 14.
- Chicago University Settlement.
- Chicago Commons, Social Settlement.
- Neighborhood House Social Settlement.

The first speaker was comrade A. M. Simons who pointed out the fact that our present school system was fitted to make machines, not thinking men, and he briefly sketched some of things necessary to a better educational system. He showed how essential Kindergarten and Manual training are to such a system and pointed out how far it was from the whole idea of this new education that the schools should be used to teach trades. He called attention to the fact that the present ruling class who control the schools sought first to prevent the introduction of anything that would tend to help the children to do independent thinking and that even when such features were introduced every effort was made to distort their whole nature until they became "trade" with "domestic science" classes changed into "methods for servants" and manual training made a means of supplying half trained cooks. He pointed out that no adequate school system of method of education lies in the action of the laborers themselves.

Comrade T. J. Morgan followed and presented statistics showing the utter inadequacy of present school facilities in Chicago. He showed that only about one third of the children of school age ever got into the public schools at all and that of those an almost infinitesimal portion ever received a high school training, to say nothing of a university education. He reviewed the provisions made by the constitution of Illinois for education and showed how they had been grossly violated. He quoted from several school officials and other persons prominent in Chicago educational affairs, to show that the persons now conducting the public schools were opposed to any educational reform that would enable the workers to rise above their present condition.

The meeting was then thrown open for a general discussion, in which many of the audience participated. The discussion was in the main on the educational bills now before the legislature, which were referred to in our last issue. It has been recognized that while no one as yet has dared to make any open opposition to these bills on their merits and while practically every member of the legislature admits the desirability of their enactment it is thoroughly understood that they are to be killed in committee in obedience to capitalist influence. Hence it was that the socialists determined to make it known that the only possible way in which these or any other measures affecting the welfare of the laborers could be secured is through the Socialist Party.

RESOLVED, That it is the sense of this meeting that the following bills now before the legislature of this State should be enacted into law: All of them.

House Bill No. 10. To provide for free conveyance of children to and from school in districts covering an area of more than four square miles.

House Bill No. 2. To provide High School privileges for all persons of

A MAY DAY ADDRESS

San Francisco, Cal. Socialists hear Comrade G. B. Benham.

GIVES INTERESTING LECTURE

History and Significance of the Day Adopted by The World's Proletariat.

In the history of the progress of mankind, May Day is destined to have a bright and lasting page. It has a significance beyond the ordinary labor days of modern times. The celebration of the first of May as labor day is not only an evidence of the class-consciousness of the workers. It is a living testimony to the evolution of human rights.

Today's observance is an indication of the world's progress from slavish superstition to higher and freer political and economic freedom.

Home superstitious and pagan rites celebrated the first of May, and all its tribute at the feet of mythical beings. The arms of the Emancipator, the May Day observance, to the European peoples. It found a prominent place among the festival days, and in time became a Christian holiday.

In England May Day was long celebrated as the welcoming of Spring. With the assistance of the priest, the gayly decorated May pole was raised.

The significance of this day and passing events awaken us. When our masters ask us if we will be still, we will answer them No! When they ask us to send their representatives to make laws for us, we will answer them No! When they ask us to conquer new fields for economic robbery and industrial murder, we will answer them No! If they ask us if we are afraid to fight, we will answer them No, but that our fighting, as well as our suffering, will be hereafter done in our own interests, and no longer to support our masters. We will oppose the capitalist class on the economic field, we will fight them on the political field. The warfare for justice shall never cease until the victory is ours.

Our efforts in the future will be to bring to earth a better life, in which men and women are no longer victims of individual caprice or of corporate masters. The enemies of socialism tell us that every ill would overtake society without the private capitalist. Ills there might be, but they would then rest upon the broad shoulders of a real militant Democracy. When economic justice comes, the enlargement of humanity will rear a social structure tall and grand. That its proportions may not be circumscribed, we demand as its foundation a base as broad as the will of the people freely expressed unrestricted by color, by location, by sex or by property. When a real Democracy is the basis of society, opportunity will display the allurements of freedom, and every industry will move more rapidly toward perfection. Every science will have a more complete demonstration. Art will then be sought for the sake of its own development, no longer guided by the profits of the picture dealer or the whims of the rich. The true greatness of enterprise, the advance of sciences, the grandeur of art, the perfection of literature will all be possible. The conception of the wise and good man of every age will be fulfilled. In the march of time knowledge and liberty have pressed onward together. When socialism comes the open hand of opportunity will point the way to every truly great and glorious end. The assurance of ever present justice will uplift mankind, and all will journey onward and upward to heights not yet in view.

We who here celebrate raise up no Queen of a day. We speak for the advance of man. We about our honor to labor, the only and the rightful King of civilization. Today the world's proletariat proclaims the principles of freedom. Before the tribunal of mankind is laid the tribute of the workers. Our offering is all the wealth of earth, all the benefits of civilization. In return for these, the living, breathing, useful people of the world demand, on this day, all that is good and great for man.

The younger people platted the garlands of the May flower, and it was a day of festal decoration, of dancing, and of innocent mirth. Feasts of strength and skill occupied the attention of those ambitious for athletic honors. The Queen of May was selected from among the fairest of the maidens, and received her crown of May flowers amidst the acclamations of the joyous throng.

The shifting methods of industry changed the aspect of May Day. It came to be a day best known for its celebration by the chimney sweepers of the European cities. It lost its hitherto unmistakable rustic character. It lost both its pagan and Christian significance, only in a later day to take on, throughout civilization, a broader and a grander meaning.

May 1 was selected first in the United States as a day to be remembered by the toilers. The American Federation of Labor in 1884 decided to attempt to gain for the workers the eight-hour workday. May 1, 1884, was selected as the date upon which the eight-hour day should be inaugurated. It was an endeavor to have the eight-hour laws of this country made operative. This attempt to support the legal right of the workers resulted in serious disorders throughout the country. These culminated in the Haymarket bombing and in the hanging of Spies and his associates in November, 1884.

The Paris Socialist Congress of 1889 recommended that May Day be celebrated throughout the civilized world by socialists and workingmen's demonstrations in protest against the iniquities of capitalism. At this time the specific demands for economic justice were first vigorously politically advocated on American soil. Since that time celebrations of May Day have become part of the effort for the betterment of conditions and final emancipation of the working class throughout the world.

In the streets of the European cities the May Day demonstration takes place every year, regardless of the displeasure evinced by the capitalist class and the oft repeated interference by capitalist government agents. The workers of the old world are with these of America in the May Day celebrations. They are with us in sentiment and in action. They are with us in needs and desires. They are with us in demands, and in organized efforts for economic emancipation. The workers' interests know no national bounds. The intelligent workers of the world today demand the full product of their toil.

Our May Day speaks not for legends and myths. May Day has come to mean something more than the straggling flowers on the altar of a heathen goddess. It means something more than the weaving of garlands or Springtime exhibitions of rustic childishness. The seasons of the year signify but little of the wage worker of today. What difference—Spring or Winter to the toiler condemned to the loom, or the slave chained by necessity in the mine? Our exhibitions of strength shall not now be fully made in contest with each other, but every effort directed against the capitalist class—against those who are holding shut the gates of opportunity.

A direct and a demand now go with the celebration of May Day. The class-conscious workers of the United States fully recognize its meaning. We are our brothers and our sisters tell that others may enjoy; we see our masters overturn the fairest of free contract by the force of economic power. We see these men who own us, searching with telescopic eye to find new means for exploitation and oppression in this land. Not content with robbery and murder in mine and factory and sweatshop, our masters with bloody hands now beckon our young men to seek and to kill men and women in far-away countries. These capitalists want wage slaves in other lands to compete against those of this country, our masters command silence of the workers. They desire to deal with the workers as individuals. They desire the interests of capital to be above the interests of man in the halls of legislation, and their wish is moulded into law.

The significance of this day and passing events awaken us. When our masters ask us if we will be still, we will answer them No! When they ask us to send their representatives to make laws for us, we will answer them No! When they ask us to conquer new fields for economic robbery and industrial murder, we will answer them No! If they ask us if we are afraid to fight, we will answer them No, but that our fighting, as well as our suffering, will be hereafter done in our own interests, and no longer to support our masters. ABREAST THE TIMES

Socialists Must Keep Informed on the Latest Scientific Thought.

KNOWLEDGE IS PROGRESSIVE

Recent Investigations in Sociology Can All Be Used to Advantage by Propagandists.

Not a few times the socialist has had to meet the charge that he is a fanatic, an advocate, and that he knows nothing about social conditions. Socialist speakers have often seen the supercilious smile of some young colporteur, who, imagining that he is a master of the knowledge of economics and science, has sought with oppressive scholasticism to drown the "ignorant radical."

From all this we have a lesson to learn. If we are to hold and shape the future, we must keep abreast of the times. Too long we have rested on our oars and on the things that have been accomplished for us by other minds.—an Engels, a Marx. We must move onward or stagnate. The son of a brilliant father too often neglects to accomplish himself.

Today science is making enormous strides. Books revolutionizing old ideas and methods of thought are being produced. We must keep up with this advance. When it was said of socialism by Ernst Mach in 1877 that it was impossible because it was, he claimed, contrary to the established law of evolution, the time demanded a man who understood not alone socialism, but the principles of evolution as well. Enrico Ferri in his little book on Socialism and Science met ably the argument of our opponent, showed that evolutionary doctrines far from being opposed to, are in accord with those of socialism and thus scored a victory for socialist thought.

How frequently has the socialist been met by the statement that the poor and alien population cannot be bettered, that they are slothful, intemperate and dishonest by heredity, and their children will have the same characteristics. Perhaps the socialist has been unable to meet this line of thought with an argument having behind it authority. If he had but known that Weismann, one of the keenest minds of our time, has shown to the satisfaction of a large body of scientists that characteristics acquired by the individual are not inherited by his offspring, that the child of the criminal is not born a criminal, but if he becomes one is forced to it through surrounding conditions, he might have met triumphantly his opponent. Furthermore he might have answered that the best authorities on pedagogy and child study agree that never yet was a normal child born lazy, but that as the socialist has frequently shown, wrong training, lack of proper kinds of exercise, and later our present industrial system have produced this type.

Again it may happen that our opponent is on economic bent and thinks to successfully overthrow the socialist position by an attempt to prove some of Marx's statements on economics untenable, his theory of value, etc. Such an antagonist is the most vulnerable of all. Not only does socialism neither stand or fall with the truth or falsity of Marx's conclusions on the theory of value for instance, but further, from the time of Adam Smith down through J. B. Mill to Böhm-Bawerk, von Wieser and J. B. Clark the capitalist economists have never themselves succeeded in agreeing upon a theory of value. And the professors of economics in our universities set before the students these various theories, but discreetly withhold an opinion as to the truth of any of them.

Socialism means a far deeper, wider revolution than many stop to consider. A half century ago Marx and others pointed out the scientific basis of it—the class struggle and the economic interpretation of history. They showed the industrial trend of events and laid the foundation for what has followed. To us belongs the task of impressing the stamp of this movement on every force in society, on ethics, education, literature. To accomplish this effectively we can no longer beat out old straw alone. We must as far as possible make ourselves acquainted with new scientific principles, with the new educational movement, and must begin to turn all them to the advantage of socialism. And is not this their rightful channel? Socialism is the new step by step with us and dropping old politics, ethics, education reflect the time, and if we but look about us we shall find that all these are moving on step by step with us and dropping off the husk of the older order of things.

But in acquiring this knowledge we are at a disadvantage. Many have no time or opportunity to examine scientific questions at first hand or in fact at all. It is harder for those who have had few opportunities to avoid vagaries and not to fall into errors of reasoning and judgment. But as far as possible we can search out reliable

WORLD WIDE CAPITALISM.

The acquisition of a large foreign steamship line by the Morgan syndicate is in all probability the first move towards a consolidation of shipping interests which will in a short time rival in importance the great railroad interests already controlled by that corporation. To become thoroughly equipped for the conquest of foreign markets the requirements of marine transportation are a necessity that had to be provided for, and the syndicate has acquired it in a manner commensurate with the other ventures in which they have been engaged. A fleet of vessels valued at $75,000,000 passes into the control of the greatest capitalist concern that the world has ever known, and even this gigantic deal is admitted upon all hands to be but a preliminary to further and greater acquisitions in the near future. When it is considered that the group of capitalists known as the Morgan syndicate already practically control the iron and steel industry of this country, the most available and accessible coal supply, and all the main lines of land transportation, it will become obvious to the "dullest intellect" that the era of competition is not only past in this country, but that in other lands it is also in a fair way to become extinct. Against such a combination as this, the very idea of serious competition becomes ludicrous, while the proposal to license, regulate, or legislate against it is even more ridiculous. The time is rapidly coming when the terms American, British or German capital will lose all meaning in face of the vast operations which are now being conducted without regard to national boundaries. Capitalism is now taking on its international character in a manner that leaves no room for argument, and proving beyond doubt the truth of the socialist assertion that the coming struggle for the ownership of the means of production instead of being confined to separate communities must be world wide.

Speaking of the demolition of Central Music Hall, The Tribune remarks that the city is in great need of a music hall "located in some spot where it will be safe from the encroachments of business. If such a spot can be found. Even if such a spot does exist it would for that very reason be avoided as the site for such a hall. One would suppose that the Central Music Hall was primarily built for mere pleasure without an eye to profit-making, when the fact is that it as well as ever theatre and music hall in the city was erected as a "business" investment solely. It would be as correct to say that a department store is primarily constructed for the display instead of the sale of goods. Business and pleasure will only be divorced when capitalism gets its quietus, and then the city will get a chance to have this "great need" supplied as well as many others.

It seems that the aesthetic tastes of Mr. Franklin MacVeagh regarding a smokeless Chicago cannot be gratified. Mayor Harrison declares that "no long as we want a great commercial and manufacturing city here we must tolerate smoke." And for the same reason "we" must tolerate many other "necessary evils" of like character, such as the stockyards stench, filthy streets, unsanitary houses, poverty, prostitution, gambling, burglary, beggary, vice, hunger, cold, nakedness, bodily ailments, machine politicians, hold-up men, porch climbers, bunco-steerers, sweat shops, brothels, child labor, the unemployed, and scores of similar adjuncts to capitalism. The cost of a "great commercial manufacturing centre" cannot be paid for in smoke alone. And could the latter be strictly confined to the districts which produce it, the very idea of its abolition would horrify even the most aesthetic of our "business men."

The cartoon depicting the present state of affairs amongst the organized socialist forces of the U. S., which appears on our front page, needs no special justification for its appearance. As socialists we have no interest in concealing the truth, and the publication of this cartoon, will we hope call attention to the present situation in a manner which will induce every comrade who has the best interests of socialism at heart to do his utmost to make the disagreeable though truthful portrayal impossible in the future. It is sometimes a wholesome corrective to ourselves as others see us, and we must acknowledge that the hierarchy of the corpulent gentlemen on the right side of the picture is quite as appropriate, as the distrustful and puzzled attitude of the workingman voter on the left. However now that the prospects of an early settlement of differences are good, as shown by the correspondence passing between the secretaries of the different factions, as published in last week's issue of this paper, there is every reason to believe, that the socialists of this country will come to the conclusion that they have more important work on hand than merely to provide a trifling entertainment for the capitalist, and this work can only be made possible first through unity. Besides there is an additional incentive (if such were wanted) in the fact that a bogus movement masquerading under the title of "Public Ownership" is being already prepared to occupy the political stage, and a division of socialist forces would give it an opportunity to thrive and grow into proportions that may temporarily and partially neutralize our efforts for clear cut revolutionary socialism. We can only prevent this misfortune, by uniting the socialist forces of the country. Socialism is coming but it will come all the quicker if "State Capitalism" is made impossible.

WORLD WIDE CAPITALISM.

The acquisition of a large foreign steamship line by the Morgan syndicate is in all probability the first move towards a consolidation of shipping interests which will in a short time rival in importance the great railroad interests already controlled by that corporation. To become thoroughly equipped for the conquest of foreign markets the requirements of marine transportation are a necessity that had to be provided for, and the syndicate has acquired it in a manner commensurate with the other ventures in which they have been engaged. VOTING QUALIFICATIONS.

There can be little doubt but that a move is afoot amongst the ruling classes to limit the political franchise as much as possible. The ignorance of the Southern negro, an ignorance which results from a practical denial of educational opportunities, has been used as a pretext for the disfranchisement of hundreds of thousands of colored voters already, and not only has no Republican or Democratic statesman spoken against such action, but have rather commended it. And now comes the representatives of the church, ever the willing tool of capitalist interests, to approve and sanction the act.

Dr. Parkhurst, of "reform" celebrity in New York, now comes forward to say that "the less the negro talks of his civic rights under the constitution, particularly the right of suffrage, the better it will be for him and the sooner he will attain to all the rights that JUSTLY belong to him." Now if the English language has any meaning, this statement admits that the negro is unjustly deprived of rights that belong to him and that Parkhurst approves of the injustice. The Record-Herald in an editorial upon this matter shows distinctly the idea which the ruling classes hold as to the necessary qualifications for voting. Speaking of how the negro is to "attain his rights" it says: "If they will begin to ACCUMULATE LAND AND OTHER CAPITAL AND ATTAIN TO DISTINCTION OR WISE RESPECT IN BUSINESS OR THE PROFESSIONS, and if at the same time they will conduct themselves with sociality they will all in time be living down those prejudices which are the ultimate cause of the discrimination against them at the polls."

an absolute sham. Government is merely the instrument of the ruling class. When no danger was apprehended from the votes of those who had neither land nor capital, it was quite safe to allow them to play at taking part in government, but the first hint of danger the privilege is at once revoked.

The negro is urged to "keep out of politics," and assured that he will be better off by doing so, while those who give him this advice are the very people who at election times urge the "good citizen," that is the fellow who has accumulated "land or other capital," not to fail to register and vote in the interests of "good government." And these are the very people also who are loud in proclaiming that there are "no classes in this country."

The negro, they fear, will fall under the influence of "ignorant agitators," and for this reason should be disfranchised. When the organs of the ruling class and their pulpits prostitute put forward this plea, they are lying, and know that they are lying. The "ignorant agitator" is no menace to capitalist rule, and it has nothing to fear from him. What they dread is not the "ignorant agitator" amongst the colored people, but the intelligent agitator amongst the white working class, and the disfranchisement of the former is but a preparatory step to a similar fate for the latter. If the negro franchise depends on the "accumulation of land or other capital," why cannot this qualification apply also to white men? The workingman who is not altogether blind will easily see that his masters have got overlooked this matter. Already several pulpits parades have advocated the disfranchisement of the "lower classes" in the large cities, and signs are not wanting that the proletariat may in the near future be deprived of even the semblance of taking part in a government which exists solely for the "accumulation of land or other capital."

THE "SOCIALISTIC" EDITORIAL.

The increasing number of "socialistic" articles appearing in the daily press is a phenomenon, which although easily comprehended by the socialist who watches the trend of events closely, perhaps requires some explanation for the benefit of those trustful individuals who through sentimental enthusiasm are likely to be deceived by appearances and rush to the conclusion that such and such a journal is advocating socialism.

It would be perhaps unjust to deny that such articles are altogether ineffective. But it would be a mistake to suppose that they are written for the direct purpose of inculcating the overthrow of present conditions. In every case they will be found to contain but one or two grains of wheat in a bushel or so of chaff, and it is the presence of these few grains which alone entitles them to be called "socialistic."

Two principal reasons are accountable for their appearance at this juncture. Five years ago they would have been impossible, but today they are acceptable because the events of the last four years have made them so.

The appearance of the trust on the economic stage is to a large extent responsible for this. It is patent to even the meanest intelligence nowadays that "legislation" as a remedy for the trust is absolutely useless, and even when some reactionary middle-class politician proposes a remedy, the note of hopeless despair running through such proposals is so clearly discernible, that they are no longer taken seriously. The "man in the street" sees that the trust is here, that it has grown in spite of all opposition, that it is still growing so fast that but a short time must elapse before all the industries in the country are trustified. It is beginning to understand that as economic conditions are not exactly the same a year hence they will be still more different. He is unconsciously recognizing the futility of the "As it was in the beginning" theory, and as the trust seems to be the central point from which the idea of economic change springs, his curiosity is aroused and he wants to know something of the future. And to satisfy this want "socialistic" articles make their appearance in some of the daily journals.

In saying "some of the daily journals" the second reason may be discovered. Those organs which exist solely for the purpose of supporting the capitalist class interests, very rarely make use of the "socialistic" editorial, while those which enter a new field to struggle for circulation with already established rivals, find it an effective means to attract the attention of readers upon whom the stereotyped "prosperity" article has failed to make an impression. The latter are in consequence are in quest of "some new thing," some departure from the conventional type of article supplied by the pronounced organs of capitalism, whether of the Republican or Democratic brand. And this desideratum can be found abundantly in speculations upon the probable outcome of the trust, "a subject which must necessarily be dealt with from a more or less 'socialistic' standpoint, as the dulness and folly of any other method would defeat the object aimed at, viz: to increase circulation by rousing curiosity. For although the individual capitalist proprietor generally detests socialism, he is not at all averse to using an adulterated and confusing imitation of it, if by such means his "business" becomes more profitable.

The appearance of these articles is one of the surest signs of the disintegration of the old order of things, and the fact they are in all cases mere caricatures of socialism does not in the least militate against this view. The "strictly business" journalism of the present day is keen to detect the drift of "public opinion" and cater to it accordingly, the desire for success outweighing every other consideration; just as a bookseller or publisher will without the slightest scruple, sell or publish socialistic works if a demand exists for them, though he may be personally opposed to the ideas contained therein, and even conscious of the results that may arise from them. The individual capitalist will as a rule risk almost anything for the sake of profit.

Regarding the muddled nature of these articles, doubtless the excuse that "the time is not ripe for socialism" will be readily put forward by those engaged in publishing them, and this is a veritable quite true. If the world were ready for socialism they would attract no attention whatever. As it is they will only become clearer as the economic system develops, and the circulation of clear-cut socialist literature increases. Over the former, we as socialists exercise little or no control, but the latter depends almost wholly upon our exertions. And as our work is devoted to preparing the proletariat to deal with conditions when the "time is ripe," it would seem that the most effective way to force capitalism to do valuable literary work for the socialist cause or take a position of open hostility towards it, is to push the circulation of socialist literature so vigorously, that muddled "socialistic" articles will lose their value as adjuncts to profit-making.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Report From Headquarters.

Since making my last report, the West S. D. P. Local was organized in Rhode Island, at Providence, with 35 charter members. We expect more to be in short order. I have been trying for several months to get a complete list of our party membership and have repeatedly requested the comrades through the party press to give me this necessary information. Some have complied but many have not, so I again beg the comrades to spare no pains in bringing this matter to the attention of those who have been negligent and request prompt action in the premises.

I have also repeatedly requested the State Committee to make complete reports for last, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th, and urge the secretaries to promptly close their accounts. Then there is the assessment levied by the N. E. C. The sum raised from this source is being used entirely to pay off the party, indebtedness and I urge the secretaries of all Locals that have not yet remitted, to bring this matter before them at their next meeting and see to it that the amount due the N. E. C. is paid.

Comrades do your duty as secretaries and see to it that your Local pays its obligations to the N. E. C. at once.

The attention of the Locals is again called to the open air circuit meetings of which you have all been informed by circular letter. Many Locals have as yet not made known their desires regarding this effective method of propaganda and I trust that all are sufficiently interested in the cause, to participate in this work of education, and to give the influence of the people for Socialism and the S. D. P.

Therefore comrades secretaries advise the Nat'l Sec'y at once if your Local wishes to be included in these circuit meetings and I urge the speakers all ready to preach the gospel of emancipation to the working class, and only wait for enough Locals to co-operate with us so as to make the plan a success.

Comrades, do not neglect to attend to all of the above matters for by so doing you will assist the Nat'l Sec'y, and at the same time be helping our party to carry out the work intended for it.

Yours fraternally,
Wm. Hutscher,
Nat'l Sec'y.

Editor Workers' Call:—
I have just been to the Opera House and heard Walter Thomas Mills of Chicago speak on the subject of "Barbarism, Civilization and Socialism." He reviewed the advance of the race through the different periods of barbarism and civilization, showing how each advance was the result of some new discovery or invention by which the economic life of the world changed first and then all forms of life were made to conform to the economic change. He finally showed clearly how during the last fifty years a complete change in the whole economic work of the world had taken place, but that the political and social life has not yet adjusted itself to the modern industrial and commercial developments. This adjustment he showed to be inevitable and that it must come under the form of socialism. The address extremely impressed the audience, deeply, judging from the ovation received by the speaker at its conclusion. Socialist.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

"Has the Christian pulpit ceased to preach the Gospel?" is the question asked by a Record-Herald editorial which gives a resume of a dozen or so of sermons preached by prominent clergymen last Sunday, all of them dealing with so called "worldly" topics.

The Record-Herald represents the "people" as being "hungry" for the Gospel as it was preached by Moody, Beecher and Brooks. It is rather strange that if this is the case, their "demand" cannot be supplied by the men hired for that purpose. It is stranger still that the "business meetings" held in this city a few weeks ago, and which dealt out the old fashioned gospel ad libitum didn't attract the "hungry" public to any appreciable extent.

To put the matter plainly there is no such "hunger" amongst the public. The modern clergyman is keen enough to detect what is wanted and furnish the goods. That the people get exactly what they want is shown conclusively by the very fact that not one of the dozen preachers above mentioned will be called to account for the omission, and still further that their sermons were the only ones that were reported in the Record-Herald. Had these men preached this "old fashioned gospel" not one line would have appeared in the Record-Herald or any other capitalist paper in the city. That gospel was preached last Sunday in scores of obscure churches, which are only obscure for that very reason. This assertion of the Record-Herald is more humbug.

Just imagine the Gospel of two thousand years ago advocated in a paper printed on twentieth century power presses, as being acceptable to people of the present day, people who read these sermons in cars propelled and lighted by electricity, people whose environment and ideas are utterly different to those of the inhabitants of Judea at that ancient date. The preachers know better than their journalistic critics. They are preaching an up to date Gospel—that of capitalism, and cannot do otherwise if they wished.

The American Sugar Refining Co. (the trust) is getting options on many large estates in Porto Rico. Two weeks ago this paper pointed out the reasons why the protest of the Porto Rican sugar plantation owners against the Holland tax law, was rejected at Washington. They hoped to sell all their land at an increased rate when the boom occasioned by American occupation arrived. It was stated in these columns that the American capitalists didn't propose to boom things for the benefit of the Porto Rican landowners. So the game was blocked, and now the Sugar Trust is getting "options" on the estates. It is quite excusable to say "we told you so," in this case.

It is said that the New National Building Trades Council looks with disfavor upon sympathetic strikes, and will "insist upon arbitration" instead. But how will it be if the other side insists that there is "nothing to arbitrate," after the manner of the late unlamented Pullman? How will they insist upon arbitration in such a case? By striking as isolated unions? The result of this procedure is a foregone conclusion. The question will remain unsolved so long as united action is looked upon with disfavor.

BOOK REVIEWS.

BUGLE CALLS, by Benjamin Wood. Author of "The Successful Man of Business." Brentanos, New York 1900. 12 Mo. Gilt top. Price $1.00.

Very rarely have we met with a handsome volume than "Bugle Calls," which makes its appearance in a gorgeous wine colored binding, artistically ornamented with gilt representations of the musical instrument from which the title of the book is derived. The center of the design is occupied by a white shield upon which two troopers and a feathered pen are depicted, the whole being surmounted with a highly original design of two clasped hands (presumably emblematic of the harmonious relations which should exist between capital and labor) enclosed within a circle. The title page is equally handsome and the text leaves nothing to be desired in the matter of typographical excellence, being divided into paragraphs, each beginning with a large and ornamental initial letter. We may remark in passing, that as the object of the writer is to urge the claims of the Union Label to be regarded as the economic salvation of the working class, it is almost unnecessary to add that he is utterly devoid of any knowledge of the nature of the present social structure. However, the book in its make up and general appearance is without doubt a thing of beauty and a joy for ever. It must have been a volume similar in appearance to this, that induced the poet Burns to compose his famous couplet:

"Free through its leaves, ye maggots, make your windings
But for the owner's sake, oh, spare the bindings."

The Hustler's Column.

In another column will be found a table showing the relative amount of business transacted with the Worker's Call by the members of the various ward branches in Chicago for the week ending April 27. A glance at this table will show in what part of the city the best work in socialist propaganda is being done at the present time. The Thirty-third ward branch comes first on the list this week with a business aggregating $11.50. This is the banner socialist ward in the city, having polled more socialist votes in the last election than any other ward. The Thirty-first ward branch comes second on the roll of honor with $4.75 worth of business, while the Twenty-fifth ward comes third with $3.35. These tables will be published each week in the Worker's Call, so that the comrades may know just what the various branches are doing in the way of propaganda.

Our comrades throughout the country will be pleased to know that 20,000 copies of the special May-Day issue were sold. There is no more deplorable sight than to see a socialist traveling around this fine spring weather without a bunch of Call postals in his pocket.

Over 400 copies of the Worker's Call were sold at an open air meeting last Sunday afternoon at the corner of California and North avenues. This splendid showing is a result of the efforts of comrade Sam Williams who as a hustler of party literature is second to none.

Comrade Haminger, of Broadhead, Wis., says: "All comrades here are for union of all socialist factions and in favor of plain Socialist Party as a name when we go to the ballot box."

Comrade John H. Morgan, literary agent for local Glen Carbon, Ill., writes an interesting letter concerning the state of the movement in that locality. Local Glen Carbon is in a flourishing state and is doing good work for the cause of socialism. Comrade Morgan is a fluent and energetic speaker and his services in behalf of socialism and trade unionism are at the disposal of the class conscious proletariat in his vicinity.

Comrade J. C. Lindbeck, recording secretary for local Bishop Hill, sent in an order for 100 copies of the May-Day issue to be used by the club. Local Bishop Hill has only been organized recently and is very aggressive though small, and is doing some good propaganda.

Comrade Seavy, of Wabash, Ind., took 300 copies of the May-Day number and writes us a vigorous letter on affairs in general. Among other things he says: "I think you are doing the right thing in Chicago and I am taking great interest in your united uncompromising movement. Found away from unity of revolutionary socialists and it will not be long until middle class socialism and De Leonism will take a back seat."

Comrade Goss, who is at present at Newark, O., is braving the enemy in strange lands. In ordering 100 copies of the May-Day issue he says: "I find it very hard here to make any kind of a start, as most of the people who reside here never heard of a socialist or socialism, and imagine the former some species of wild animal. However I have been in the movement too long to be very easily discouraged." From what we know of the energy of comrade Goss, the people of Newark will not long remain in the pitiable condition which he describes—or, at least, it won't be his fault if they do.

Comrade Chas. Demmrich, corresponding secretary of local Glen Carbon ordered 300 copies of the May-Day issue for the use of the club. The comrades at Glen Carbon put up a ticket in their village election recently held and polled 35 votes against 23 for the S. D. P. last November.

Local Galchburg took 200 copies of the May-Day issue.

Two hundred copies of the May-Day edition went to comrade M'Elroy, of Allegheny, Pa.

Comrade Himmeldrayer, of New York City says: "If every party member would see to it that all their friends and relatives are provided with sample copies of socialist publications I think it would be a good thing for the cause of socialism." The comrade's suggestion is well taken. The Worker's Call has often extended an invitation to its readers to send in the addresses of their acquaintances for sample copies. Send in a bunch of ten names each week for sample copies. Then go after them for yearly subscriptions. Try it and you will be surprised at the number of subscribers you will get.

Local San Francisco took 250 copies of the May-Day issue; local Philadelphia took 200.

Comrade Benedikt Schmid, of Kankakee, Ill., sends us 5 yearly subscribers. He says: "I am a farmer and am sixty years old but will do all I can for socialism and the Worker's Call."

Every open air meeting should be fully supplied with Worker's Calls and literature. Comrades living in the vicinity of centers where meetings are advertised should see to it that this matter is not neglected.

Local Davenport, Ia., distributed 300 copies of the May-Day issue.

The comrades at Quincy, Ill., are sustaining the same sort of propaganda which produced such good results in the recent city election held there. Six hundred copies of the Worker's Call were distributed during the May-Day agitation.

Socialist Pointers

Just because the old parties are slumbering is the greater reason why we should work.

Now that he does not need their votes Mark Hanna is not sitting up nights to love the coal miner.

J. Pierpont Morgan is doing better work for the socialists than they could have done by electing a man.

The coal trust has advanced coal one dollar a ton without advancing the wages of the miners three cents a ton.

If it were not for the ray of socialism in the night the future would indeed look dark for the workingmen.

The state legislature did not pass any free text book laws. It was too busy granting favors to the corporations.

The world's trust must be met and conquered by the united world-movement of the laboring men.

We are loaning money to nearly every country in the world, but the men who produced the wealth are not drawing the interest.

Bryan wanted to debate with McKinley some time ago, but up to the present time he has left all of the socialist challenges unanswered.

Every man in Chicago who believes in socialism should count it as a duty and a privilege to help extend the circulation of the Worker's Call.

The legislature adjourns today and you can count all the bills they passed on municipal ownership on your thumbs without using your thumbs either.

Another great combination of workmen projected in Pittsburg, but as nothing is said about making the fight at the ballot box the capitalists are not greatly alarmed.

When J. Pierpont Morgan gets all of his plans carried out he will see to it that there is no such thing as the middle class left. Then who will the democratic politicians worry over?

The socialists are giving Mr. Bryan some new topics to think about from time to time. Mr. Bryan has a whole lot to learn, but there is hope for him if he will have patience.

The railroad companies are giving the president of the United States a free ride in the finest cars in the land and it does not hurt his conscience a bit to take it.

Where did Morgan and Rockefeller get the money to buy everything in sight? They just held it out from the wages of the workmen, that is where.

A municipal ownership candidate cut into the socialist vote in St. Louis. It is the recurrence of such things that emphasizes the necessity of circulating socialist papers that are clear on all points.

The speakers for the soap box campaign will need the help of all of the workers. By selling papers and talking subscriptions throughout the crowd the effect of the speakers' words will be made lasting.

There never was a better time than the present to put socialist literature in the hands of members of the labor unions. They are just beginning to see that they are up against it and many of them are looking for the way out.

A Chicago preacher has resigned because he could not live on his salary of $300 a year. Here is a limit for the workmen. Let them resign all jobs that do not pay over that amount, because the preachers say a man cannot live on it, and they know.

It is the combined work of individuals that makes the mighty irresistible movement. A thousand men selling Workers' Call cards each week as a half dozen comrades are doing would soon make the paper a tremendous power. This is a work that the humblest can do.

The governor of Nebraska has pardoned the defaulting treasurer of Omaha, who is a poor, broken-down old man. No one will begrudge this criminal his liberty, but notice that the governor was class-conscious in his pardon. There are many as unfortunate criminals not from his class who must serve out their time or die in prison.

Elected An Organizer.

Delegates from the wards comprising the Northern Exposition district met on April 23rd at 309 Sheffield ave., and decided to place an organizer in the district, said organizer being elected by roll call of the delegates. Comrade J. H. Bard was elected for the position. An executive committee consisting of one member from each ward will be formed to supervise the work of the organizer, who was instructed to notify each branch to elect said member, and to call first meeting of said committee. The secretary, R. H. Daniels was instructed to notify the Workers Call of the measures adopted.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP.

Maneuvers of the Capitalist Politicians in Regard to this Measure of Reform.

It is amusingly interesting to follow the tactics of the politicians and newspapers of Chicago that have been duping the voters with the municipal ownership bait. There are a great many people who seem to think that municipal ownership is a panacea and who flock to the support of a party that mentions municipal ownership in its platform, without stopping to consider just what that party's purpose is, and to what extent the inserting of a municipal-ownership plank into its platform is prompted by trickery and the knowledge that it can be used for vote-getting purposes. They bowl and vote for the party as if afraid any pushing forward of discussing of their pet theory would displace the managers who might go and rule it out of the platform and then they would have no reason to vote for the candidate and would be at a loss as to what to do. It did not seem to matter much with them that the ownership suggested was not to be effective until twenty or more years had passed—just so it was in the platform, suited them. And the managers have shown that they knew how to take this matter just for what it was worth. Mayor Harrison says he is anxious for the traction question to be settled, and thinks the street railway people should make the first move. While this attitude is being assumed by the mayor, the Chicago American is telling of the doings at Springfield in trying to get the legislature to grant power to Chicago to acquire ownership of gas plants. So it turns out that voting for Harrison did no good towards municipal ownership of street railways, as he seems to be in a great hurry to turn over the use of the streets for twenty years more, and his election did no good towards municipal ownership of gas plants, as the state legislature has to consent to it first. As the legislature is in the control of the corporations this right will not be granted, and so after all, it did no good to have it in the platform. This municipal ownership business is just a trick to divide the people. The capitalists know that a whole lot of people who do not seem conscious of the fact that there is a class struggle for political power, can be led from the political ranks in which they belong into the political ranks of the opposing class, by offering to favor a reform which would benefit them. This was accomplished in the late election by the capitalist Democratic party.

The capitalist Republican party, however, did not give the municipal ownership theorists even the slight satisfaction of seeing the words in their platform. They knew the action of the Democrats was only a bluff, for they controlled the legislature and knew that without its consent the city could do nothing and they knew that it would not consent. They are against municipal ownership because some of them don't want it at all and the others think the time is not ripe. Those who are against it altogether are interested in the profits of present ownership, and those who think the time is not "ripe" are the "business men." They think the time will not be "ripe" until the council is controlled by "business men." If we had municipal ownership now the temptation to boodle would be too great for the present "penniless" aldermen, so the voters must first send "moneyed business men" to the council and then it will be a ripe time for municipal ownership. Why? Because their interests as "moneyed business men" would be greater than their interests as boodlers. And instead of running the utilities for boodle, they would run them in the interests of their class. They would be run on "business principles" and the profits would go to reduce the taxes of the "moneyed business men." When, according to these principles, the time is ripe, the small "business men" and the small property owners will be asked to vote for municipal ownership. And what good will it do them? None whatever. As now, then also, they will be taxed as high as is necessary to get the money needed to run things and the "big fellows" will get out easy. If they can make enough profit and give lower fares at the same time, where will the benefit to workmen and small property owners come in? They must give "tolerably good passenger service and to keep the train crews with them they must pay fair wages. If there is a bowl for lower fares they can reduce the fares to cost and win the votes of the traveling public, but will that help the workmen and small property owners? No, because the profit that is lost by the city by cheaper fares must be made up in taxes on property, and cheaper transportation having made the property of the little fellows more valuable, their taxes are increased. Why are all these methods against the workmen and the little fellows? Because the governing power is manipulated in the interest of the class that controls it. And to keep or controlling it that class uses every means in its power to divide the members of the other class in order to keep it divided. It plays the interest of sections of the other class against each other, and these sections are foolish enough to blindly fall into the trap.

But is there not some indirect benefit in municipal ownership even under the present governing powers, for the working class? That may or may not be, but it is possible, no doubt, for it to be, under some circumstances, against their interests. And against their interests is the only way in which it will be inaugurated by the capitalist party, for if it is given by them it will be for the purpose of satisfying the people with a crumb in order to keep their attention from the loaf. And such action is certainly against the working class interests.

The Socialist party platform contains no reference to municipal ownership for reasons evolved out of the false positions taken on the question by the capitalist parties, and because the question is of little importance to the working class compared to the other questions that are in the platform. The proposition which it does not contain can be carried out by the success of the party at the polls. The proposition for municipal ownership advocated by a wing of the capitalist class cannot be confused with socialism, as long as the Socialists do not advocate it, by those who have read our platform.

Alarmed by the growth of socialism and being desirous of checking it, the capitalists would, as a first measure, agitate municipal ownership, and having the power to grant it for such a purpose, through control of all the branches of government (it wouldn't matter if the city were Democratic and the state Republican, for in both cases the capitalists would be in control) they could pose as benefactors of the people by relying on the people's ignorance of their real interests in the matter. Thus, what the people want would come without its being demanded by the Socialists, but really on account of the socialist movement. Therefore if municipal ownership is a benefit to the people it is attained through the capitalists' fear of socialism and consequently on account of the Socialists' efforts, without their agitating for it in competition with the capitalist party which proposes it, and, instead of the Socialists losing on account of the fact that the capitalists have the advantage of being able to grant municipal ownership quicker than the Socialists could, we gain by pointing out the fact that the fear of us was what impelled the capitalists to act, and by leaving them to carry out their plans in the face of our fire while we are at the same time centering our strength on showing what is really of the most pressing importance to the working class.

The Socialists in power will give employment to the unemployed. Is that better to the man out of work or the man who doesn't know the day he will be out of work than municipal ownership or not? Is it better to know that your nickel spent in care goes into the city treasury to lessen the taxes of your boss than to know that whatever comes, sickness in your family will be relieved by the best medical skill free of charge as a right due you as a producer, and that your children will be provided with clothing, books and food in order to attend school and acquire an education? When the workmen see that these things are accomplished by putting into power members of their own class, it will not be long before their votes will put their own class in control of the state and then the nation, and when once that is done they will be the only ones to consider; their welfare will be the country's welfare and against that welfare of what wall will vested rights be and twenty-year franchises? The workmen must first realize their class interests and act accordingly by voting for them at the polls, and all things else will be added unto them.

LABOR ITEMS

And News From Trades Union Journals and Exchanges, Throughout the United States.

Canadian carpenters are moving for the eight hour day.

Florida unionists have organized a State Federation of Labor.

In Italy 17,000 farm laborers joined the trade union movement.

Quebec (Can.) Dock Laborers' Union has ordered a strike for higher wages and work in the port is at a standstill.

S. M. White, formerly a warm advocate of the old S. L. P., is delivering speeches in Georgia in the interest of the Social Democratic party.

All over the country the watch case manufacturers are posting notices that in the future no union people will be employed. Is there a class struggle?

Another stronghold of deaconism is disappearing. The organization of German Socialists at Providence, R. I., voted to join the Social Democratic party.

You want to know who will do the dirty work under socialism; but you are quite willing that it be left to the poor (and the politicians) under the present system.—Southern Socialist.

The trade union, co-operative and Socialist congress in Belgium adopted a resolution to inaugurate a general strike in case the bill in Parliament granting universal suffrage is defeated.

The attorney general of Connecticut says that the eight-hour law of that state is unconstitutional, says The Worker's Gazette. Wonder if The Worker's Gazette knows that it is his "legitimate business" to say so? What is he there for?

The petty political issues which the Republican and Democratic parties raise are only for the purpose of deceiving the laborers on the one hand and throwing dust in the eyes on the other hand they see the only real issue—Socialism versus Capitalism.—Missouri Socialist.

President Sherman, of Cornell College, likes to remark that, "as humbling, startling and sensational it may be, the fact is that the Socialists are getting away with the churches, and had ought to if the churches don't settle these questions that are damning the nations and the race."

Three thousand unemployed workmen in Lemberg, Galicia, after vainly demanding employment from the city authorities started looting the bakershops to satisfy their hunger. Troops were immediately sent for to teach the famishing wretches that looting is only permissible in China. They succeeded.

From now on you may expect to meet with stronger opposition than ever before. As Socialism grows stronger and more formidable, our opponents will leave no stone unturned to stem the rising tide. You can spike the capitalist gun by placing in the hands of his intended victims literature that will open their eyes. No great cause was ever won with out an effect.—The Critic.

VAIL IN KANSAS CITY.

Noted Socialist Lecturer Draws Large Audiences and Ample Local Movement.

Kansas City, Mo., April 22, 1901. The socialists here are well satisfied with the Vail Meetings Sunday and Monday. Both were well attended and helped the local movement perceptibly, as evidenced by new members and additional aid.

Comrade Vail's topic Sunday afternoon at Music Hall was "Why the Workingman Does Not Attend Church," the same having been chosen in answer to the question raised by the Ministers Alliance, and bandied about by the capitalist dailies.

The discourse even as reported in two of the local papers ought to give the gentlemen of the cloth something to think about. The "Journal" gave the best report, missing of course the reason why the present industrial system is unjust, yet did not garble what it did print.

Comrade Vail summed up the reasons why the laboring class has quit the church about as follows: They find the church does not want them unless they are content to go to the poorer churches; the most not come where the capitalists do. The church like all human institutions requires material support and has and does receive it mainly from the capitalist class, and has become dependent on that class. It has therefore conveniently lost sight of the sociological side of religion, and wastes time elaborating arduous of salvation, some fantastic relationship between God and man, and ignores the relationship of man and man. Or else, if the church does talk of human affairs it is to reconcile the injustice of its supporters (the capitalists) with the "justice" that holds forth a reward in a world to come in recompense for opium, robbery, want and misery here.

The explanation of the master and slave relationship of the capitalist system—and the necessity for conscious effort on the part of the working class to off the master class and take to themselves the heritage of the earth—and how that alone would establish the brotherhood of man, evoked immense enthusiasm.

Monday evening at Shrine Hall, the address was on Socialism and the Trade Union. The absurdity of organization that could but rarely enforce demands because while it binds the workers to their employers in the shop, it neglects to take the forces of government from the masters' hands, but on the contrary confirms him in possession, was clearly pointed out. With the sounding of a class-conscious workman's party it becomes the means of wrenching from the economic masters more favorable conditions under which to work for the complete overthrow of the capitalist system.

WOMEN AND SOCIALISM.

Question in Discussed at the Annual Congress of the Socialist Party of Belgium.

The 13th annual Congress of the Socialist party of Belgium was held on April, 7th, 8th and 9th, as we learn from "Le Peuple" of Brussels.

Probably the most interesting subject for American readers, which was taken up by this congress is that of the organization of socialist women. The subject was brought before the congress by Comrade Hergman who strongly advocated the idea of admitting women into all working class organizations. "By initiating women," he said, "into the political and economic struggles carried on by the men the entrance of the women into the socialist party will be facilitated."

Madame Jiatte de Gionmont followed with an interesting address from which we quote: "There is a tendency among men," she said, "to leave their wives at home when they come to our meetings. For this reason the women will have to be brought into socialism by other women. To this end a Federation of Socialist Women has been established, and we call upon women to organize a group wherever possible."

"We are ready for the work. Dismiss the idea that we are trying to overturn the home. It is precisely as if one were to say that the organization of unions would necessarily break up industrial organization. From this time on, the socialist party must consider socialist organization as its chief concern. It is simply unthinkable that women should be excluded from mutual benefit societies. Give some thought to the condition of your wives. They are the poor among the poor, and their must be the first benefit arising from socialism."

Comrade Beerblock said: "If there are comparatively few women in our organization the reason is that we have not wholly done our duty toward women. Our means of reaching the working class has been the press. With women we must use other means. Where is our press for reaching women?"

"It is often said, if women go to the meetings that means that the men stay at home to take care of the children. Why not? Do not the children belong to the father as well as to the mother? Speaking here in an audience, made up wholly of socialists, I ask myself what would become of our triumph if we had half the human race against us?"

A delegate from the Netherlands declared that he had never been so ardent in the struggle for socialism as he had been since he had his wife in the ranks by his side. "It is the degradation of woman," he said, "that has detracted from woman's dignity and independence. If woman wishes to have equal rights with man she must enter the same groups with the men. Accordingly the programme must be of women in one and the same social group, and not in an association for women. To permit women to make use of her rights as a citizen she must be liberated from economic oppression."

The remainder of the debate turned largely upon the relations of women to the socialist co-operative societies. At the conclusion of the debate, the following resolutions were adopted, with only one dissenting vote:

"The congress, desiring to organize socialist women, invites the local federations to arrange for possible associations, each in its own neighborhood, giving the preference to mixed groups (men and women together)."

"The congress suggests as practical methods mixed groups under the form of mutual benefit associations, labor unions, and political and philosophical groups."

"The congress calls upon the National Federation of Socialist Women to prepare for the next Labor Congress a project for the economic organization of the working women engaged in manufacturing."

It will be observed, from this report, that the problem of organizing socialist women is coming to the front in Europe as in America and that the conclusion of our Belgian comrades is that the best interests of women and of the general movement alike will be served by the entrance of women into the regular organization rather than by the creation of new machinery.

CHARLES H. KERR.

Notice of Change of Name.

Beginning with this Special May-Day issue, the paper heretofore known as "The People" and published at 134 William street, New York, in the interests of the Social Democratic Party, appears under the new title of "The Worker." The change was considered advisable because of the confusion arising from the fact that there is another paper, "The People," published, which devotes itself to bitter attacks upon the S. D. P. and upon the labor movement in general.

The editorial position of "The Worker" will continue unchanged in advocating the principles of Socialism and the S. D. P. and holding fraternal relations with the Trade Union Movement.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

At the meeting held last Saturday evening at the corner of Carpenter street and Milwaukee avenue, comrade J. H. Bard delivered the principal address. A large number of copies of the Workers' Call were sold and distributed. These meetings, which will be held every Saturday night, ought to be very successful since there is a large number of active socialists living in this vicinity.

Comrades Robbins, Klenke and Bard spoke last Sunday evening to a large gathering at the corner of Peoria and Madison streets. This corner has been a center for socialist agitation of the west for several years and the results have been very satisfactory. A large number of Workers' Calls were sold. These meetings will be continued every Sunday evening, and comrades living on the west side should see to it that they are made a success.

A very successful open air meeting was held last Saturday evening at the corner of Paulina street and Milwaukee avenue. The meeting was opened by comrade J. H. Bard who gave a brief and lucid synopsis of the socialist doctrine. The speech of the evening was made by comrade Aug. Klenke. The audience was an unusually large one and was very appreciative. During the evening over 400 copies of the Workers' Call were distributed. This meeting was the first of a series of open air meetings to be held at this corner every Saturday evening until cold weather. The comrades living in this vicinity are requested to be present, and do all they can to make them a success.

In the general enthusiasm incident to the inauguration of the season of outdoor agitation the trade unions have not been forgotten. Last Saturday evening comrade John Collins spoke in an open meeting of Unity Lodge, March 1st Union at their hall at Madison and Union streets. Thursday evening comrade Collins addressed the Amalgamated Wood Workers' Union, No. 12, at Normal hall, corner Milwaukee and Dearborn streets. Last Monday evening comrade J. H. Morgan spoke before the Amalgamated Wood Workers' Union, No. 14, at Koch's Hall, 104 East Randolph street. Comrade Morgan addressed the Painter and Decorators' Union of the Workers, No. 14, last Tuesday evening at their headquarters, Clifford's hall, corner Sixth and Halsted streets. Friday evening, May 2, comrade Aug. Klenke spoke before the Amalgamated Glass Workers' International Association at Lauterbach's hall, 55 N. Clark street.

Last Saturday afternoon the first open air agitation meeting of the summer was held at the corner of California and North avenue. This is one of the most important centers of socialist agitation on the north-west side and has been the site of much socialist activity during the past eight years. The seeds that have been sown in the past have borne good fruit as is evidenced by the splendid success of last Sunday's meeting. Comrade Sam Williams agreeably surprised the comrades by his address, meeting with a short and pointed address. Comrade Williams is a new speaker and judging from the splendid beginning he made last Sunday will undoubtedly become an able and convincing speaker. The address of the afternoon was made by comrade John Collins, who held the audience for over an hour with a comprehensive exposition of the socialist philosophy. During the evening over 400 copies of the Workers' Call were sold by comrade Williams and others. These meetings will be continued every Sunday afternoon.

Organizers' Notice.

All comrades employed in large shops and factories are requested to communicate with the organizer as soon as possible with a view to arranging noon day meetings for the benefit of their fellow employees.

Branches should not neglect to pay the car fare of speakers who are sent to address agitation meetings within their ward limits.

All comrades who still hold tickets for the Commune Festival are requested to turn them in at once so that the books may be closed.

Membership application cards have been printed and are now on sale at the Worker's Call office at the rate of 20 per hundred. It is necessary that all applicants for membership sign these cards before their names are presented to the general committee.

Tickets have been printed for the next Worker's Call picnic to be held Sunday, July 14, at Gaudin's Park, One-hundred-and-twenty-third street and Michigan avenue, and can be had at the Worker's Call office. Branches and individuals should use no time in securing a supply of these tickets.

Branches of the South-West Organization District will take notice that a meeting has been called for Monday evening, May 13, at the Socialist Temple, for the purpose of electing a district organizer for this district.

Fraternally,

Aug. Klenke, Organizer,

How "Success" is Attained.

An English newspaper reporter interviewed Mr. Yerkes recently in London, and upon asking him to what he attributed his success received the following reply from the street railway magnate:

"To the fact that I have studied the subject thoroughly in every detail, surrounded myself with intelligent, hard working men who were as willing to work as I, which means that they worked from 7 in the morning till 11 at night, and at night, from the moment I took up my life work I never strayed from the project, but concentrated every nerve and brain power upon the end I had in view. Whenever I benefited greatly as an entrepreneur I made it a rule to give the faithful half dozen employees in immediate touch with me a few hundred shares, with the advice to hold on to them. It is a pleasant as well as a profitable thing to reward fidelity."

Now this may be taken as a fair statement of how Mr. Yerkes' fortune was made. He worked hard, he saved, and so doubt he did. But did he actually produce anything by his labor? Not the value of one cent. His work consisted entirely in making other people work and then taking what they produced, and there is every reason for believing that he was exceedingly industrious in this respect. It was from the co-operative labor of thousands of other men that his wealth was wholly derived.

cient to keep them in good working order from day to day. Half a dozen of his most faithful employees, those in immediate touch with him, received over and above their wages a few hundred shares of stock, on occasions when Yerkes was greatly benefited by the labor of the fellows who got wages only. These few hundred shares were an "incentive" to the faithful half dozen, not to work at producing things themselves, but to make the fellows who received wages only, work still harder. It is safe to state that if Mr. Yerkes actually produced anything himself he would have nothing, just like the fellows who did nothing, the wage laborers. Mr. Yerkes describes the exact process by which the modern capitalist accumulates wealth. Just as Legrand in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" rewarded his two drivers, Sambo and Quimbo, with presents of liquor, when they had accomplished some "great benefit" for their master by driving the slaves to the utmost of physical endurance, so Yerkes rewarded his faithful half dozen with a few hundred shares for similar services. The former was slavery, the latter is capitalism. What is the difference?

Tolstol and the Czar.

An open letter to the Tsar and his advisers, written by Count Leo Tolstol, is being circulated secretly in Russia. Tolstol blames the powers that be for the recent disturbances and appeals to them as brothers to change their course and prevail on the Tsar to introduce the following measures:

1. Equal rights for the population with the rest of society and abolition of government officials in rural communities (zemski nachalniki). Laws regulating the relation between employers and employees in a more equitable manner.

2. Abolition of all laws of exception, of the government spies and of military rule.

3. Abolition of all obstacles to public education.

4. Absolute liberty of conscience and religious tolerance.

These measures are advocated by the most advanced thinkers of all classes, and their enactment will prevent further trouble, says Tolstol.

As all these improvements leave the capitalist foundation of Russian society untouched, we do not agree with Tolstol as to their efficiency. R. V.

Join For The Second Course.

The Chicago School of Social Economy.

Closed its first series of twenty lessons at the Schiller Building on Thursday. The attendance throughout the course has been most remarkable. For this last night there were more students and visitors than the hall would hold, standing room and all.

This second course will begin in the same hall at the Schiller Building, 103 S. Randolph Street, on Thursday evening, May 2.

In this course the students will have the benefit of the use of the printed lessons from the start and Comrade Mills will be able to add to the regular work in How to Study, How to Prepare a Speech, How to Keep a Scrap Book, give some Elementary Work in Logic and find time each night for drill work in the practice of speaking by the Comrades.

For the last half of the course just closed it has been impossible to advertise or canvass for additional students for the night school because the hall was completely filled with those already members.

Those who wish to take this second course should be on hand for the first lesson if possible.

The rates will be the same as before. Tuition $1.00. The use of the printed lessons $1.00. If you are not sure that you will take the course come for the first night anyway. Single admission, 15 cents.

Modern Slavery

have no just title to it. They are assuming to be rightful owners of that which other men produced. Here is Mr. Rockefeller with his income of a million dollars or so a week. And he assumes that it belongs to him. He assumes that he has a right to make such disposition of it as he pleases. And here is Mr. Carnegie endowing libraries right and left and doing a lot of other things, and thousands of people are saying: "See what a generous man Mr. Carnegie is! What a benevolent man! What a benefactor of his kind!" And so the very manhood and womanhood of the people are being undermined and we are being changed into a nation of hypocrites. We are all taking part in that lie. And we have religious teachers who tell us that so long as this lie is made legal, it does not matter. We must not find any fault. We must be thankful that these men are so generously disposed! And then we wonder that people do not go to church and that the institution of religion is losing its hold upon the respect of the masses!

"The horrors of the civil war in this country could have been averted if the slave had been treated as a human being and not as a chattel. The slaveholder and his allies would have been forced to consider the abolition of the system. Garrison uttered his message in behalf of emancipation into the ears of the American people for thirty years. And the longer they delayed listening to him, the more bloody was the day of reckoning to be. But he did his part. He and his associates were the real patriots. And the new today who are demanding the abolition of industrial slavery in a perfectly peaceful and orderly way are also doing their part. Compromise with slavery is out of the question. To propose it or favor it is only to postpone a little longer the day of reckoning and make a peaceful solution of the problem less likely. It is an irrepressible conflict that is on. Let every man frankly recognize the fact and do his duty."

Curses, Load, But Not Deep.

Here is a chunk of wisdom from a last Sunday sermon delivered in the South Park M. E. Church by a pulpit "Mr. Oracle," called Ramus, as reported in Monday papers:

"The curse of these days of wild theories is the socialistic teaching—which declares that the man with money necessarily is a public enemy. Absolute socialism is absolute nonsense. It is worthy of notice that when such preachers fall into the golden net their change is made in a moment."

The curse of these days is rather the clerical jackass who gets on his hind legs in a pulpit to bray about matters of which he has not the slightest conception. One of the most amazing peculiarities of the average clergyman is the astounding assurance with which he poses as a critic of subjects that neither his education nor environment has fitted him to discuss. In the above diatribe there is not one word that conveys the slightest meaning to any human being of average intelligence and yet no doubt the assembly of individuals who listened to this drivel imagined that they were getting good value for money received. This superstition about the ability of the ordinary preacher to pass judgment upon every subject under the sun, is perhaps more responsible for the deluge of trash that emanates from the pulpit, but so long as it serves the interests of the exploiting class it will be permitted to pass unmolested. It is not without significance that this idiotic stuff appears in the daily press under the caption "Blow dealt at Socialism," and although no stronger testimonial to the intellectual bankruptcy of the defenders of the present system could possibly be given, the idea that this feeble creature has dealt a blow to socialism, ludicrous though it be, will nevertheless find acceptance amongst those who regard the drum of every pulpit ignoramus as final upon any or all subjects. Hence the appearance. The existence of capitalistic depending as it does upon the ignorance of the masses finds no stauncher supporters than the modern pulpit, which has become prostituted to its interests, body and soul.

Then again, is it not strange to see a missionary exhibit such an ardent desire for vengeance? He would call it "justice," of course, but the two are hardly distinguishable. Here is a man professing to believe in a creed in which forgiveness of injuries is inculcated to an almost limitless extent in which men are exhorted to love their enemies and return good for evil, and yet he travels around demanding the heads of the wretches who slew his converts, and raising a howl of protest when an effort is made to save them. Even if their lives are justly forfeited, it seems rather inconsistent conduct on his part. Were he to disavow that part of the creed, no objection could be taken. But he won't. He will still preach the "good for evil" theory and yell for blood at the same time. A "diplomatic" conscience will solve the apparent contradiction.

And Li Hung Chang can also find justification in a similar manner.

ORDINARY "DIPLOMACY."

The "Heavenly Chinese" is Not Quite so "Foolish" as He is Generally Supposed to Be.

A Presbyterian missionary in China bearing the appropriate name of Killie, is getting after Li Hung Chang. Some of Mr. Killie's converts, it seems, lost their lives in the recent Boxer disturbances and the vengeful man of God managed to get the guilty parties into the Chinese courts where they were convicted and sentenced to death, subject to the signature of Li Hung Chang. The missionary then went to Peking and interviewed Li, who, he says, assured him that the men should be executed immediately. Mr. Killie returned to his station and was horrified to find that they were still alive. He applied to the local judge who showed him a letter from Li Hung Chang forbidding the execution. This is the story as it appears in the Associated Press reports. It shows conclusively that the missionary in question is unable to appreciate "diplomacy," especially when it balks his sanguinary desires. He imagined no doubt that his demands represented "justice" and was shocked to find that the Chinese statesman had deceived him.

Just why any reasonable human being should expect Li Hung Chang to act differently, is rather hard to understand. Li is a "heavenly" and as such, is outside the "morality" in which the "civilized" world pretends to believe. And even if it be claimed that he is an individual familiar with it, there is even the less reason to expect him to observe rules of conduct which he cannot fail to see are honored far more in the breach than in the observance. Amongst civilized nations the terms "diplomacy" and "lie" are synonymous. So well is this understood that it is a commonplace of capitalist journalism. Take up any daily paper dealing with the diplomacy of other countries and it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that it is based entirely upon falsehood; misrepresentation, distortion and suppression of truth. The sayings of Machiavelli, Talleyrand, and others who have attained fame in "diplomacy" are yet quoted with approval by writers on capitalist statecraft while "for ways that are dark and for tricks that are vain" any fifth rate capitalist politician can beat the "heavenly Chinese," hands down. The history of commercial intercourse with China easily proves this.

There is not a statesman in Europe or America that would not do as Li Hung Chang did, in similar circumstances. No one was executed for the Rock Springs massacre of some fifteen or twenty years ago when scores of Chinese were murdered by a mob. Italians, Hungarians and others have been lynched and shot in the U. S. and the Government has admitted that it was unable to protect them or bring the guilty parties to justice. Does any one suppose that if a demand were made couched in the same language that is addressed to Chinese officials, it would not make the rejection all the more certain? And were those who made the demand, in a position to enforce it, would not every effort be made to evade compliance? If a lie was necessary to such evasion would there be any scruple about using it? Not a particle. And everybody knows it, though it may be "diplomatic" to pretend otherwise.

Then again, is it not strange to see a missionary exhibit such an ardent desire for vengeance? He would call it "justice," of course, but the two are hardly distinguishable. Here is a man professing to believe in a creed in which forgiveness of injuries is inculcated to an almost limitless extent in which men are exhorted to love their enemies and return good for evil, and yet he travels around demanding the heads of the wretches who slew his converts, and raising a howl of protest when an effort is made to save them. Even if their lives are justly forfeited, it seems rather inconsistent conduct on his part. Were he to disavow that part of the creed, no objection could be taken. But he won't. He will still preach the "good for evil" theory and yell for blood at the same time. A "diplomatic" conscience will solve the apparent contradiction.

"VIEWS WITH ALARM"

Russell Sage Apprehensive of Future Danger.

WANTS COMPETITION AGAIN

Advocate of New Business Methods Reply to Him in the Columns of the North American Review.

Not so many months ago it was the peculiar province of the petty exploiter to fulminate against the enormous aggregations of industrial capital, in which he saw the dash of his career as individual capitalist. He enjoyed (if such a word is permissible) a monopoly of denunciation against monopoly.

But it seems that even this doubtful privilege is not to remain solely in his possession. There are others who can "view with alarm" quite as well as he, and the billion dollar steel trust is mainly responsible for the appearance of Mr. Russell Sage in the role of prophet of financial disaster for the future, in the columns of the North American Review for May. When an exploiter of the caliber of Sage joins the ranks of the reactionaries, some idea may be gained of the magnitude of the economic transition which is now in process. When a financier whose "accumulations" are popularly estimated as approaching the hundred million dollar mark sounds a note of warning for the future, because he realizes that his "investments" are endangered by the power inherent in the new system of "concentrated management," the horde of petty capitalists may perhaps desist from their lamentations long enough to grasp the real import of the situation.

Like his smaller and weaker brethren Mr. Sage pleads for a return to "the old-fashioned system of honest competition," and like them he also pleads not for himself but for the "community," a phrase behind which skulks every capitalist interest on earth. It is only because Mr. Sage scents a "grave danger" to the aforesaid community that he ventures to intrude in the columns of the North American Review.

But Mr. Sage's pessimism is not allowed to go unchallenged. Half a dozen well known "captains of industry" enter the lists against him in the same magazine, all of them like him presuming to speak in the interests of the "community," and all of them showing that the furthering of those interests was the main object of the establishment of the industrial combinations which so alarm Mr. Sage. Foremost amongst these champions of up-to-date exploitation comes James J. Hill, the "Schoolmaster of the Great North," Charles M. Schwab, the million dollar employe of the billion dollar steel trust, and Chas. R. Flint, President of the United States Rubber Co., with several lesser lights of the new order, who one and all declare that not only are Mr. Sage's gloomy predictions unfounded, but hint broadly that Mr. Sage himself is a back number.

The old Wall street financier dreads a commercial panic as a result of the inflated values of means of production, brought about by the new business methods, and while defending the trusts as a whole, and admitting that the charges brought against them are unjustifiable, he nevertheless has his own peculiar grievance. Sage is not a petty manufacturer, shopkeeper or traveling salesman, and the woes of these individuals cause him little concern. He acquiesces the idea that they speak in the interests of the "community," and shows that the iniquity of the new consolidations consists, not in the extinction of the lesser fry of capitalism, but in the fact that these combinations are so powerful, that "operations" on Wall street are no longer a matter of chance with them; that they absolutely control the financial resources of the world in order to win "enormous sums on either side of the market." It is this state of affairs that is responsible for Sage's gloomy predictions for the future. As Wall street has been the scene of his operations in the past, and he now realizes that he can no longer play there in safety, he at once perceives that the "interests of the community" are imperiled in consequence, and raises his voice in protest, just as the gambler whose place of "business" has been closed by a "reform administration" insists that the "community" has lost its liberty because he can no longer skin "suckers" to advantage.

His opponents, however, waste no time in replying to his pessimism. They do appear to dread the catastrophe predicted by Mr. Sage, as indeed they have little reason to do, if as that gentleman says they can "make enormous sums on either side of the market." The panic that he foresees, even if it does materialize, will merely enable them to still more easily gather into their own hands whatever means of production still remains outside their grasp. The combination force will ensure that they meet his objections about the "community" with a "reform administration" one step further by transforming the entire means of production into the collective property of the entire community.

business methods which alarm him are here to stay—in the interests of the community.

In championing the new methods, Messrs. Hill and Schwab smother many an idol which has heretofore served the purpose of the capitalist class in justifying the conditions of exploitation before the industrial combinations which they now defend, appeared on the scene, and naturally enough such iconoclasm takes the same form as the arguments advanced by socialists. The saying that "competition is the life of trade" is brushed aside contemptuously as an antiquated aphorism suitable enough perhaps under past conditions, but having no application at present. The middle man and traveling salesman are referred to as mere leeches and parasites who "such sustenance from the business body without giving anything in return." Society, says Hill, cannot afford to go back to the old wasteful methods by which this "horde" was maintained. "There are," he continues, "fewer drones in the hive, fewer people who share the result of work without doing any work themselves."

Perhaps the most ingenious plea in favor of the new industrial combination, however, is its effect upon the workman. To that individual it would seem that the gates of Paradise are about to be opened for the first time in history, and Mr. Schwab, the horny-handed son of toil, whose wages run between $30,000 and $50,000 per month, is perhaps the most appropriate person to swing the gates open that they may obtain a glimpse of the glories within. "WITHOUT WAITING FOR ANYONE'S INVITATION," says Schwab, "he (the workingman) may secure a PARTNERSHIP in the combination for which he works, by investing his savings in the open market in the stock of the concern. Under the individual system, the ordinary workingman, the plodder, could no more aspire to a share of the profits of the business he helped to create, than he could aspire to a coach and four  In a comparatively few years we will undoubtedly see a very large percentage of the stock in industrial enterprises held by the workers." It is needless to say that this vision of the future has no relation whatever to Socialism in the imagination of Mr. Schwab, and while he lays such stress upon reducing the cost of production it is rather difficult to see how the "savings" of the workingmen who are still purchased in the open market, are to become a factor in acquiring stock in concern that are destroying the little capitalist daily and even making Russell Sage tremble for the future. Besides, it is strange that the workingman whose capital has yet to materialize, has such a glorious prospect before him, while the horde of little exploiters who actually have some capital in their possession, do not seem able to forestall him by getting in ahead. Schwab would have the "community" believe that the big industrial consolidations are going to create a larger batch of little capitalists in place of those who are now walking the plank.

As to legislation against these combinations it is cynically declared by Mr. Schwab that "the iron and steel industry of America is not apprehensive of antagonistic political action toward it either by the people or by Congress," and he asserts further that if the issue were put to the voters today that they would declare in favor of the trust, which is only another way of stating the fact that economic and political power go hand in hand.

The confident tone with which the advocates of the principle of combination write in the columns of the North American Review show conclusively that they understand that whatever the future may disclose it is utterly impossible to return to the old-fashioned methods of individual exploitation. They recognize to the full that the new phase is a logical and inevitable outgrowth of previous conditions, which must be accepted as a fact that cannot be evaded, and that no defense of it is necessary, save to persuade the workingmen, if possible, that their interests lie with the new order of things. For the small capitalist, exploiter outside the great industrial combinations they display an absolute contempt, knowing well that from his class no danger is to be apprehended.

The entire discussion brings the class struggle more distinctly into view. The existing opposition to the new methods of exploitation is considered hopeless by its defenders, who see correctly enough that it is the working class which must be reckoned with in the future and which must be placated if capitalism is to continue. To this end they take pains to especially represent to the latter that at least an improvement in their conditions of life is for the first time possible. Failure to verify this prediction means that the final struggle between exploited and exploiter will commence immediately, and as the preposterous hope held out to the working class that they shall become capitalists like their masters, vanishes into the air, so the army of Economic Socialism will march on, bringing industrial consolidation one step further by transforming the entire means of production into the collective property of the entire community.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL

Should Be Considered Primarily as a Social Institution.

A SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMME

Advocating Many Necessary Changes and Improvements in the System of Public Education.

In his "Pedagogic Creed" Prof. John Dewey says: "I believe that the school is primarily a social institution. Education being a school process, the school is simply that form of community life in which all those agencies are concentrated that will be most effective in bringing the child to share in the inherited resources of the race, and to use his own power for social ends." To attain this standard for the great mass of the children of today demands far-reaching changes. An educational program that shall formulate the minimum requirements for such a standard will give shape and method to all efforts for educational betterment.

I. Sufficient school buildings should be provided to accommodate all children of school age. At the time only a very few of the children have any opportunity to attend a kindergarten, while in the primary grades a large number are extended as widely as possible. Such a school with numerous trips to the country should be provided for every school and for all children. The vacation schools so far organized have been able to supply the needs of only a very small percentage of the children in their immediate neighborhoods.

VI. Sufficient kindergartens for all children between the ages of four and six are a necessary part of the equipment of any modern school system. Without such accommodation these two years, now recognized as among the most valuable in the child's life for education, are often worse than wasted.

The time is now past when manual training and domestic science can be considered mere fads. Both are an essential part of the equipment of every school from primary to high school. Starting with "play" in the primary department, the tools and instruments of productive industry should be gradually introduced in the higher grades, combining production and instruction at all possible points. Along with this should go work in shop and needle work. As the object of such work is to develop all the individual capacities of the child and train hand and brain to more perfect action any attempt to use such work for the production of tradesmen and servants is a complete distortion of this educational idea. The mechanical trade school is the antithesis of the free development of the manual training establishment.

VII. For many laborer's families the purchasing of the necessary textbooks

HE WEEPS NO MORE

Pettigrew Quits "Business" as a "Calamity Howler."

MADE A COUP ON WALL ST.

And is Now Mocked by the Capitalist Press for Deserting His Ancient

An unexpected turn of fortunes' wheel has, according to the daily press, relieved "society" at large from a nuisance which was becoming insupportable. Senator Pettigrew, a professional prophet of woe, has managed to secure several hundred thousand dollars in Wall street speculations, and it is confidently expected that he will in consequence desist from uttering those direful predictions which are represented as having been an intolerable torment and annoyance to the public at large.

Many columns of editorial remarks upon this incident have depicted space in the capitalist press, all of them striving to create the impression that while "society" is thankful for the anticipated relief, there is something unworthy and sordid in Pettigrew's desertion of the ancient profession of "calamity howling," now that he has acquired riches.

trough, further yelling would not only be useless but would even hinder him from enjoying it. So he gets into it perhaps with all four feet in his eagerness, and the only possible method of getting him to lift up his voice again would be to part him from it by force. But what would be thought of the intelligence of the swill bearer if he vilified the pig for neglecting to yell when the food was placed within his reach? And suppose the animal did so, would it not at once be apparent that something abnormal, such as sickness, was interfering with the usual expression of his piggish nature? Yes, verily!

In these matters pigs and Pettigrews are much alike. But there is one difference between them upon which the strictures of the capitalist press against Pettigrew are based. "Human nature" differs from that of the pig in that the developed intelligence of the former can add hypocrisy to howling. The pig yelled solely for himself, and if he could speak would probably be simple enough to say so. The hunger of his fellow pig in the adjoining pen was none of his business. Pettigrew on the other hand cried ostentatiously in the interests of the other fellow! Before the Wall Street swill fell to his portion, he proclaimed that his lamentations were based upon the wretched condition of humanity outside himself. Afterwards when his satisfied silence gives the lie to his former pretensions, he leaves an opening for his enemies, who in reality taunt him with permitting the excitement caused by the possession of abundant swill to render him oblivious to the necessity of still preserving the hypocrisy of howling. The discarding of this hypocrisy is a distinct violation of the "principles" of capitalist ethics, which is quite as intolerable as the calamity howling itself. Pettigrew's shortcoming lies in the fact that he is either too stupid or too honest to become an utter and consummate hypocrite—an unpardonable sin against the conditions of capitalist clam rule.

Before Pettigrew got the "tip" in Wall Street, which permitted him to appropriate labor products created by other people, he predicted that Socialism would be the issue in 1904. He can now push the date as far as 1908, and if in the meantime he gets another opportunity to grab the plunder extracted from the working class, he may postpone its advent to 1912 or even later, and so Socialism will find fault with him for so doing. Socialists are one portion of the

LABOR AND CAPITAL

A Glance at the Industrial Conditions of the Present.

PREPARING FOR CONFLICT

Struggle for Control of Powers of the State an Inevitable Necessity of the Future.

Divested of all sentiment, removed from all conceptions of abstract right and wrong, the irrepressible conflict between capital and labor presents evidence of a force which it would be well to consider. Without sympathy for one side or the other, an appreciation of their relations will bring forth much that will astonish the average man outside of the socialist ranks. And all May Day sermons are for these outsiders.

Combination by the capitalists to an accepted fact. There may not be a firm, oath-bound organization of the owners of the means of production and distribution, for the purpose of bringing co-operation among themselves into being, but, nevertheless, the co-operation is here. The continual wrangling with isolated unions may have accelerated the process, it may have been the cause of the first impulse to combine, but if the unions get the credit, or first plain evolution, is immaterial. All combinations are offensive or defensive in character, and where the necessity for defense is reduced, the opportunity for offense is increased. This has been observed of these combinations of capital. Having an impregnable position, they wage war with impunity. They ride rough shod over the wishes of all not members of the trust; they have no respect for either producer or consumer; they ignore the laws, and where the laws cannot be ignored they purchase a favorable decision. That these combinations, on the other hand, have accomplished good cannot be gainsaid. Waste in a thousand ways has been eliminated from the production and distribution of things. And chief among the good may be mentioned the eventual, permanent quietus of that drag of civilization, the little bourgeois. There is nothing more distasteful to the mass of sense than the product of a petty bourgeoisie, with its small pretensions and its small egotism.

But the evil far outweighs the good. In fact, the good is only incidental. The trust has a natural impulse to crush the producer and the consumer to a position of abject subservience. Nothing, apparently, stays this impulse. All the forces of society, legal and other, are with these soulless combinations. Absolute control of the market is not only possible, it is assured. The universal trust can dictate terms to all men, for it will possess all the means whereby men get food. It can pay whatever price it pleases; it can pay as much wages or as little as it likes. To the consumer it can say: "Unless you pay what is asked you will not consume." To the producer it can say: "Unless you take what wages are offered you will not produce." And both, being barred from dealing with a competitor of the trust, will be compelled to make terms.

Side by side, almost step by step with these combinations of capital, however, has labor made progress in combination. The task has been a harder one. Labor is even more conservative than capital. It is less mobile and is cohesive only under stress. But there is a law that even labor, with all its conservatism, is compelled to obey; that is, to resist a ferocity commensurate with the intensity of the assault. Activity that is offensive will bring into being active defense. Every onslaught of capital will compel a building of fortifications and will eventually bring forth a demand for reprisals. These fortifications of labor are undoubtedly the labor unions, and these unions, which will stay the heavy blows capital inflicts upon our common humanity. The trust will be met in the field by an enemy equal in force, equal in extent and equal in powers of consolidation. The day when any single capitalist or combination of capitalists could corner an isolated union and beat it into submission is past. The national union, finding its strength in the cooperation of the forces of the country, has come to realize that co-operation on the part of its unions, not as separate organizations, sub-divided according to a special department of human skill, but as a combined organization, moving at the behest of a central body, is the only safeguard against the encroachments of capital. The trust is capital centralized. The national union is labor centralized. The trust is moving towards further centralization, and a trust of trusts is the inevitable outcome. Already the national unions are moving towards consolidation, and there will be a vast union of unions. It is only a matter of time till these conflicting forces confront each other on a single battlefield. Already the guns are being pointed towards each other.

are only able to attend in half-day sessions. Such overcrowding as exists at the present time in our city schools is ruinous to health and destructive of all power to study.

II. An adequate number of teachers with liberal wages must be provided to work with these children. No teacher, whatever her talent, can successfully handle forty children and study the individual needs and requirements of each child. Whenever teachers are overworked in this manner the school becomes an immense cramming machine, and the whole purpose of education is destroyed. Twelve pupils are more than sufficient for each teacher and one teacher should not have the same pupils for the whole six hours of the day.

III. Through lack of proper apparatus, laboratories and materials for study, much of the time spent in education is wasted. The teaching of real things through mere graphical representation is not only the most difficult, but as well the most wasteful method. Instruction should include both the making and the using of all necessary apparatus.

IV. Abundant space should be provided about each school building for amusement and recreation with proper persons to direct all such exercises. Such play-grounds should be equipped with adequate gymnastic apparatus and material for games and remains open throughout the entire year. All these measures should be considered only as the first step towards the complete removal of all educational institutions outside the crowded city into the country where both work-shops and gardens can be provided to the end that all necessary exercise and recreation can be combined with a thorough training of eye and hand in productive labor. Free transportation must be provided to and from such schools for all children.

to well-nigh an impossibility. For a few to receive them as charity is a degrading discrimination. Such books should be furnished free of charge to all children in all grades, including the high school. To attempt any form of education with a child suffering from cold or hunger is a criminal farce. So long as our system of society makes it impossible for the parents to furnish proper food and clothing these should be provided by the school authorities, for at least the time in which the child is actually present in the school room. Many French municipalities already furnish these things as a necessary part of the supplies of a well-equipped school.

VIII. Finally, school buildings and grounds being the property of all the people should be utilized by all to the greatest extent possible. When not in use for school purposes they should be thrown open for public gatherings, lectures and discussions on all subjects of public interest.

The comments of the daily press on a college professor who claims never to have kissed a woman show plainly where the morals of the ruling class are drifting to.

While the capitalist press is undoubtedly justified in assuming that Pettigrew's outcries will cease in view of the fact that his material conditions have changed for the better, the pretence that this is in some way a renunciation of "principles" is rather amusing at first glance, though upon inquiry it may be easily demonstrated that such attitude is part and parcel of a capitalist philosophy which, in one might say, instinctively voiced by its hired scribes. They make no attempt to find any excuse for Pettigrew's silence in "human nature," in this case, although it would be entirely applicable. It is not only human nature, but even animal nature to do exactly as the senator has done.

Pettigrew howled. He wanted things that he saw small prospect of securing, but as he wanted them badly, he continued howling—to the great annoyance, not of the "public" generally, but of that part of it which had the thing that Pettigrew wanted and were tolerably content with present conditions. Had they been in Pettigrew's place they would have howled perhaps even louder than he did. Pettigrew kept on howling, and at last got what he wanted (not through the howling perhaps, but he got it just the same). Then he lets up on the business of howling and devotes his attention to what he has secured. And now the molders of "public opinion" taunt him because of his silence, although they profess to be glad that the noise has ceased.

Keep a pig enclosed in a pen, and withhold his food beyond the usual time. After an hour or two he will begin to yell, and his cries will grow louder as his hunger increases. All the philosophy in the world won't make him desist. Nothing short of taking his life will accomplish that end. At length a bucket of swill is emptied into his trough. Does he keep on yelling? Not at all. He gets busy with the swill. He wanders off. That was what he was yelling for, and his silence is the result of the fact that when the swill materializes in his pleased with his predictions. They are indifferent because they understand "human nature" and having nothing to lose or gain under capitalism can afford to uncover its workings with a ruthless hand.

The socialists, that portion of the working class who understand their interests, have this in common with Pettigrew—they want things. Unlike him however they don't prophesy disaster for the future, nor regard the breaking up of the present economic system as a calamity. They know that while that system lasts, their wants cannot be satisfied, and therefore do all in their power to help along the evolution that is bringing it to its end. While this process is going on it is quite possible that here and there some "sympathizer" with socialism, or even some individual within the socialist ranks, may perhaps through some uncertain speculation, such as Pettigrew's, acquire a quantity of the desired things, sufficient to slacken or even neutralize his energy in the socialist movement, but these unusual incidents have no effect upon a movement in which a class is involved. Just as the capitalist system is not endangered by the bankruptcy of a single capitalist, so the acquisition of wealth by an individual socialist or socialist "sympathizer" cannot check the movement as a whole.

The "calamity howler" is almost every case will be found to be an individual who can easily reconcile himself to the present order of things if only his individual wants can be satisfied under it, and Pettigrew is an example of the normal type. There is from his standpoint no good reason why he should continue his doleful wailing when the cause of it is removed. And the fact that he has done so, and thereby unwittingly thrown aside the mask, is the sole reason for the sneers levelled at him at the capitalist press, which avoids anything remotely resembling honesty, as a cat avoids water. Pettigrew may be a poor creature, but he is distinctly superior to his accusers, who while professing to feel relieved by his silence, yet taunt him with a former hypocrisy for which he has no present use; and which they themselves would

WHY WE ARE NOT ANARCHISTS

Translated from the Polish.

Note. Some necessary adaptations have been made by the Translator.

"Before all it is necessary to understand, what anarchy is, and what are the principles of the anarchists? Today, there exists in the newspapers a perfect misapprehension of the thing. It is therefore necessary to understand in what the anarchists differ from the socialists.

Some assert that this difference lies in the solution of means. These who never use any peaceful means of action are anarchists, while those who believe in a peaceful solution of the social question are socialists. This is the assertion of some. We will demonstrate just now that those who say this, do not know what they are talking about. The use of violent means in the struggle, is not a part of principle at all. Take for instance the Christian church. Who would believe that the Christians have conquered the world with humility? In truth they have often had recourse to fire and sword, they organized revolutions, assassinated kings etc. No one however will say that Christians were anarchists at the time when they availed themselves of such means. Or let us for instance look at the capitalists, who so nicely understand how to talk of law and order. Before the capitalists conquered the powers, they now possess, they made bloody revolutions against the rule of nobility, murdered kings and emperors, threw bombs, etc. In France they even celebrate the 14th of July as an anniversary of the Revolution of 1793, a revolution which transferred the rule to the bourgeoisie. No one however will say, that the bourgeoisie believed in anarchistic principles, at the time when they used such violent methods. Or look at our Jingoists, what methods have the used in conquering the newly acquired lands? Are not the destruction of the Spanish navy, the killing of countless Filipinos, their helpless wives and children, proofs enough to what violent means they will resort, and still no sensible man will ever say that the Jingoists who are exploiters of labor, and the anarchists who, ardently, desire the emancipation of labor are one and the same.

In the light of the above, it may be easily inferred that the principles of anarchy must be something other than the use of violent means of agitation. As to socialists, it is not quite true, that peaceable means only, are by them taken into consideration, though there are some among the socialists, who believe, that everything will develop smoothly, without struggle and without physical revolution. Their faith in the peaceable solution of the social question is derived from the constant growth of socialism; they think that our adversaries must voluntarily surrender, because they must see the futility of resistance and on the other hand, will themselves acknowledge the judicious aspirations of socialism. Such is the belief of some socialists in countries, where political freedom prevails and no obstacles are set against socialist propaganda. In countries however where no liberal institutions exist (in Russia for instance) no socialist holds such an opinion. But even in free countries such a method of reasoning is not frequent as nearly all socialists foresee forcible resistance on the side of the exploiters, and prepare themselves to use forcible means in case the ruling classes will put arbitrary obstacles against the spreading of socialist principles.

There may be some dispute as to the application of this or that method of struggle, but such a dispute is not a matter of principles, but of tactics. That even the anarchists do not reject peaceable action is proven by the number of newspapers and books they publish, which show, that first of all they take pains to make people acquainted with their ideas and principles. True, there are some anarchists, who would make revolution immediately, but they overestimate the progress of revolutionary ideas, the majority of them however recognize, that the proper time for a revolutionary uprising has not come yet.

Therefore, we repeat, that the difference between the socialists and anarchists, does not depend upon the tactics of the struggle to be carried on. The true difference lies in the principles held by each. What is then the difference? Why do not the socialists not accept the anarchistic principles and the anarchists, socialism, if both of them struggle against the exploitation of labor? To answer these questions will be our object here.

II.

First of all, what is anarchy and what are the principles of the anarchists? The word anarchy is of Greek origin and means a state of society where there is no law or government over the individual. To such a state of society the anarchists aspire. Liberty, according to them, shall acquire such dimensions that each individual shall have his or her own autonomy, that is, that the will of each individual shall have a perfectly free field of action. Future society, the anarchists say, should be nothing else but a voluntary alliance of free men, an alliance however which shall not have the right to lay any fetters upon the individual, who submits only to orders accepted by him or herself and for so long only as he or she pleases.

Thus we see, that the anarchists demand the free development of the individual as a subordinate to the interests of society, and that the individual can enjoy liberty and prosper only with the favorable development of the interests of society as a whole. Besides, the socialists say, that it is not the question of what we wish it to be, but what must be. In order to know what must be, we must reckon not with our imagination, but with what really exists in society and with those laws along which society develops. If we wish to create a better order of things, if we aim at a juster organization of social conditions, we must direct ourselves by that which exists by reality. If we should begin to work out an ideal of social conditions based upon our whims only, then we will attain nothing. The strength of our aspiration depends upon its truth, and its truth relies upon its connection with the reality of existing things. To build imaginary ideals is very easy, but to realize an ideal is possible only when it is based upon reality. When does an ideal answer the requisites of reality? Only when it is built upon a basis of existing facts. That is why socialism investigates the conditions of social life, discovers the prevailing disorders in production, the causes of commercial and industrial crises, the causes of misery, prostitution etc. Socialism shows that the cause of all the existing social evils, is the rule of capitalism, and that so long as speculation will direct labor, and until the latter uses its own product the majority of society will not cease to be the victim of a privileged handful of men who arbitrarily rule and exploit the whole of humanity, and crimes, misery etc. will continue to do their pernicious work. Socialism shows further, that the existing state of things social, cannot continue for long, that the present order is nearing bankruptcy, that in the midst of the present society there is raging a class-struggle which cannot fail to end with the complete victory of the working class. Socialism therefore invents nothing, but discovers things that actually exist. Socialism is a certain extent a photograph of the present state of society. After having portrayed the existing things, socialism foresees the picture of the necessary evolution. The ideal of socialism is therefore true because based upon reality. Socialism, investigating the present state government, proves that it is a class government, a rule of the property classes over classes deprived of property, and that, that kind of government must fall at the moment when labor ceases to be exploited. In order to free labor from exploitation and to abolish class rule, it is necessary however to conquer the governmental powers. To free society from oppression it is necessary to conquer the means of oppression, it is necessary to bring down the oppressors the tools of oppression, or in other words it is necessary to conquer the powers of the state, that chief tool of oppression.

The present government is not evil because it is called government, the police officer has not his power because he wears his blue uniform; the power of both is due to their being the representatives of a class-government and the plenipotentiaries of economic oppression. At the moment when economic oppression will be abolished, political oppression will cease to exist. In order to abolish that oppression, the means by which the classes are acting, that is the state, must be conquered, exactly as in order to defeat an enemy it is necessary to disarm him.

The conquering of the state by the proletariat has as one of the aims the disarming of the enemy. Next there is another aim, namely, that of the organization of labor after having gathered in its hands all the strings of social life. As, to day, no one is able to live for himself, and all the social requirements must be furnished by collective work of all the people, the necessity of the regulation of labor, and directing it according to the needs of society, is self evident.

When we look at the present mode of production, carried on by machines, and through the enormous accumulation of labor power in one place, and furthermore when we consider the present evolution of the railway-system and other means of communication we cannot avoid the conclusion that such a centralization of labor requires also a centralized administration of human labor. As the man must work collectively, it follows, that he must submit to a collective guidance.

And now we are to see, what the anarchists say and whether their demand viz: the perfect freedom of the individual, is consistent with the real condition of things.

Another Professor Resigns.

The commotion raised in the Leland Stanford University over the dismissal of Professor Ross has not yet subsided. Another professor named Lovejoy has just resigned. Dr. Starr Jordan stating that the treatment of Professor Ross "involved an abridgement of the liberties which any university professor should demand." President Jordan refrained from making any comment in accepting the resignation, a course which shows that he knows when silence is desirable and prudent. This approach towards class consciousness on the part of the teaching staff in the above University is not a matter to be made so public as to invite a wide discussion throughout the country. Such discussion always brings out the fact that the ruling classes would willingly hide if possible the fact that sub-servency to the interests of private property is a condition of the wage laborer.

MAY DAY IN ROCHESTER N. Y.

Job Harriman Follows a Trade Unionist in a Stirring Speech Before an Audience of Two Thousand.

Rochester, May 2nd, 1901. Rochester had its May Day demonstration, as well as the great cities of Europe. There were 2,000 people assembled at Fitzhugh Hall, the largest in the city, last night, celebrating May Day under the auspices of the Social Democratic Party and the local trade-unions.

Wm. McNamara, of Roof and Shoe Workers' Union No. 15, of Rochester, and Job Harriman of New York, were the speakers, with Geo. A. Cooley, Business Manager of the Central Trades and Labor Council, presiding.

Mr. McNamara spoke on "The Necessity of Trades Unions for Working People." Years ago, he said, he reached the conclusion that the unions were an absolute necessity for both men and women workers. The conditions affecting the working classes, he asserted, have grown worse year after year for a long time, and the question is now how to check the downward tendency. Organization of the workers will not only check it, but, if the organization is perfect, will absolutely stop it and even start the condition of the workers upward.

He cited the victories of the workers of the coal mines to show what can be accomplished by thoroughly organized labor. He said years ago the laborer used to say: "First comes I, and then comes I, and then I come again, and then my fellowmen come afterward." "There is something wrong with that man. Your fellowmen should come every time that you consider your own interests." He said also that there was a lamentable lack of good thought upon social and economic conditions. Also that he thought that there was that in every man which was capable of making him an intellectual giant; there are hundreds of Stephens A. Douglasses and hundreds of Abraham Lincolns; diamonds in the rough. I believe all that is needed is that careful and persistent thought, which shows itself in anxiety to wish to know the truth. We should not wish to live in a fool's heaven. I want to know it and you should know it. He said that he believed that workingmen should claim the future in the face. "He should say: 'What is going to be the lot of my children?' What are going to be the conditions for them? The Legislature is bought and sold to the highest bidder. Much of it is designed to shackle the generations yet unborn. When a man has no leisure or nothing except that foolish struggle for bread, at that time he ceases to be a fit citizen of a republic. A poverty-stricken mass has never maintained freedom in any land and never will. The well fed man is a useful man. The pauperized man is a useless man."

He said also that the individual can no longer command recognition, but the man with 1,000 of his fellows behind him is a power. "Justice is dead in the world, unless you have the power to command it. Our duty under the circumstances, at present, until the time is ripe for political action, is to form a powerful compacted organization. Therefore I say to all who are here to-night, affiliate yourself with the others in your craft. In union there is not only strength, but also self-respect."

Job Harriman, the eloquent Secretary of the Labor Secretariat, next addressed the meeting in a very forcible and convincing manner.

He said in part as follows: "Comrades, Workingmen and Women of Rochester: I was interested very much in the first speaker, especially in that part referring to the condition under which the women in Chicago or at least some of them are working, for I find in parts of New York City since I have been there, conditions that will compare favorably with the awful conditions which have been told about those in Chicago."

(The remark referred to concerned an Italian woman who sewed and received $15.00 for a whole year's work; living on black bread and water). There are men and women in the great metropolis of this country starving to death, literally starving on the wages they are being paid. There are not a few in number but there are many. There are also men in New York receiving wages so low that their little children and their wives must work in order that the expenses of the family may be paid. I say I was interested in this, interested because the friend here comes from the trades union ranks, comes from the ranks of labor where he goes in among the factory men and women, where he knows the facts concerning their lives, and it is interesting to see them grasping the situation, the general tendency, and to note that we are ever on a decline. The conditions of the working class are growing worse; they must of necessity continue to grow worse under our present economic system, under our methods of doing business. We may prevent them from going down faster or slow them in going faster, according to our action, but so long as the methods now pursued in business prevail, the conditions will grow worse and the standard of living will constantly become lower. We are here to-night, this May Day evening, to celebrate an International Labor Day, May Day. Why was May Day chosen? Why this Spring time? We know that they, the workers, always have their troubles with them; always bear their burdens; yet somehow in the Spring time there is something inspiring and some joy that comes with it, and when we look out at Nature and see her garbing herself in green and bedecking herself in flowers, it is fitting that we too should sing the inspiring song together, that we too tion from the cold Winter which has just passed and we look forward to the beautiful Summer and the harvest that is coming, and for this reason the Socialists of the world take this day as the day between two extremes.

Though the Winter of the working class has been hard, though the frosts have been bitter and cold, yet there is now Spring time for them; there is coming a Summer time for them; there is coming a day of rest from their toil. For the first time in the world's history has the working class begun to see that there are interests in this world that bind them together, nation with nation. For the first time they are stretching their hands across the former lines of nations (they are forgetting nationalities). They are looking upon each other as men of a mutual and common interest.

The last century's development in the great economic and industrial resources of machinery have brought into life new possibilities. They evolve great questions, great opportunities, great consequences, and the modern development of machinery has touched the eyes of the working class with its magic wand and they see for the first time the possibilities in store for them in the future. They see for the first time that the energy of the working class applied to the productive power now in existence and when the results are distributed among them equitably, that their conditions will rise not only into comfort but into luxury.

So on the May Day of the economic development, half-way between the Winter of despair and the Summer of plenty, the workers stand turning their backs upon the Winter, looking forward to the Summer, and to-night you can hear the tramp, tramp of millions of workers all over the world unfurling their flags. In Germany they are gathering together; in Italy; in Spain; in England; Austria, and France. All of them are marching forward to-day. Their tread shakes the thrones of Europe. The time is coming when the May Day, it is near them, will be the funeral day of capitalism and the day in which the working class republic shall be established, when the Co-operative Commonwealth will be ushered in and class war will be ended. (Great applause.)

As we look upon the horrors of this awful condition now prevailing among us, as we think of a civilization that will permit its men, its fathers and its mothers and children to work from early morning until late at night for a mere pittance, for a sum of money on which the family can not live, and thereby, forces the remainder of the family, though babies they are, to go to work, I say why is it that a civilization, a civilization professing to be a Christian civilization whose principal tenets are "Love your neighbor as yourself; if a man smite you on the cheek, turn unto him the other." I say why is it that civilization which takes these for its principal tenets are constantly improving their lives, constantly enlarging their gauding armies, constantly calling for more militia, constantly increasing their police force; is it because these nations mean to turn the other cheek? What determines this action? We say it is because men are weak. No, this is no answer. This is only a use of other words to state the same fact that they are fighting. You have a little war here; one between the blacksmiths and the New York Central Railroad. Rather an unequal war is it not, but it is war, for you can kill a man by attacking him with a vacuum in his stomach as easily as making a vacuum in his brain. (Applause.)

Mr. Harriman here placed himself in the position of the employing capitalist, and his hearers in the position of wage earners, and then continued as follows:

"I am in a position to buy you for an ever-decreasing portion of your product. I have transferred your life, your energy, your power to myself, and now I am king. You say it is to your interest to keep your product. I say it is to my interest to keep your product. If you work longer hours, the employer gets more power out of you. It is power he is after. This fact, that one man can take a part of the product of many, is what happens to bring about the strike in the mines of Pennsylvania. You are dealing with a great system that grinds out profits, not with the managers of that system, and as long as the workers are divided themselves who are to counter the industrial field will take the power from the laboring classes. Your products feed the great fortunes, and the fortunes give power to take more of your products. The incentive in life of the great capitalist is not to make the lives of men comfortable, but their whole aim, under the present system, is to increase their fortunes and their power out of the products of the workers. The capitalists can live easier by using your power than by using their own power."

"The working classes can never get more than the total product, and it therefore becomes the interest of the working classes to abolish the wage system, the capitalist, and the profit system, and so inaugurate the system that will return the products of their toil to themselves. Do you not see that your interests are not with those men who are striving to open the markets of the Orient to dispose of the products of your power? Do you not see that the capitalists of all countries have one interest? The working people of all countries have but one interest, viz: an interest that will show to them that they have the power to take by reason of their votes every advantage that will accrue to them from the products of their labor. Who is it who has the right to products of your labor, if not your babies? Who is it who has the right to live in gilded palaces while you

"One of these fine May Day mornings, after you are alive to your interests, you will see the hosts of the nations under the flag which are now unfurling, grown into a power welded together by their interests, the interests of their children and their homes. Then the votes will be cast that will wipe out the profit system; then will be ushered in the Co-operative Commonwealth; then they will not only lift themselves but everyone, into a higher civilization; then war will disappear, because the incentive to war will be gone. Upon the interests of the working class, we, the socialists of the world, build our organization and the gates of Hades and capitalism cannot prevail against it." (Prolonged applause.)

LABOR ITEMS

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Exchanges, Throughout the United States.

New headquarters for the local Plumbers Union have been opened at room 20, 163 Randolph street.

It is estimated that a million sales agents and other middle men have lost their occupations during the past four years owing to trustification of capital.

Silk mill strike at Paterson, N. J., has been lost. Court clapped a blanket injunction of the girls and they got scared and broke and ran to cover, and now the capitalists smile.

The label recently adopted by the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths is printed in blue ink on white paper. It will be used especially on finished tools, axes, miners' tools, etc.

Silk weavers' strike at Scranton, Pa., has been won by the girls. Monday the strikers held a big parade and were addressed by Mother Jones and William Mallory, of the New York Worker.

The Connecticut legislature has a very thorough and conclusive way of doing business. The House of the Connecticut Assembly recently rejected a bill for an eight hour day by a vote of 160 to 25.

In California the old S. L. P. has been barred from the official ballot, the court holding that the "kangaroo" being the majority, had the right to use the name, and that their combination with the Social Democratic party did not destroy that right.

It is reported that the friction between the local unions of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' union has ceased. Secretary Pryle reports that every union in the country is now in line with the International Association.

Employers of San Francisco have combined and publicly declare they intend to combat trade unions. The sum of $50,000 was contributed to a fund to be used against organized labor. No; there is no class struggle waging! This is only a bit of fun!

A representative of the Bricklayers' International Union has been sent to Louisville to bring about an amalgamation of bricklayers in that city. An organization tour will be made through Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska.

The courts have taken another rap at organized labor. Last week the Supreme court of Pennsylvania, in the case of the Window-Glass Workers Union, made permanent the injunction of a lower court and decided that the organization had no right to force apprentices into a union or prevent an employer from employing non-union men.

Official returns of the recent national election in Denmark are as follows: Radical party, 56,500 votes, loss 1,512; Conservatives 51,145, loss 7,139; Moderates 21,298, loss 14,137; Social Democrats 42,355, gain 11,539. There are the figures in black and white, and they show plainly that socialism in Denmark, as in other European countries, is the only growing political force.

The two editors of the organ of the union stervordors of Havana, Cuba, have both been sent to jail for sixty days for declaring that Captain Young, of the port of Havana, was a liar. Well, if those editors haven't got gall! The idea that any of our carpet-baggers, who threw off "the Spanish yoke" and "set the Cubans free", would lie or steal is preposterous. Down with the editorial! - Cleveland Giltner.

The philosophy of the famous "Iron law of wages" viz. that the wages of labor under capitalism are constantly kept down to the standard of bare existence and the propagation of the species, is officially substantiated by the labor commissioner of North Carolina. "According to the capitalist papers, that official reports that 'the wages of the mechanics of that state increased 44 per cent in the past year but that the wage worker received no benefit, because the cost of living increased in proportion.'"

The New York Central Federated union has launched a gigantic movement of all labor organizations in the state for the purpose of bringing about an amendment to the constitution in place of the prevailing rate-of-wages law which was recently declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals. The organizations will lobby in Albany for the passage of concurrent resolutions in both houses of the legislature in favor of the proposed amendment. If the unions succeed it will be a feather in the cap of organized labor. If they fail it may convince some of the true character of capitalist politics.

The machinists' employed in the shops of Prader & Chalmers held a meeting last Saturday and decided to

SOUTH SIDE NOTES.

The South Side organizer will hold a Sunday afternoon conference each Sunday at 3 o'clock in the Hall at 385 E. 12th St. for a few weeks in order to perfect the plans and help on the pushing forward of the party work. These meetings will be in charge of comrade Walter Thomas Mills who has been elected organizer for the South Division. All party workers are invited to attend these conferences to report on their work and come into contact with the other workers.

Comrade Mills reports less than 200 members for all the thirteen wards on the South Side in his territory. He has set his stakes for 1,000 members and set his sights for the party work. He is a subscriber to the Workers' Call within sixty days. In a circular letter which he has sent to all the clubmembers, he asks every member in the party to give at least one evening each week to helping push the party work. The Workers' Call and secure new members for the local clubs. If the comrades respond there is no question that the party which comrade Mills has set for himself will be more than realized.

Every member in the division has been furnished with a copy of "How to work for Socialism", a Pocket Library book of 22 pages written by comrade Mills, every page of which is full of helpful suggestions. Here is an extract from it on the importance of circulating the party papers: "Never count your work finished with a man until he is a subscriber to a socialist paper; that comes in without knocking and for which no offer is always fresh, is always giving, and is only an indispensable for a socialist as food is for cook stove."

Comrade Rasmussen of the 2nd Ward is the record breaker for last week. His Ward sent him to the Workers' Call office for ten subscription cards, and he got back with only three, having disposed of the others on his way home.

Comrade Dalgaard of the 3rd Ward brought in three new members for his ward club last week.

F. A. Shaw of the 7th Ward is a new member. Comrade Mills has received his application for membership. He is an old-war horse and comes from a family of fighters. His ancestors were among the fugitives who were driven to Scotland, but being too advanced for the colony, he came to America in 1854. In anti-slavery days they were forced to fly from Kentucky because of their championship of the rights of the black man. Shaw was one of the first men in the popular party in Chicago, and also one of the first to demand democratic control of the party and was the leader of the opposition to fusion with that party. Comrade Mills was in the fight for fusion and he and Shaw crossed swords in that encounter, and Shaw did not vote for fusion. Since 1894 he has been a man in the woods, and says he never read a socialist book, nor attended a socialist meeting, but that for thirty years he had been a member of the Social Democratic party, and falling in with some of the South Chicago comrades, found out that he was. Count him a new worker for the South Side. He is a subscriber to the Workers' Call and a contributor to the party funds, an applicant for membership in the 7th Ward Branch, and a daughter in the family is a student in the Night School of Social Economy.

"Crushing Operations."

Those who fight the battles of capitalism often reap their reward in an unexpected manner. The Utlanders whose "grievances" formed the pretext for the war in South Africa are now getting an opportunity to understand what those who pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the big capitalists may expect. Most of these Utlanders were white miners employed on the Rand, and now when work is to be resumed they find that their wages are to be reduced from 20 shillings (£7.50) to 5 shillings (£1.55) per day. The following order from the Chamber of Mines as quoted by London "Justice" will explain:

"The Commander in Chief has granted permission to three gold-mining companies to be gradually increased to seven, to restart-crushing. One of the conditions of resuming operations is that the men working on the mines shall receive as wages no higher pay than that given to Colonial Corps, viz 5 shillings per day and rations; and a second condition is that all British subjects employed on the mines must be members of the Rand Rifles."

As the war is not yet over the necessity of compelling the miners to act as volunteers is of course apparent. But a still bigger disappointment is evidently in store for the Utlanders who imagine that the old rate of £7.50 will again return when peace is declared. They will find that the resumption of "crushing operations" by the companies applies to their wages quite as much as to the ore raised by their labor.

May Day Strikes.

It is worthy of remark that most of the strikes which occurred throughout the country on the 1st of May were engaged in by members of the building trades in various localities, and of these in a majority of cases the securing of shorter hours of labor was the object in view. Of strikes in trusted industries there were none reported. It would seem that workmen engaged in production in the great industrial combinations recognize the fact that a strike cannot be indulged in with any hope of success, unless long and careful preparation and organization is made beforehand. From the nature of their work, men engaged in the building trades labor under no such difficulty and can make their demands known with less concern to themselves as to the eventual outcome. As the entire trend of industry is towards consolidation it would therefore seem that the power of the working class as a whole to fight their battles on the economic field, diminishes as the years pass by, and that the economic development itself tends to make such effort ever more difficult and more uncertain as to results, and thus emphasizes the necessity of transferring the scene of the conflict to the political arena, where the struggle will be eventually decided once

Join For The Second Course.

The Chicago School of Social Economy.

Closed its first series of twenty lessons at the Schiller Building on Thursday. The attendance throughout the course has been most remarkable. For this last night there were more students and visitors than the hall would hold, standing room and all.

In this course the students will have the benefit of the use of the printed lessons from the first and second series. The students will be able to add to the regular work in How to Study, How to Prepare a Speech, How to Keep a Scrap Book, give some Elementary Work in Logic and find time each night for Drill work in the practice of Speaking by the Comrades.

For the last half of the course just closed it has been impossible to advertise or canvass for additional students for the night school because the hall was completely filled with those already numbers.

Those who wish to take this second course should be on hand for the first lesson if possible.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

a hint of the fierceness of the battle when it occurs. Two hundred thousand men were arrayed against Schwab and his associates. Through combinations this general manager Schwab is able to draw an employer's salary of one million dollars a year; yet he discharged men who advocated combination where by they would be able to make two or three dollars a day. The contrast is so glaring that the most dense can appreciate it. And they will be urged on by this contrast, where the struggle comes, to do desperate deeds.

But back of Schwab is the whole system of government. Through idiosyncrasy the workmen have built themselves a state from the government so long that it is entirely in the hands of the capitalist class. And being so, it has become an instrument for the undoing of the workers. That is why Schwab, who gets a million dollars a year, can dare to force two hundred thousand of our fellow creatures to the verge of starvation, if he so will. The pernicious education of workmen in the trade unions and out, that they have no concern with politics, is the cause of it all. If the government were back of the men, and there is no reason to suppose it could not be supporting them in their just demands, the steel trust magnates would possibly cut in a little on their own profits before condemning two hundred thousand men to wear out their souls for a pittance. As an instance of the power of the ballot to win a victory for labor, one need only refer to the coal miner's strike of last year. McKinley had to be elected, and Hanna undertook to negotiate terms for the miners. The terms were entirely satisfactory, as both McKinley and the miners retained their former positions. But if there had been no presidential election and no demand for the votes of workmen, the miners could be killed out on strike, or broken and defeated, they could have accepted the mine-owners' terms. Neither Hanna nor McKinley would have cared, only to send a section of the regular army into the district.

Does not that lesson come home to the workers? And how much more effective would the vast army of toilers be if they marched to the polls and registered their vote for themselves? Yet the next phase of the irrepressible conflict, if the signs and portents of the times count for anything will bring forth to the enemy, not alone in the economic, but in the political field. It is in the political field that the really great battle will be fought.

The struggle by the trust magnates for profits and by the workers for life will reduce itself between them into a struggle for control of the state. There can be only one outcome. With a knowledge of the proper means to get freedom and a firm belief in their own strength, nothing will keep the workmen of this country in a position of semi-slavery. And under a system where a Schwab has the power to subject two hundred thousand men to impossible starvation, no man is really free.

With a knowledge of the proper means to get freedom and a firm belief in their own strength, nothing will keep the workmen of this country in a position of semi-slavery. And under a system where a Schwab has the power to subject two hundred thousand men to impossible starvation, no man is really free.

JOS. J. NOEL.

Does not that lesson come home to the workers? And how much more effective would the vast army of toilers be if they marched to the polls and registered their vote for themselves? Yet the next phase of the irrepressible conflict, if the signs and portents of the times count for anything will bring forth to the enemy, not alone in the economic, but in the political field. It is in the political field that the really great battle will be fought.

The struggle by the trust magnates for profits and by the workers for life will reduce itself between them into a struggle for control of the state. There can be only one outcome. With a knowledge of the proper means to get freedom and a firm belief in their own strength, nothing will keep the workmen of this country in a position of semi-slavery. And under a system where a Schwab has the power to subject two hundred thousand men to impossible starvation, no man is really free.

SPECIAL OFFER

ON THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW

Several months ago we tried the experiment of offering the INTERNATIONAL SOCIALIST REVIEW three months to eight new names for a dollar. We kept the offer open but a short time, for the amount of labor involved in handling the short-time subscriptions is so great that it meant a certain loss to us if we did not keep a large portion of the subscribers. We have justified checking up our list and we are pleased and encouraged to find that over three-fourths of these trial subscribers have renewed for a year.

We therefore make this new offer, the most liberal offer yet made on any high-class socialist magazine: For one dollar we will send the International Socialist Review three months to different addresses in the United States or Canada, but outside the city of Chicago, and to additional names sent at the same time for ten cents each. Observe that the offer applies to New Subscribers only, and that each copy must go to different names; our price for ten copies three months to one address is not $1.00 but $2.10. Six cents must be added for postage on every Chicago address. If you cannot send so many as ten trial subscriptions, we will accept smaller number at fifteen cents each, but with a very little trouble you will find ten people who will thank you for the chance of getting thirty cents worth of the best reading matter for ten cents. We do not send sample copies free, but will send you two sample copies postpaid for ten cents.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Mental Reflections of the Economic Conditions of the Period in Which They Were Formulated. Comments Upon Each from the Socialist Standpoint. Application of the Decalogue to Two Typical Social Parasites of Today.

There are still a few people who believe, or imagine they believe, that the whole duty of man and the hope of the human race are summed up in the Ten Commandments. And as some of these are working people, who would be actualists if their ideas on this matter were cleared up, I believe the subject is one that will repay some study on the part of socialists. And let me begin by saying that I do not claim to be an expert on theology. What I shall try to do is merely to point out a few conclusions that any man may draw by applying the economic conception of history (I think "economic" is a clearer word than "materialistic") to the data given us by modern scholars on the teachings of the Bible.

I remember when I was a child I was taught that the ceremonial law of the Jews, with which a large part of the first five books of the Bible are taken up, was intended only for the people to whom it was given, but that the Ten Commandments were a divine law binding on all people in all places and all times. Of course, to bear out this view, an elaborate explanation of each and every verse was given, adapting them to the conditions of village life in Wisconsin in the seventies, and all phrases not applying to such conditions were deftly explained away.

But I want to suggest another method of study. It is to consider what the Ten Commandments really meant to the people who obeyed them—or disobeyed, as the case may be. This may help us to see to what extent they are related to modern and universal problems, and it may help us to correct estimates of the moral and intellectual sincerity of those who claim to make the Ten Commandments a rule of life today. Let us then take them up in detail.

I. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

This is nothing in the world but a relic of ancient polytheism. Men slowly evolving from the brute and slowly beginning to think conceived of the forces and the beauties of nature—sun, moon, sky, cloud, thunder, dawn, sunset, etc., under the form of divinities that thought and felt like men and women, only were stronger. As language grew in the many isolated communities, each gave its own names to its gods. As war became the all-absorbing occupation, the strongest god of each tribe came to be worshiped as its leader and protector in war, and the gods of other tribes were regarded as common enemies, any respect for whom would be nothing less than treason to one's own community. Set yourself back three thousand years into this mental atmosphere and you will understand the first commandment.

As a youthful Sunday school scholar I supposed this meant that the wicked little boys who recklessly invoked the condemnation of the Deity on their companions were making future trouble for themselves with the said Deity. But of course it had nothing to do with "profane swearing", but was merely an example of the very common effort of religion to make people tell the truth on certain important occasions in spite of their usual habit of prevarication. It is needless to say that it has never proven very effective. In a society of equal people have usually preferred to tell the truth and in a society of "masters and slaves" have usually preferred to lie to the benefit of the time, religious considerations to the contrary notwithstanding.

IV. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but on the seventh thou shalt do no work, etc.

This law, which was by no means the exclusive property of the Jewish nation, was thoroughly sound and salutary. Neither "Mooses" nor the Jews are responsible for the folly of our Puritan fathers, who regarded pleasure as wicked any day in the week, and doubly wicked on Sunday. The rest day once a week has been a relief to the working class for centuries; it is an institution that is divine in the rational sense of the word. The one change that will need to come in it has been well pointed out by Marx in "The Religion of Socialism." It is that with the growing complexity and interdependence of modern life it is impossible that we should all rest on the SAME day. This should be recognized frankly and work should be arranged that every one may rest at least ONE day a week. This will carry out the spirit of the ancient law much better than do the people who ride on street-cars to their favorite church, come home to a five-course dinner, cooked by their domestic wage slaves, and then agitate for the suppression of Sunday papers and amusements.

V. Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

This command is an instance of the common phenomenon of an outgrown social-economic form calling on religion for aid in maintaining itself against the newer and more efficient form.

The family, as an economic unit, with the patriarch as its absolute ruler, was in possession of the field when Hebrew history begins. When the land of the Jews was over-run by the successive armies of conquering nations from east and west, the Jewish people began to get their living by commerce rather than agriculture, and the economic basis of the patriarchal family was disappearing. So the patriarchs availed themselves of religious sentiment to strengthen their position.

It may be urged in reply that honor to parents is a natural duty to which religion properly lends its sanction. But to this I answer that parentage is in itself a mere physiological incident which as such calls for neither honor nor reproach. Father and mother assume grave responsibilities in bringing children into the world. If they meet these responsibilities wisely and lovingly their children will honor them, law or no law, and if not, the case is a case of no law will help the matter.

VI. Thou shalt not kill.

This is a law that all accept theoretically; we only differ as to exceptions. Some draw the line at heretics, others at socialists, others at strikers, others at negroes, others at Spaniards, or Filipinos, others at degenerates. It is too complicated for discussion in the limits set for this article.

VII. Thou shalt not commit adultery.

To understand the actual meaning of this command it should be remembered that polygamy persisted among the Israelites long after this had been an accepted part of their law. What it meant then was that when one man had acquired a property right in a woman, other men should respect that right. Dire penalties were provided for the woman—in case of infraction. Divorce was easy for the man.

The public conscience has evinced to a point where these ancient regulations already seem unjust. But they were the inevitable reflection of ancient economic conditions. Our present regulations are the reflection of capitalist conditions. Collectivism may develop a race of people with enough intelligence and self-control to dispense with regulations.

VIII. Thou shalt not steal.

This command was given in a society where the laborer could apply his labor, using his own tools, to his own materials, and dispose of the product as he pleased. It was then a very simple proposition, the laborer's mind that no one had a right to steal what he had produced. Modern developments have overthrown this simple principle so completely that we find most of the laborers voting to allow stealing to continue. This

A MODERN QUIXOTE

Runs a Tilt Against the Windmill of "State Socialism."

CHAMPION OF COMPETITION

James Creelman's Lascivious Attempt to Discredit Socialism by Exposing a Bogus Imitation.

Up to the present time the usual objections against Socialism, which its opponents generally mistook for arguments, have been easily met and refuted by the advocates of economic freedom for the workers, until it is becoming plainly apparent even to those who ring the changes upon them that they are fast losing any weight they might have once possessed. The "dividing up" theory, was perhaps the first to be abandoned, even the Chicago American frankly admitting that it is no longer tenable; the "human nature" argument has seen its best days, while the "lack of incentive" objection, shows distinct signs of wear. Gradually but steadily the logical power of the socialist argument aided by the far-reaching economic changes that have taken place in the last few years has disintegrated and discredited the silly opposition which based itself upon these threadbare sophistries, until the present day millions of men in this country have at least partially grasped the ideal of economic evolution, mainly through observing the irresistible march of industrial combinations as manifested in the enormous trusts of today, which gave them opportunities which they now deny to others on the ground that competition is wasteful.

It is hardly possible to conceive of more absolute nonsense than is contained in these statements. They only corroborate the truth that millions of people can easily hold half-a-dozen contradictory ideas in their heads at the same time, without ever bringing them together. Mr. Creelman admits that the genius of Morgan and Rockefeller, the representatives of the trust system, grew out of the competitive system, having previously stated that the trust system was hatched from a "false philosophy" which is equivalent to saying that the competitive system is a false philosophy. But Mr. Creelman never suspects that he destroys his own argument by such reasoning.

Again he states that competition is not wasteful, although Morgan and Rockefeller may say it is. If it is, not wasteful how can the mere assertion to the contrary give these men the power to deny opportunity to others? If they have such power, and their critic admits that they have, does it not follow that they are correct in their estimate of competition? Does not their power prove it? But these men do not deny opportunity to COMPETE. Any one who possesses means of production can compete with them if he feels so inclined. Mr. Creelman means that no one can SUCCESSFULLY compete with them, which is an altogether different matter. But he himself states previously that the "greatest and best efforts of men have been inspired by the hope of wealth and power greater than that of their fellowmen." Exactly so. And Morgan and Rockefeller have been merely acting in accordance with Mr. Creelman's idea of incentive. They possess wealth and power greater than

THE SOUTH SIDE STRIKE.

For 1,000 Members and 5,000 Workers' Call Subscribers in Sixty Days. First Conference of the South Side Workers and Organizers Held Last Sunday. Plans for Local Agitation Arranged by Enthusiastic and Determined Party Members.

The Sunday afternoon meeting of the workers and organizers for the South Side, held at 355 E. Sixty-third street, was a great success. The hall was full of active socialists. The session commenced promptly at 3 o'clock and was continuously in session until 7 at night.

In all of this time there was no speech-making, no parliamentary back talk, nothing but reporting of names, arranging of plans, locating best places for our door meetings, getting lists of the party workers who would give at least one evening each week to the work of the party, making up the lists of those who could speak, those who would go to work to learn how to do so and commence to do so under the direction and help of those now experienced in campaign work, getting lists of those who would recite or sing or play some musical instrument at the outdoor meetings, fixing the plans for getting the 3,000 Workers' Call subscriptions, and perfecting and enlarging the party organization. This was a long bill of fare but the comrades took it through to the end. One of the tongue-tied comrades was heard to say that it was refreshing to attend a Socialist meeting where a comrade who could not make a speech could take part.

Large Representation.

All of the thirteen wards of the South Side except the First and Second wards were represented. It was reported that these wards could be relied on to help make a solid front for the summer campaign. Next Sunday it is expected that every ward will have its activists, every one of them, on hand to complete the work so well undertaken. Meetings will be held at this same hall regularly each Sunday afternoon.

Do the Washing of Honor.

Matters of dispute between the workers, speakers and others must be adjusted at the general meeting of the organizers and workers, the committee of organizers having authority to act in such matters, but subject to a referendum vote when the settlement of any matter is not satisfactory to the comrades involved.

Organizers Will Run Meetings.

Organizers will have charge, acting under the directions of the division organizer, of all meetings for propaganda in their several wards and for the time being shall have final authority in all matters which may arise, they will direct the speaking, the canvass for subscribers for the Workers' Call, and for applications for membership in the ward clubs, the taking of collections, the sale of literature, the care of a ward banner, speakers' stands, the police permits and of all other matters connected with the extension of the party work.

Must Attend to Business.

The ward organizer will report to the division committee each week, and a failure to do so will be followed by the appointment, by the division organizer, of a deputy for the ward so failing to report who will perform the duties of ward organizer until the ward shall be able to elect an organizer who will be able to undertake the duties of the office.

Weekly Reports.

The division organizer is directed to report weekly through the Workers' Call the progress of the work, to make his report not only cover the meetings held in his division but to include, and to make of special importance, the work of the party workers, as it is believed that there can be no better news for our Socialist papers than news about the growth of the Socialist party.

Here is the Work.

The house to house canvass provided for in the cover letter to new members, subscribers for the Workers' Call, subscriptions for the organization fund of the district, and the collection of the dues of members in arrears.

All collections, receipts for the sale of literature, sale of Workers' Call cards, stamps for the payment of dues, and all other business with the organizers or division organizers is to be transacted at this weekly meeting, so that all of the errand running by the organizers and the time of the division organizer, for the rest of the week, can be saved for going after the people who are not active socialists. All of the business of the division will be so transacted.

Bank Co-operation with North and West Sides.

The division organizer was directed to confer with the North and West Side organizers for the purpose of adopting common forms for workers and organizers reports, so that there might be so far as practicable, uniform plans and a saving in the cost of blanks.

Reports of sales of cards for the week were only partially made. Comrade Rasmussen had sold eleven, Comrade Horvick 2, Comrade Numan 2, and there were taken at the meeting thirty-one for which the cash was paid, and thirty-nine were delivered and charged to the wards. It is hoped that all of the comrades of the South Side will make their reports next Sunday on the sale of cards, new members and subscriptions for the organization fund.

The collection was $6.07. Workers' Call cards 77.15.

The division organizer reported expenditures for the week:

Postage	$2.00
Stationery50
Materials for making district worker's map25
Car fares50
Workers' Call cards	2.00
Organizers' salary	10.00
Total	$22.75

Remember the meeting, When? Sunday; where? 355 E. Sixty-third street.

During the proceedings the meeting was notified of the unexpected death of one of the most energetic socialist workers on the South Side, William W. Taft, and immediately suspended the business on hand to pass the following resolution of sympathy:

Whereas, It has come to our notice that comrade Laura Willard Taft died this morning, and recognizing that in her death the Socialist party has lost one of its most effective advocates and supporters, therefore be it Resolved, That we hereby express our deep sympathy with our bereaved comrade William W. Taft in the affliction that has befallen him, and testify our esteem for the character of his departed wife.

Merely a Friendly Bout -- "Prosperity" Still Continues.

Now, this is neither more nor less than a prohibition of sculpture as an incident to idolatry, and in a consideration of it we need to avoid two equally prejudiced views. One is that of the orthodox Christian who tries to cover up the fact that sculpture was prohibited and holds that the reason idolatry was prohibited was because it interfered with a lofty mental and spiritual conception of divinity which had been miraculously given to the Israelites and only needed to be handed down intact to insure their eternal salvation. The other view is that of self-styled free thinkers, who are perfectly orthodox in their capitalism and whose heads were never penetrated by the thought of economic conditions having any effect on the growth of religious ideas. These free thinkers talk as if Moses, whose traditional personality many of them accept with all the artless simplicity of a colored Baptist preacher,—as if Moses had foreseen all the beauties of classic and modern art, and had forbidden sculpture for no other reason than that he was a natural born blackguard.

Now, as between these two mental attitudes there is not much choice. As a matter of fact the prohibition of sculpture and of image worship was a political necessity if the national life of the Israelites was to be maintained. "Art for Art's sake" had not been thought of. Images were made for the purpose of symbolizing the popular ideas of supernatural beings. Now the Israelite nation had its own official imagery in its temple, and the temple worship was the cohesive force that kept the little nation together so many centuries in spite of the encroachments of powerful neighbors. Now, if private enterprise in the making of images had been allowed to go unpunished, the cohesive force would have been destroyed and the nation would have gone to pieces. Hence the necessity for the second commandment.

III. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord thy name is vain.

So those belated and bewildered individuals who still believe in the possibility of restoring the economic conditions of twenty years ago, are now reduced to a ludicrous state of alarm, as the spectre of socialism takes ever more distinct shape before their vision. Well aware that the old objections are worthless, they attempt by hysterical appeals and chaotic and contradictory assertions, to exorcise the monster that they see but cannot comprehend. And of this method Mr. James Creelman is a most admirable exponent.

An article from his pen assuming to expose the "fallacies of socialism" appears in the Chicago American of May 17th and its perusal will afford no little gratification to socialists, who will be enabled to judge better of the strength of their cause, through seeing the weakness and poverty of the opposition which its opponents are able to furnish. As "State Socialism" is the dreaded object against which Mr. Creelman warns his readers, it is only fair to admit that he has made out a tolerably good case against it, and as to all socialists, State Socialism and State Capitalism are synonymous terms. Mr. Creelman's query as to how Rockefeller or Morgan can be prevented from dominating when "government ownership" of industries was established, is a question which "state socialists" alone are under obligation to answer—if they can. However to those who see the necessity of a working class revolution as an essential preliminary to the establishment of socialism, the question is not pertinent. State socialism and the trust system according to Mr. Creelman are both "hatched out of the same false philosophy." They are "steps backward, not forward—damnable heresies."

Both declare that "socialism is wasteful" and Mr. Creelman pays it lip, and goes on to state that it develops individual character and that men's greatest efforts have been inspired by the hope of greater wealth or power than that possessed by their fellow men. "The genius of Carnegie and Morgan," says Creelman, "was awakened by the competitive system

1. Neither has any God before JHVH (none at all for that matter.)

2. Neither makes any image nor worships them.

3. Neither commit perjury; they leave that to the more active members of the capitalist class.

4. They do not work on the Sabbath. This statement will hold good, no matter which day of the week be regarded as the Sabbath.

5. The gilded youth honors his parents as the immediate source of his income. The tramp has no parents to honor; capitalism crushed out their lives many years ago.

6. Neither of them has any desire to kill.

7. The gilded youth has few temptations to commit adultery when his money will buy as many beautiful girls as he desires; the tramp has few opportunities in that direction.

8. As to stealing, the question is one of definition. From the bourgeois point of view, the gilded youth does not steal; while the tramp usually helps himself only to such necessities as the Mosaic law would have allowed him to take.

9. Neither one makes any use of the law courts to injure others.

10. Nothing is left for the gilded youth to covet, and as for the tramp, he has given up hope and has become content with what he gets from day to day.

Just a word in closing. Suppose your religious friend asks you if socialists who reject the ten commandments as a rule of life, have any definite standard in their place.

Certainly we have—and it is this: When a choice comes between two lines of conduct, take that which makes for the greatest happiness of all concerned. And in general, shape your whole activity so as best to promote the happiness of the whole human race. And why? Not because any superhuman personality requires it, but simply because experience and reason show that by so doing you will gain the greatest possible happiness for yourself.

Two important deductions however may be justly made from the appearance of this article. In the first place it is plain that socialism, not "state socialism," but the revolutionary movement of the workers on the lines of the class-struggle, is a subject of which the Creelmans and others of their type, are either absolutely ignorant, or afraid to touch.

Secondly, there appears to be good ground for believing that from the disintegrated remnants of the Democratic Party a new movement will be born.

Mr. Creelman continues:

"The socialist in the United States to-day tells you that if all the great industries in the country were owned and operated by the government the workers would be protected from injustice."

No socialist ever told Mr. Creelman anything of the sort. No socialist postulates a society in which the workers would need "protection". A society in which all were workers would have nothing to fear, as there would be nothing to protect them from, and nobody to protect them. Mr. Creelman means "state socialism" and his omission of the word "state" in this instance looks suspiciously like a deliberate trick.

It would be useless to follow Mr. Creelman any further in his exposition of the "fallacies of state socialism", his plea for the destruction of the trusts by legislation in the interests of the men who wish "to engage in business on their own account." Nothing is to be gained by attacking the corpse of Bryanism, and as the economical development proceeds, it may be safely re-distinguished between "steps forward" and "steps backward."

The Speakers List.

Here are the men and women who will help to do the talking in the South Side summer campaign: J. Wanhope, R. Berlyn, T. J. Morgan, Mrs. L. E. Forberg, C. Louis, Leon Shaw, J. W. Johnson, A. Rasmussen, D. Roberts, Paul Pierce, Wm. H. Collins, Peyton Boswell, M. E. Taft, Edw. Gehrs and Walter Thomas Mills.

On the list of those who will add to the interest of the outdoor meetings by recitations are Mrs. O. B. Davies, Miss M. Glover and Miss Lucile Shaw. Both these ladies have room to grow and besides we must have a list of those who will sing or play some instrument of music. But this is a splendid beginning. There are few who can equal either Miss Glover or Mrs. Davies in anything from tragedy to a dialect selection and Miss Shaw is a recent high school graduate with the record of a prize winner in serious work in an oratorical contest.

Here is a summary of the plan:

CHAMPIONS THE MIDDLEMAN.

Senator Kyle of South Dakota, who was once an enthusiastic Populist and a violent opponent of Board of Trade, has now seen the error of his former ways and has made a report on the distribution of farm products which admits the grain speculator as a necessary adjunct to such distribution. He concludes that the farmer now gets better prices and the consumer cheaper bread than if there were no professional grain speculators. It does seem a rather difficult matter to prove that those who add to the cost of a commodity without increasing its value are really benefactors of society, but the Senator manages it somehow, in spite of the fact that James J. Hill, Schwab and Flint have pilloried the middleman as a "mere parasite sucking the vitality of the business body without giving an equivalent return." But there is little difficulty in finding reasons for the existence of any capitalist institution that will persist, and demonstrating its necessity to the community. The simple fact that the middleman yet survives in relation to some industries is all the proof that is required to establish the fact that he is needed. That he has been eliminated in many others by the industrial consolidations is proof on the other hand that he is not a necessity. There is little doubt but that the speculating middleman will be superseded when society gets ready to do without his alleged services, and from all present appearances the evolution of capitalist development will attend to his case in due time and will itself be attended to in turn by the growing forces of socialism. Perhaps the most interesting speculation on this matter refers to Senator Kyle himself. What has happened to change his views on this subject? May it not be probable that, like Pettigrew, a change for the better in his material conditions may be responsible for his championship of the "Board of Trade"?

A NON UNION "WORKMAN."

The million dollar employee of the billion dollar steel trust from time to time gives evidence through the press that in selecting him as chief supervisor of labor exploitation his employers made no mistake. After giving a plausible and convincing argument for the benefits of industrial combinations of capitalists, he puts himself upon record as being opposed to similar combinations of laborers. Mr. Schwab although seemingly inconsistent is quite correct. He knows that the interests of both are antagonistic and says so, and it is a relief to find a man of his type who is not under the necessity of prating hypocritically about the "harmony" which should exist between organized labor and organized capital. A labor organization will divide when it has the power; says Mr. Schwab, and no business can prosper under such division. He is correct again. From his standpoint property is only possible when the laborers are divided. He wants no "artificiality of labor" and says that since 1892 no organized labor has existed amongst the Carnegie Company's employees. The lower priced men are paid more and the higher priced men are paid less, he declares, which is an admission that developed capitalism tends to introduce the "dead level" which the socialists are charged with advocating. But he doesn't dwell upon the fact that the highest priced man in the employ of the company, that is himself, is an exception to this rule, nor does he admit that his reward is conditioned upon reducing that of others, through lowering the cost of production. Mr. Schwab may not be logical, but people in his position don't have to be. As the mouthpiece of the most powerful industrial combination in the world, he is superior to such trifles and can say to those who object to that scope: "What are you going to do about it?" And there is no answer forthcoming from those who look upon capitalism as pernicious.

The latest business combination is reported from Washington, D. C., where it is known by the name of the "Hog Combine," presumably by those who can't get into it. It seems that the 25 employees in the House of Representatives draw a total salary of about $400,000 annually, and the appointment of these employees is in the hands of the clerk, doorkeeper, sergeant-at-arms and postmaster. The pay roll is manipulated by these parties so that the aggregate salary is "hunched" and the places distributed amongst friends of the machine. Favorites of certain congressmen are placed through the influence of their respective patrons, and receive, not the salary attached to the position, but a certain amount of the aggregate, supposedly proportioned to the "pull" of their backers. Thus a clerk with a schedule salary of $1,000 may have to hand over $1,000 to another employee whose position is rated at $1,500, but who enjoys the backing of a powerful congressman. If a member from some state thought that he was not getting a sufficient share of the patronage for his client he took steps to make the appointee of some fellow member "divide up" with him.

The capitalist press declares the entire business "petty and disgraceful," and insists that the combine must be broken up. Now while it may be petty enough, it hardly merits the epithet "disgraceful," unless the press is prepared to admit that the system is limited to Washington alone. The fact is that there is hardly a municipality in the entire country which is not conducted to a greater or lesser degree upon the lines of the "Hog Combine" in the House of Representatives. That the political officeholder who gets his position through the patronage of some influential politician has to stand and deliver at certain times is a fact so well known as to surprise nobody, and whether he has to give up to the political machine or help out the salary of a fellow pup sucker makes little difference. To describe the general custom as "disgraceful" is merely to state that capitalist politics are vile and rotten from top to bottom everywhere.

TO RESTRICT THE SUFFRAGE.

For some time past writers in the Socialist press have been persistent in pointing out that the disfranchisement of colored men in the southern states was merely a preliminary towards a curtailment of the working class franchise regardless of race or color. It is easy to brand such writers as mere alarmists, whose warnings are both groundless and unnecessary, but when the progress of events in the process of disfranchisement is called to mind it will be found that this matter cannot be summarily dismissed unless through wilful and deliberate blindness on the part of the inquirer. It may be remembered with profit that those who decried against the violation of national traditions which grew out of the late Spanish war, have seen their warnings not only contemptuously neglected by the great capitalists, but the latter have openly asserted that the new conditions demand a departure from political theories which, although at one time serviceable, were now merely drag on the wheels of progress. There is no reason for believing that the principle of manhood suffrage will be left intact when so many other ideas which were once asserted as eternal and inherent have been overthrown or cast aside. But on the other hand there is every probability in favor of the belief that whatever seems to stand in the way of capitalist progress either at present or in the near future, will be attacked and dispensed with if possible. And so we find the Washington correspondent of the Record-Herald endorsing his little trial balloon in this direction. Mr. Curtis tells his readers that he has before now referred to a "growing sentiment" in favor of an educational qualification for the suffrage, and he now declares that "public opinion" is so strong on the subject that congress will not dare do anything to restrict or revoke what has already been accomplished in several of the states. "Mr. Curtis expects that this question will be the issue in the near future," and remarks that it may be hastened by discussion in the newspapers and upon the platform where people exchange ideas. He declares also that it is being chosen as the subject for debates and orations by the students in universities and colleges, and alludes to this fact as an "encouraging symptom." The point is not mentioned in the same category, as Mr. Curtis is no doubt aware that from that fortress of capitalism, many voices have already gone forth advocating disfranchisement for the "lower classes." He expects the state of Tennessee to shortly follow the recent example of Maryland, where an educational qualification has already been established.

It will hardly be denied that the putting forth of such a feeling as this is devoid of all significance. The method of claiming "public opinion" beforehand as being favorable to any measure which the great capitalists contemplate, is a trick that has been worked so frequently as a prelude, that it is likely to deceive none except those who wish to be deceived. To declare this "public sentiment" so strong that Congress will not dare to resist it, is at once an apparent recognition of that phantom the "will of the people" as being impotent, and a clever scheme to delude the majority into carrying out the wishes of the minority without suspecting the truth that their own stupidity and apathy is to be the main factor in the proposed restriction of suffrage.

With education in the hands of the ruling classes it may be readily seen that immense numbers of the working class can be excluded from the franchise under the manipulation of the tools of capitalism. There is nothing to prevent either the "qualification" being raised, or the educational facilities reduced, to add to the number of the disfranchised, when the political revolt against capitalism becomes distinctly dangerous. And from an educational qualification to a property qualification is but a step; in fact both, in the control of class conscious capitalism tend to become ultimately synonymous.

It is not very probable that when this "issue" becomes prominent (as many political signs now appear to show that it will) that there will be much opposition to it from those who still retain faith in the possibility of capitalism. Its opponents will mostly be found in the ranks of those who can see the absolute necessity of complete social reconstruction, and whether they succeed in obstructing the designs of the capitalist class, or fall in such obstruction they will nevertheless use it to the fullest extent to illustrate the fact that capitalism recognizes that the only power which menaces its existence lies in the united efforts of an exploited and plundered working class.

If the attempt succeeds, the ruling classes will simply have shown that they intend to make a peaceful revolution through the ballot impossible, and the form which it will be compelled to take will be of their own deliberate choosing. If the free expression of a majority of the community is thus suppressed, only those who have been instrumental in bringing about such suppression will be responsible for what may occur in the future. And while individual socialists may regret the course that has been taken, the ultimate result so far as the workers or a class are concerned will not be permanently affected by the position which capitalism may choose for its final stand.

Why We Are Not Anarchists.

Translated from the Polish.

The individual is to be his own legislator; no one and nothing ought to have any right to dictate laws to him. The will of the individual ought to be the only director of his life. But it is really, true, that man's actions are dictated solely by his own will? As a man yields to the necessity of satisfying his hunger and thirst, so he is forced to obey the laws which evolve from the social life of men. If every one of us were so all-powerful, as to be able to satisfy our needs with a single move of our hand, then certainly no one of us would be dependent upon the other. But a move of our hand does not only not suffice to satisfy our wants, but even the most strenuous labor, if done separately, and not in co-operation with others, cannot insure our welfare. If every one of us were our own husbandman, shoemaker, tailor, architect, physician, scientist, etc., would we be able to satisfy all our wants? Never! Although it is true that this was to a large extent the case in former days, but then, there were no such wants; then labor could not be freed, for it was "little productive"; just with the increase of wealth, the growth of the productivity of labor and the evolution of the machine, the socialist thought ripened. To wish to step backward to the primitive times, means to wish to retard the emancipation of labor. What makes the social revolution possible? This mainly—that the wealth of society has grown so abundant that everybody can be assured of having all his needs supplied, that labor becomes so productive that many of the workers search in vain for work. Now the great productivity of labor is the direct result of the evolution of machinery, collective work, and centralization of industry. In what way, then, can a man be independent from his fellowmen, when at every step collective work is required? At present our life is so intricate, so many chains bind men one to another, that there can be no thought of the independence of a single individual, as that there can be no thought of the independence of any of our limbs from the others, or from the whole of our body.

Our ideals of the social structure are however not responsible for the interdependence which exists in society; that dependence is the result of developed social life, and that state of production which leads us to better social arrangements.

Now, when we once acknowledge that the man is dependent, then what significance has that: autonomy of the individual, spoken of by the anarchists? The single individual will submit to the will of society—not because society has appropriated the right to direct the individual, but because his interests are dependent upon the interests of society. The community of interests then, is the cause of the dependence of the individual on society. Now, there is the question, who is to decide in that reciprocal dependence? Is the individual to rule over society or is he or she to submit to society? There is no third way out of the dilemma, because the individual, who is his or her own lawmaker in things in which his or her interests are tied to the interests of society, rules over it, because he or she hinders it from undertaking such actions, as are, according to the opinion of society necessary to be done. But it will be well to remind our readers that in the present society, the will of the individual rules. The present social structure is based upon the principle of subordination of the will of society to the will of the individual. Although according to the anarchists, there shall be no individuals possessing the means of production, nevertheless the rule of the individual still remains.

Besides the anarchistic theory does not agree with the principle of the social ownership of the means of production. How will that property be managed, when every individual, every labor organization, every society or community will separately dictate laws for themselves. Now there is another question, who will determine for instance the quantity of the necessary coal, or any other product? Today, that quantity is determined by speculation; therefore, the scope of production is regulated according to the enterprise of the capitalist, who invests his capital in a certain branch of industry. The results of this order of things are overproduction and prices, or in other words to-day labor is organized. Who then is to organize in the future, when the individuals or alliances are to be independent from society? We see therefore that organization of labor does not quite agree with the unrestrained will of the individual. The unlimited liberty of the individual could exist only, if the individual were perfectly independent. Labor with centralized production however, makes such an independence impossible. We repeat what we have said above, that if everybody were able to satisfy his wants by his own efforts, and to make everything by himself, then he would not be dependent upon the labor of others. Production of today, however, is centralized, and uses such means of labor as require the collective work of the whole of society. No single man can own factories solely for himself, his work and his wants; on the contrary, one machine demands the services of hundreds and thousands of hands, and one factory often has many such machines. Work, therefore, must be collective, and the individual must necessarily be dependent upon society as a whole. The anarchists demand that an end be put to the present centralization, in place of which decentralization of production shall be introduced. Now there is the question, whether this demand can be realized.

Whence came the present centralization of production? It is the result of the tendency, to produce the greatest quantity of goods at the least possible expenditure of energy. Therefore, today, one workman produces more things than formerly a number of men were able to do. True, the machine and labor saving devices have caused much suffering to the working class, because they deprive them of work; these evil results however are not caused by the saving of labor, but by depriving the working class of its benefits, which are appropriated by the capitalists. Were the working people the masters of the tools of labor and consequently of the whole product of their labor, then every new invention would benefit the whole of humanity. Now, this evermore developing application of technical science, which saves labor and increases its productivity, is possible only with the centralization of industry. The welfare of humanity depends therefore upon our ability to apply our social order to the developing system of production. Socialism says: We submit to the laws of production, but we wish to replace the few exploiting masters, by the whole of society. Then all the advantages which accrue from the application of technical science will benefit all men and not, as it is the case today, single individuals only.

The anarchists demand decentralization of industry. If, however, the centralization of production has removed all the deficiencies and imperfections of old systems of production, then it is evident that with the return of the old methods of wealth production, society will have to give a greater quantity of labor for a lesser quantity of product. The goal of social evolution however, is not the increase of hardship with increasing consumption, but the reverse.

The anarchists promise, that in the future the individual will be perfectly free and independent from others. True; but, that anarchistic future will be paid for by slavery. The man, not combining his efforts with his fellowmen, would become the slave of nature and hardship. Anarchy, therefore, although it would remove exploitation, would not increase the welfare of mankind.

Now the socialists say, that we ought to take advantage of the evolution of production made hitherto, and all we need is to transform the private property in the means of production into collective property of the workers themselves.

But let us fancy ourselves in the midst of the future society. According to the anarchists, every alliance, community, and even individual should be perfectly independent from each other. There is not, and should not be, a common administration of things. Therefore, at the exchange of products, every community will proceed separately and independently from each other. From this must result either despotism of a small minority over the whole mass of the people or competition. To-day competition has yet some good points in its favor, because it weakens the capitalists to the advantage of the consumers. In the future social structure however, in which there will be no place for private property, what significance is competition to have? No other but a constant war between the independent communities, alliances, or individuals. By we all know well, that the lesser the war between men, the greater the social welfare, because, instead of the vain and hurtful loss of energy in strife and quarrels, there will be a combined effort of all to subdue the forces of nature and to generally increase the wealth. But such combined action of all the members of society, can take place only when the labor of the individual will form a part of whole social labor or, to say the same thing in other words, when labor will be organized. An organization of labor however, is not possible without a general social administration, without the voluntary solidarity of the individual with the interests of the whole of society.

SIMPLY ABSURD.

How the "Patriotism" of the British Shipowners is Judged by the American Capitalist Press.

The fraudulent nature of capitalist appeals to "patriotism" has been exposed time and again by the socialist press, and although perhaps the effect of such exposures has on the whole been small, owing to popular misconceptions of socialism and all connected therewith, nevertheless some weight may be added to the charge from the confessions of the press correspondents for capitalist papers. Writing upon the effect produced upon British shipowners by the incursions of J. Pierpont Morgan into the marine transportation industry, the London correspondent of the Tribune holds forth as follows:

"Some of the talk on this subject is SIMPLY ABSURD. The Express prints opinions today full of BURLESQUE, MACDONALD PATRIOTISM, containing such declarations as that leading British lines have hatched an understanding not to yield to any temptations. American gold may offend that capitalist. It is a long time, if necessary, to keep the British flag afloat, and the DIRECTORS WILL ACT FROM PATRIOTIC CONSIDERATIONS OF HONORABLE INTEREST."

There is more of such NONSENSE, WHICH MEANS NOTHING, EXCEPT PERHAPS A SHREWD, INDUCE-MENT TO ENGLISH TRAVELERS TO GIVE PRECEDENCE TO ENGLISH SHIPS.

There you have it all. From their own mouths they can be judged. When the British capitalist talks of patriotism and the flag, the American capitalist at once exposes the absurdity. Nothing in it, he says, except a shrewd move to make profit by appealing to the patriotism of his countrymen to patronize home industries. The idea that any capitalist "will act from patriotic instead of pecuniary motives" is as absurd as "absolute nonsense." When Mark Hanna and the gang associated with him wished to secure ship subsidies, they stated that the main object was the patriotic one of having the Stars and Stripes displayed on mast heads in every port on the globe. That was "patriotism" here, but the British capitalist would doubtless designate it as "bribe" which means nothing, except perhaps a shrewd inducement, etc., etc. Every charge brought against capitalism by socialists may be deduced from the utterances of the capitalists themselves.

The Appellate court in affirming the decision of Judge Holden against picketing by the striking employees of the Winslow Brothers company has but affirmed the fact of the class struggle for perhaps the thousandth time.

It seems after all that the white slave is cheaper than the black slave in South Carolina. The attempt to run cotton mills in Charleston with negro labor has proved a failure and will be abandoned. The negroes would not stick to their work.

The Machinery and Allied Metal Trades National and International Union has declared its intention of going on strike if their demands for a nine hour workday and a horizontal increase of 15% per cent in wages is not acceded to by May 25. If this strike occurs it will directly affect 100,000 machinists and will affect indirectly 1,000,000 men of allied trades.

Prof. Frank Parsons, of Boston, concludes that "if the nation owned the railroads, we could go from New York to San Francisco and return for a five dollar bill." There's little use in pointing out these economies to the people. They are already crazy to pay millions of dollars a year to the Vanderbilt and Gould households for the privilege of riding or walk. The American people fairly ache to be robbed. Let the fare go on.

The strike of street railway employees now on in Albany, N. Y., is likely to be a very stubborn affair. "Constitutional authority is as usual playing an important part. The strikers, aided by a sympathetic public, were able to effectively tie up the street car system. However, the latest advice state that two regiments of soldiers have been sent to protect the companies' property and prevent the public from disturbing "scab" employees.

Sometime ago the DeLeon fake R. T. and L. A. took advantage of the ignorance of the garment workers of Cincinnati and roped them in, with little blowing. Last week those fellows discovered the humbug, seceded and joined the national union. The bogus professor also expelled fifteen more of his dues payers from the "barrel" for various reasons. Dan's brag and bluster fits him to become the leading heavy villain or comedian in a burlesque show.—Cleveland Citizen.

A gigantic bricklayers lockout has been threatened in New York City. It seems that one of the bricklayers unions are striking for better conditions against a certain contractor. The Mason Builders Association have said that unless the bricklayers stop work immediately they will stop work on all important building operations. This lockout if it occurs it will affect eight bricklayers unions with a membership of about 8,000. Besides suspension of work will directly effect 10,000 men. Indirectly it will effect 300,000.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

A large meeting of the Painters Union No. 104, on Monday evening had the pleasure of hearing an excellent address on Socialism from Walter Thomas Mills.

Socialists of the West side are forming a baseball nine and intend to combine propaganda work with pleasure. All those wishing to join please notify Jan. Lambert, 1912 Washington Blvd.

Blacksmiths Union No. 14 will hold a meeting Saturday evening, May 19th, 8 p.m. at 191 E. Randolph street. After the business is transacted a comrades J. Collins will be given an hour or so to explain what socialism means to the working class.

A special business meeting of the 20th Ward Branch will be held on Wednesday evening, May 23rd at 1111 Armitage ave. for the purpose of electing a Ward organizer. All members are expected to attend, as the work to be done is most important.

The open air meeting at Orchard and Adams streets, held last night, was well attended over two hundred people who listened with much interest to an exposition of Socialism given by Comrade Geo. D. Evans. Though the weather was cold the crowd was well up on the speakers.

Proctor and Madison street meeting brought together an audience of more than 600. August Klenke was the principal speaker while Comrade Adolph Gritzel opened the meeting with a musical selection on the violin, which garnered a large audience in quick time.

The Gladiators Union at 71 North Clark street was addressed by comrade John Collins on last Monday night. Comrade Collins showed why Union men should be so cautious and as to the new movement he seemed to want to give any reason why they shouldn't, the meeting adjourned apparently well satisfied with what they had heard.

The 13th Ward Branch started its outdoor meetings about 3 weeks ago with very encouraging results. The first of these meetings was held on May 1st at Kedzie avenue, the attendance at the meeting being usually very large, promises results in the ward. The meeting at this corner is held every Saturday evening, and a meeting will be held every Thursday evening at the usual hour, 8 p.m.

Comrade Mills addressed the Painters Union on last Saturday at their headquarters on East Madison street. His subject was the "task before us." The meeting was well attended with great attention by the audience who seem keenly interested in the lecture. A vote of appreciation of the efforts of several persons being given to address the meeting.

A meeting composed of machinists of all ages in Chicago met on last night at the Y. M. C. A. Hall, La Salle street, to discuss the proposed strike for increased wages and shorter hours. Comrade John Collins got an opportunity to address his fellow craftsmen and took full advantage of it by pointing out, as he had often done before, the antagonism between the capitalists and the working class and how the latter were handicapped in their fight on the economic field using even in the recent labor disputes in Chicago illustrations. If the threatened strike materialized, Comrade Collins will probably get lots of material for further illustrations of the same nature.

"ARMY REFORM" IN BELGIUM.

The ruling classes of Belgium are considering plans of "army reform," which is sadly needed in the interests of "good government," from their point of view. It seems that a system has been introduced by which the payment of 1000 francs exempts a man from military service and as a consequence the ranks are recruited wholly from those classes who cannot afford to pay the blood tax. This system has its disadvantages however, the chief among them being that "army reform" to break out, the army could not be depended on" as was illustrated in the recent labor disputes in the mining districts, where the soldiers refused to fire on the "mob." No dangerous ideas appear that the "reformers" are about to introduce a bill abolishing the ransom and compelling all to serve in the ranks irrespective of wealth or class. But with the usual hypocrisy natural to capitalism this measure is put forward as a "reform" in the principle that patriotism demands personal sacrifices.

But a double hypocrisy becomes necessary. The whole scheme is said to be subordinate to the defense of the "frontier" so that in case of hostilities between Germany and France the soil of Belgium might be kept from becoming a battleground for both belligerents. When it is considered that upon a war footing, the forces of the two countries mentioned considerably outnumber the whole population of Belgium, the falsehood of this pretext becomes thoroughly apparent. If the combatants felt inclined, or military advantages could be gained by using Belgian territory as a theatre of war, nothing that Belgium could do would prevent them. The plain fact of the matter is that the proposed "reform" is merely an effort to make the army a more reliable weapon against the working class, and the fact that it shows a disposition to slight to such usage strikes more to the heart of the Belgian capitalist class, than if the armies of France and Germany were increased tenfold.

Expansion Southward.

It is now stated that the Standard Oil Co. has acquired control of the Mexican Central Railway, and that a Standard Oil man will be elected president. Only recently a son of Helly Green returned from a visit to that country and reported that he discovered a strong desire for annexation to the United States on the part of the "better class" of Mexicans, and already our enterprising capitalists are taking measures for its realization in the future by the modern methods of acquiring "interests" that will ultimately demand a suitable administration of political affairs to accord with them. The universities have already set the example.

also, and now the Professors are talking of South America as the "economic complement" of the United States, and asserting that this country must control the hemisphere as far South as Cape Horn. "It may," says Dr. Edward Meade of the University of Philadelphia, "violate some of our ideas and precedents, but our trade demands it." It is not difficult to deduce the ultimate absorption of Mexico as but the commencement of this program.

Business Theology.

In giving advice to British iron and steel manufacturers recently at a banquet in London, the ubiquitous Carnegie is quoted as follows in the press dispatch:

Mr. Carnegie said the Bible taught, "seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all things will be added unto you." He, Mr. Carnegie, would say to them: Seek ye first the United Kingdom and the markets of the world will be added unto you. The way to get hold of foreign markets, he said, was to conquer the home market.

"All things" evidently don't include the "markets of the world" in Carnegie's opinion, or he would have contented himself with urging his hearers to "seek first the kingdom of heaven." But Andy evidently knew that he could not fool his capitalist hearers, by giving advice which is meant now-a-days for the propertyless classes alone. He was well aware that they themselves were masters in the art of preaching this creed to their wage slaves, and that unless he could put his advice in the form of a cold materialistic "business proposition" it would fall on deaf ears. The British conquest of the "markets of the world" was greatly facilitated in the past, by encouraging the working classes to "seek first the kingdom of heaven," the earnest seeker being usually too much engaged in the business of "seeking another world" to discover the fact that he was being robbed in this one.

However while "conquering the home market" may be sound advice from the capitalist point of view, it is a rather doubtful salute to the British exploiter, to say that the task seems insuperable. The ungrateful fact is, stupid, British workmen cannot be induced to help his masters to a better life, this is too much for them. They actually "work to ruin" two or three times work into one, and don't seem to care a straw whether the home market keeps or not. And worse still, as regards the "kingdom of heaven," he shows unmistakable signs of giving up the search. All this is well known to both Carnegie and the British capitalists, and the latter understand perfectly that the seeming advice given them by an American labor-skinner is in reality merely an ill-concealed chuckle over their inability to intensify the labor of their upruling wage slaves.

"BUSINESS MORALITY."

Swindlers Exposed on one Page of a Chicago Daily and Advertised on the Other.

It is a notorious fact that fraud and humbug have so permeated the entire structure of present society that it is an exceedingly difficult task even for those who attempt to expose some phase of it, to avoid unconsciously dealing in the same article. Some of these attempts are certainly ludicrous in this respect, from the fact that the demands of "business" have so blinded the writers that they are unable to perceive the inconsistency of denouncing one particular form of fraud and ignoring its connection with scores of others which spring from the same source.

For instance, the Chicago Tribune of last Sunday prints a front page article exposing the practices of clairvoyants, fortune tellers, card readers, etc., who in the city of Chicago alone annually fleece the "vulgar public," to the amount of $2,500,000. The entire article is devoted to demonstrating that these people are ignorant pretenders whose claims to the possession of occult powers are merely impudent and shallow impositions upon the credulity and superstition of their patrons. Such being the case it might be supposed that the Tribune would, "in the interests of the public," refrain from becoming a party to the schemes of these impostors. But the reader who would jump to such a conclusion, would in reality prove just as credulous as the dupes of the clairvoyants exposed on the front page of the Tribune. By merely turning to the advertising columns of the same paper he would find that almost half a page of advertising space is devoted to the prospectuses of these rogues, for which no doubt the Tribune is paid at the usual rate. Although the only logical conclusion to be drawn from this is that the Tribune in advertising these fakirs is equally guilty with them in robbing the ignorant and credulous, yet such a charge can be instantly disposed of by pirating "business necessity," a plea which can be used with equal force by any of the impostors who advertise in its columns.

If the Tribune professed a belief in the powers claimed by these adventurers, it is even held that such powers were of doubtful value, some excuse might be put forward, but when it claims positively that these fakirs actually obtain a large sum of money by pretending, and then becomes a party to the fraud by allowing them to display their bait in its columns, it is difficult for any one of average intelligence to draw much of a distinction between them in the matter of rascality.

Yet the entire business world is made up very largely of contradictions of this sort, with the trifling difference that custom has labeled some of them as legal and respectable, and others as illegal and disreputable.

"The Power Behind The Throne."

Capitalist Private Property and its Relation to the "Levee."

With the appointment of a new chief of police it was pretended by many and expected by some, that the malodorous district known as the "leves" would undergo a severe purging under the new regime. Several "raids" were made in the district, a few scores of the most notorious habitués were given a ride to headquarters in the patrol wagons, several professional beggars were also caught in the net, and half a dozen "joints" where robberies had been committed were closed by order of the new chief, a few gambling outfits have been seized and confiscated, and the inhabitants of the levees were represented in the daily press as terror-stricken by the vigor displayed in suppressing their nefarious practices. The new broom had to all appearance been prepared for the proverbial "clean sweep." But it also speedily became apparent that a bait was to be called upon the sweeping process. The levee politicians got to work, with the result that one notorious dive was "suppressed" and reopened for "business" three or four times within forty-eight hours. The press at once began "deploring" the influence of the barrel house politicians and caricaturing "Hinky Dink" and other street names of the same type, as "the power behind the throne" which prevented Kipley's successor from carrying out the "leves" cleaning scheme with which his official career was to be so auspiciously started.

The folly of "vice crusades" has been frequently pointed out in the columns of this paper, and the "reformer" had at least one resort to fall back on, viz., that the police were not doing their duty. It was also charged, that the levee was a source of income to the police officials, which they might naturally be supposed to conserve so long as it was profitable. Now, however, it cannot be denied that the new chief is really making the attempt, and yet it is already plain that his efforts will be rendered abortive. The police, be they ever so willing and earnest cannot abolish the levee nor even van the police and the Mayor acting in harmony accomplish that task, and it is their efforts were seconded by all the reformers, Y. M. C. A.'s and W. C. T. U.'s in the city the result would still be the same. Nor can all the "Hinky Dinks" and "Bathhouses" in the district, with all their followers, all the political bosses, barbers, saloonkeepers, grafters, burglars, bunco steers and confidence men, preserve it, if once its abolition is served upon by those who really possess the power, the owners of property in and around the district, and the various property interests connected therewith. The "leves" is a product of capitalism—a power against which mayors, police chiefs, reformers, temperance fanatics, politicians, divockeers, ward bosses and the "saloon element" are equally helpless. The levee depends for its existence upon a multitude of prominent, respectable, God-fearing church going labor skanking, profit mongering, interest drawing, rent collecting, mortgage owning, loan broking and land jobbing citizens, all of whom are engaged in the business of living from the labor of others, and who take toll indifferently from everything in the shape of property that can be made to yield it. The church, the brothel, the Salvation Army headquarters, the thieves' resort, the drug store, the basement dive, the corner grocery, the saloon, the day nursery, the shooting gallery, the 10-cent lodging house, the pawnshop, anything, everything, that will bring them real interest and profit is loved upon, and will be preserved just as long as the land and buildings cannot be made to yield more in other branches of capitalist "industry." When the "leves" property ceases to do this it will lose its character, not as "property" but as "leves" property, and then, and not before, the levee will disappear from the district. It now occupies to re-appear elsewhere. The "encroachments of business," that is, better paying "business" than is now conducted there, is the only means by which the "leves" can be "cleaned." When it becomes more profitable to erect fifteen-story buildings, large wholesale and retail stores, etc., upon the ground now occupied by shabby and filthy structures, the latter will disappear and the moral (?) tone of the neighborhood be raised accordingly. When this time arrives, it cannot be preserved as a source of income to police officials, neither can the moonlighting alderman with all the political riff-raff of the neighborhood interfere effectually to prolong its existence as "the levee." All the fifth, vice, prostitution, beggary, drunkenness, and thievery which now characterize it will be eliminated to other districts, and will be accommodated by the property owners of those districts, if more real interest and profit accrue from the new arrivals.

"Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest."

But this time is not yet. Levee property is as "sacred" as any other, and even if it is put to "have use" must not be injured. Men who own it in many cases also own property that is thoroughly "respectable" or have "business relations" with those that do. Let us suppose that one of these men owns certain property there. May four rent-paying houses, a saloon, a drug store, a brothel and a lodging house. He does not care anything about the character of the industry carried on in them so long as the rent is regularly paid. A banker in La Salle street, a man with large "business" connections, holds a mortgage for say $325,000 upon the property, upon which the owner must pay the interest as promptly as he may. The banker and the mortgagee body is of course entitled to a fair proportion of his investments; so runs the dictum of capitalism.

Now suppose a new and ambitious police official gets into office and sets about cleaning up the "leves." Everybody, outwardly at least, approves of his intentions and he gets busy. A man is robbed in the saloon of our property owner, and the zealous police official promptly closes the place. Next morning it is opened by order of the Mayor. What has happened? The public are informed that the saloonkeeper had a "pull" big enough to secure the powerful intervention of any "Hinky Dink," who has a still bigger pull. They get to work on the Mayor and the result is that the combined pull of the saloonkeeper and "Hinky Dink" and various other denizens of the levee is too strong for the chief, and the house is opened next morning. But the owner of the property and the mortgagee in La Salle street, with large "business" connections, they of course didn't do a thing. They were altogether too "respectable" to be mixed up in such a matter. They left it to the saloonkeeper and "Hinky Dink," who appears next day in a cartoon as the "power behind the throne."

The banker wanted his interest on the mortgage, which depended upon the owner receiving his rent, which depended in turn upon the premises being "open for business." The brewing operation, which supplied the saloon with liquor and probably owned the fixtures, makes no protest in public, although its shareholders want dividends quite as much as the banker wants his interest and the owner his rent. The other property owners also remained silent though they know that vacant houses reduce rents gravely, and the holders of their mortgages also said nothing. These people all shut their eyes to the supposedly evil influence of "Hinky Dink" and the "public" are hoodwinked into believing that the latter individual and his type are all powerful in preserving the "leves" as a hot bed of vice and crime.

Enough has been said to show that an endless chain of property owning interests is responsible for the levee, although carefully concealed from the public gaze. And the links of this chain are welded more closely together than is generally supposed. Very often the brewery director is also a bank director, the mortgage holder may be a shareholder in the brewery, and even the levee property owner may hold mortgages on other property, stock in the brewery trust, etc. And the entire group may, and indeed often do, form part of a fashionable congregation whose pastor pushes the "vice crusade" with periodical vigor when the appropriate time for that manifestation arrives.

And it is in these men and their connection with the business world, that the "pull" resides; and not in the shabby and unlettered sixth rate politician who runs a gin mill in some part of the pest hole, and who is looked upon as "shrewd" by the still more ignorant rabble who congregate in his "place of business." These men who pretend to answer at the "Hinky Dinks" and the "Bathhouse Johns," and deplore their "influence" in politics are of all people the most responsible for them, through using them for the conservation of property interests on the "leves." They are the modern prototypes of those whom Christ referred to as "whited sepulchrs filled with rottenness and dead men's bones." Outwardly respectable, they support vice and crime, by turning it into profit, and proudly skulk behind some petty and vulgar politician whom they affect to despise. Often posing as "reformers" themselves they destroy even the small possibilities of reforms that perhaps might be effected under capitalism. And in this they have the tacit support of every upholder of capitalist property throughout the country. They understand thoroughly that the immediate abolition of the "leves" by an indiscriminate closing of the dens of vice and crime from which they extract tribute in the shape of rent, interest and profit, is impossible while business interests remain supreme, and that consequently every attempt to do so must prove abortive.

Private property in the means of production or in other words, capitalist property, is at once the creator and preserver of the "leves" with all its nameless abominations. "Moral waves, vice crusades," good intentions, or a zealous police administration cannot seriously interfere with it while capitalism remains. The best that can be accomplished is the shifting of its occupants to another district, and that itself is inevitable at the proper time, when the demands of business decrease its removal. But its complete abolition involves the disappearance of capitalist property, a task that is reserved for socialism alone.

Representative Division.

The Convention of the South West Division Saturday was a representative gathering. Dr. J. P. O'Connell was the chosen vanguard. F. O. Strickland was president. Dr. J. P. A MODERN QUIXOTE argument ownership," or "state socialism" as its "issue" is already in embryo, and it is the birth of this movement that Mr. Greenman is anxious to prevent if possible. And as all socialists know that even the arrival of this bastard cannot dispose of the right heir with which all society is pregnant, they will regard with much indifference and little curiosity Mr. Greenman's endeavors to procure economic education. As for socialism, the child of economic evolution, it will arrive in the fullness of time, and it is not at all impossible that if Mr. Greenman is above ground when the auspicious event occurs, he may by that time have acquired enough intelligence to help celebrate the birthday festivities, by acknowledging that the competitive system has at length brought out the "greatest and best" that was in it.

A Successful Plan.

About four months ago there was noted in these columns a plan for increasing the circulation of the Workers' Call proposed and put into execution by the Twenty-fifth Ward Branch, socialist party. The plan in brief was as follows: Members of the branch started a pledge list and circulated it among the comrades living in the ward, the money thus raised being applied to the payment of three months' subscriptions to the Workers' Call for names selected at random from the lists of registered voters in that ward. The intention was as soon as the three-months subscription expired, to have members of the branch to select for removal and get as many as possible to become regular readers. The work was pushed with energy, the result being that within a few weeks several hundred such names were added to our mailing list from Lake View. Two weeks ago the first lot of three month subscriptions expired and the members of the branch started out to secure renewals. The result was very satisfactory. About 60 per cent of those whose subscriptions expired bought Workers' Call postals and will continue to have the paper a weekly visitor.

The Twenty-fifth Ward Branch are still bringing in three-month subscriptions and will continue each week to sell an unusually large number of cards in consequence. Their plan has been tried and has proved an excellent mode of propaganda. It might be well for other branches to discuss this scheme, and see if it is not possible to put in operation in other wards. The several organization districts might also find it of value in building up powerful organizations.

Press Fund Association.

On Saturday, May 12th, the Socialist Temple, 126 S. Western avenue, was occupied by an earnest and determined body of socialist workers who met together for the purpose of perfecting an association to raise funds for and increase the circulation of the Workers' Call.

The meeting was called to order by Organizer Kienke and Comrade Duly, of the 12th Ward was elected chairman with Comrade Kennedy as secretary. The chairman called upon Comrade Elman to address the meeting upon the plans which he had in view to form the association, which the latter complied with in a brief and distinct speech.

Upon motion it was decided to organize a Workers' Call Association and various plans were taken up and discussed at length by different party members.

Upon motion a committee of four, consisting of Comrades Woodman, Strickland, Higgins and Elman, were elected to draw up a constitution for the association.

Comrade Elman was elected temporary chairman and it was decided that the dues should be 25 cents per month.

The meeting then adjourned until Wednesday, May 15th, on which date the committee on constitution will report and permanent officers be elected.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER

Socialists must Equip Themselves to Make Propaganda from Current Events.

One of the greatest needs of American Socialists has long been a book that should, at once, give a thorough, scientific explanation of socialism in all its phases so as to make a reliable text-book for socialists, and still be so simple in its language and elementary in its treatment of the subject that it could be put into the hands of new inquirers.

A book recently published by Professor Emile Vandervelde, of Belgium, entitled "Collectivism and Industrial Evolution" seems to fill this long felt want. Already it has been translated into the German, Russian and Italian languages. The first part of the book is very pertinent to present conditions in America, dealing with the subject of capitalist concentration and the disappearance of the "peasant proprietor." This is discussed with a wealth of illustrations and argument nowhere else to be found. "The Progress of Capitalist Property" is then traced through the successive stages of corporations, monopolies and trusts. The attempts of capitalist writers to explain this process of evolution are then taken up and thoroughly knocked down.

The second part of the work deals with "The Socialization of the Means of Production and Exchange" and, by far the most exhaustive study of the transition from capitalism to socialism that has yet appeared. The final chapter discusses the objections to socialism in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. Of the book as a whole, it is not too much to say that it is destined to become the standard text-book of International Socialism and the greatest propaganda work yet issued.

This book is soon to appear from the press of Charles H. Kerr & Co. The Workers' Call has made arrangements with publishers whereby it obtains a limited supply of the book which it will offer as premiums to its subscription hunters. The book will retail at 25c. Arrangements have been made to give a copy of "Collectivism" with every new yearly subscription for the Workers' Call. Comrades desiring a copy of this book should bring or send their subscription to this office as soon as possible. Names will be filed and a copy of the book sent to addresses as soon as it is off the press.

Your slavery rests on your neighbors' ignorance. Give him a Workers' Call to help break your fetters.

SYMPTOM OF DECAY

The Economic Significance of John Alexander Dowie.

UNEVEN GROWTH ON SOCIETY

Religious and Political Impostors Who Thrive Upon the Decaying Middle Class.

It might be well to call the attention of those individuals who suppose that the religious impostor John Alexander Dowie is at last on the run, to the old proverb which advises all and sundry to refrain from "holloing" until they are out of the wood. While it may be very true that all falsehood is merely temporary, it is none the less expedient to remember that religious humbug is in its very nature exceedingly elastic and not at all liable to disappear under the frown of "public opinion" as suddenly as those engaged in the same business would like. In considering Dowie and his followers to immediate extinction, because his theory of healing has failed in several well advertised instances to produce the results claimed for it, these parties are fairly open to the suspicion that "the wish is father to the thought."

Went Dowie the only humbug in modern society, and as such, an abnormal quantity, out of harmony with conditions as they exist today, the satisfaction expressed over the anticipated disappearance of his particular cult, might be said to have reasonable grounds for its justification. But such is merely a representative of one particular form of deception, in an entire world of mental and religious shams reared on the structure of a worn-out economic system.

This particular impostor is merely a fungus growth which denotes the rottenness and decay of present society, and his kind may be expected to increase instead of diminish in the years to come. Throughout all history the appearance of multifarious quacks and charlatans has ever been the herald of coming social revolution. Even if it were possible to exterminate Dowie and all his works in an instant, "society" would immediately produce a similar brood to take his place, and a competitive struggle between them extending over a few years would determine which was fittest to survive according to the law of natural selection. It is only in a soul mentally and morally rotten and putrid, that such growths can thrive, and those best adapted to the particular surroundings and environment will always outgrow and overshadow their rivals, just as in the mercantile competitive world. Any one who has observed the growth of the crop of Mesias, Elias, incarnations, dealers, prophets and miracle workers, which has sprung up on all sides during the last ten years, some to wither away in a year or two, others to attain a partial and still others a marked success, will appreciate the truth of this statement.

Now, what was the particular soil in which Dowie's seed fell and flourished? Was it amongst the great capitalist class, the captains of industry, the men who reckon their fortunes in millions of dollars? Undoubtedly not. John Alexander Dowie, from all his utterances is not clever enough to exploit the great exploiters. Any of the large respectable orthodox churches will supply their "religious" needs abundantly.

Neither did Dowie make a specialty of getting the disinherited, propertyless, wage working class into his ranks. In a double sense there was nothing to be got by recruiting in that field. The "workingman" whose chief direction in the eyes of orthodox capitalist politicians is that "he doesn't go to church," was not likely to find anything particularly attractive in the Dowie creed, more than in any other.

Neither did Dowie come to the masses, and therefore was able to contribute little to Dowie's "greatness." Neither did Dowie come to the masses, and therefore was able to contribute little to Dowie's "greatness." Neither did Dowie come to the masses, and therefore was able to contribute little to Dowie's "greatness."

It was mainly amongst the so-called little middle classes, that the "overcoat" grew and flourished like a green bay tree. It was there that he found, unobscured by the glare of a worldly economic position in the modern social structure, the necessary credulity that was to make him great—and a sufficient amount of property to make him rich. His present adherents were almost without exception drawn from other congregations throughout the city, the sanity exhibited towards him by the religious authorities, and perhaps by the responsible for the resignation of some of them on the plea of insufficient salary, their poverty being reduced to some extent in the amount of wealth controlled by the "dealer."

The element that he attracted looked upon "religion" as a reality which had been more or less distorted by false teachings. Though they were unable to comprehend his economic basis as meddling and shaping his different forms, they were nevertheless able to

A STRENUOUS FRAUD

Roosevelt's Opening Speech at the Buffalo Exposition.

A STRING OF EMPTY PHRASES

Some of His Utterances Illustrated in Reference to Current Events of the Day.

The Buffalo Fair, opened under the constellation of expansion, naturally showed the fingermarks of this policy daubed all over it. The opening festivities were perfectly saturated with imperialistic lye (lie). Strenuous Roosevelt's speech formed the centerpiece of the oratorical spread. Of course, he dwelt in general on the "common interests" of all American republics, and in particular on the "grave danger" threatening the prosperity of the United States and her sister republics through old world powers that might wish to acquire new territory over

His speech furnished such good material for socialist propaganda that we quote a few nuggets from it:

Until that system passes away, Dowieism, or other expressions of the same thing, is here to stay. The faith which centres either in religious or political quacks is essentially the same thing, and the crop of both within the last ten years has been equally numerous. The pretensions of Dowie are not one whit more absurd than the claims of those who propose "remedies" for existing evils, while ignoring the economic evolution that has brought society to the stage it now occupies. Between the faith healer and the trust smasher there is little to choose. Economic and religious confusion are inseparable, and always appear most distinctly during periods preceding a great and far-reaching change in the social structure, and only when the nature of such change becomes apparent to the majority will they tend to disappear.

John Alexander Dowie needs no apology for his entrance into society, any more than any other modern quack with a patent remedy for all ills, and the manner of his exit is equally outside the dictation of his critics. Not being able to grasp his significance as a symptom of social change, they will probably continue to fulminate over his "blasphemous" pretensions, deplore the credulity of his dupes and moralize philosophically upon the eternal gullibility of the human race. In the meantime the object of their dislike, thanks to the laws of capitalist private property, can improve the opportunity to secure more firmly in his possession the proceeds of ten years strenuous exploitation in the field of religious humbug. And when all these things are accomplished, the manner of his accumulation will be conveniently forgotten by everybody, with the possible exception of those of his dupes who have realized the fact that they have been "worked" good and plenty.

SOUTH SIDE ACTIVE

Organizers and Workers Meet in Conference.

SUGGESTIONS FOR AGITATION

Season's Work Planned and Started. Open Air Meetings for Next Week. Financial Report Etc.

The second meeting of the Workers and Organizers of the South Division held at 155-63rd street was a worthy second to the good beginning made a week ago. Nearly all of the thirteen wards were represented and the plans of the South Side Summer Campaign are taking shape very fast.

More Workers.

There were added to the list of workers as published last week the following names: Rev. F. U. Miller, Mrs. H. F. Miller, Mrs. L. Dreivogt, M. L. Klawns, W. Cole, R. Bartsch, Lulu Lowrie, C. F. Lowrie, Geo. Mitchell, Little M. Forsberg, Chas. Kimball, Bernard Barlya, making a total of thirty-eight comrades enrolled for pushing the party work, and this before

THE ONE MEETING.

Only one Propaganda meeting, was held during the week and that was held at the corner of 130th and Wallace streets. Comrade Mills and Miss Glover were the speakers. Comrade Shaw had been announced but sent his apology for not being able to be present. There was an attendance of about three hundred; collection $1.55 and eleven Workers' Call cards sold.

The Worker's Report.

There was given only a partial report of the workers for the week. Blanks have been prepared and will be in every worker's hands before the week is over and it is hoped and believed that complete returns will be hereafter possible.

Out Door Meetings.

Meetings were arranged for at the following places: Saturday eve., May 10th, 63rd and Halsted sts., Speakers, Mills, Shaw, and Miss Shaw.

Reflected "Prosperity."

Taking its cue from Correspondent Curtis' glowing account of "prosperity" in the Southern States the Record-Herald publishes a cartoon representing "King Cotton" in the act of presenting a ragged negro laborer with a ponderous bag of dollars, which the latter receives with a delighted grin. Underneath is the following rather inappropriate legend, quoted from the optimistic Curtis:

THE SAME OLD GAME

Bursting of the Texas "Oil Boom" Brings Usual Results.

RUINS THE SMALL INVESTOR

The "Oil of Joy is Turned to Mourning" and the Little Speculator Hasn't the "Ghost of a Show."

The oil "boom" in Beaumont, Texas, has collapsed, and the "crash" speculation referred to in a recent issue of this paper are now undergoing the process of having their reason restored. This is how it is done, according to press reports.

The Way to Do It.

Attention was called to the process by which new members are secured. It was discussed at some length and the following was the general sentiment of the meeting and it was so agreed:—If application for membership is made at the regular ward meetings, the questions on the back of the application blanks should be read by the Chairman and answered by the applicant who should also sign in the place provided on the back of the blank. But it is frequently the case that applications are signed outside the ward meetings and in such a case the worker who takes the application should be very careful to read it and explain the force of the printed pledge to each applicant. The application with at least one month's dues will be reported by the worker to the Ward organizer, who will give the name and dues to the financial secretary of the ward and return the application to the Division committee and the financial secretary of the ward will at once make out a membership card, affix the dues stamp for the month and send it to the Division committee. The application will be turned over by the Division Committee to the General Committee at its next session, but it is understood that all applications are accepted, and members who apply and pay dues at at once become members of the party, unless notified to the contrary by the secretary of the General Committee immediately after its first meeting succeeding the report to it of the application. If this is the way to do it, it only remains to do it times enough and the Socialist party will give us Socialism.

Week's Statement.

The Division Organizer reported for the week:

The Next Meeting.

Next Sunday, everybody will be provided with blanks and the Conference will not need to last so long nor be so fully occupied with the details of the work. It should be understood that every socialist of the south side should report his name to this conference, if he is willing and able to work at least one evening each week for the party.

Program for Sunday.

Next Sunday the meeting will commence at 2.30 and for half an hour our comrades will practice singing Socialist songs. Quite a delegation from the German singing societies will be present to assist in this work. There will be five minute speeches (the speakers are up) on the following topics: "Women's Work with Women—Suggestions," led by Mrs. G. Forsberg; "How to sell Workers' Call Cards," led by A. Rasmussen; "How to explain the Pledge on the back of the Application Blank," led by T. J. Morgan; How to Get a Good Collection from a Street Meeting," led by M. H. Taft.

THE NIGHT SCHOOL.

Comrade Kleindienst suggested a speakers' practice club, and comrade Mills offered to give the tuition in the Thursday Night School to any of the south side comrades who would join in speaking and take regular work for the summer in the south side campaign, the practice in speaking being now a leading feature of the night school work, the one dollar each for the printed lessons being the only charge to such comrades.

Some Good Points.

Among the good points which were made in the conference, here are a few from the many worth remembering. Comrade Richter of the 7th Ward said: "No other work can be as important at this time as enlarging our organization and extending the circulation of the Workers' Call, and whatever is done should be planned with regard to these two things."

Comrade Anderson of the 12nd Ward said:

"What is wanted is not something to take the place of the Ward organizations—nothing can take their place. The plan should be to help the ward organization to do its work, not undertake to do this work for it."

Comrade Dreivogt of the 4th Ward said:

"There are comrades who cannot attend these meetings but they are willing to furnish the money to pay the bills if we need for it."

The Way to Do It.

Recent census returns show that the population of Ireland has decreased something over five per cent in the last decade. Conditions exist there which render the raising of cattle and sheep more profitable than the raising of human beings. The surplus Irishman must seek other countries where his labor-power will more than repay the cost of his production, and the American capitalist stands ever ready to confer upon him the blessings of exploitation, which cannot be procured in his native land.

One hundred and nineteen divorce suits before the supreme court of New York is the record for one day last week, but no far, the Reverend Newell Dwight Hillis has not availed himself of the opportunity for "denunciation" presented by these figures, but then Mr. Hillis is evidently a specialist who devotes his attention solely to the family affairs of Socialists. Even if his practice in this direction is rather limited, he is wise enough to know that it is more lucrative than handling a multitude of ordinary cases of capitalist family wrecking. "Be ye therefore as wise and as venomous as serpents."

The wage slaves who operate the trains of the Chicago and Alton Railway have not been giving entire satisfaction to the officials of the road, and in consequence will forfeit their individual shares of a total premium of $5,000 which would have been "divided up" amongst them had they expended more labor power on the property of the company. The money is stated to have been turned over to the shop fund for repairing engines and cars, the train crews having been informed that they must exercise more care in future if they wish to secure the prize. The theory of "incentive" works both ways for the capitalists. If the reward is given it is supposed to stimulate the employee to greater efforts in the future. If it is withheld the same result.

Mail advices report a "shocking condition" of affairs in the province of Honan in Northern China. Boys and girls are being sold into slavery by their starving parents who are forced to do this to procure food. Just why this should be described as a "shocking condition" is rather difficult to see. The South is said to be enjoying "unparalleled prosperity" and yet multitudes of children of tender years have been sold into the wage slavery of the thriving cotton factories of the Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama, that their starving parents may procure food. The same dispatch states that "important developments" are taking place in China. Perhaps the above "shocking condition" is one of them. Anyhow it cannot be denied that "important developments" of the same sort are taking place in the Southern states as well.

One Alexander Brown, a conductor in charge of a freight train belonging to the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, has been fined $50 for violating the ordinance which provides that a street crossing must not be blocked for more than five minutes by a railroad train. The blockade in this instance cost the lives of seven persons who were burned to death in a tenement house, the closing of the crossing having prevented the fire department from reaching the building for more than ten minutes. Had there been no fire no notice would have been taken of the violation, as the blockade of street crossings for more than five minutes is an event that occurs scores of times daily through out the city, without exciting "public opinion" beyond the extent of some growling on the part of a few more street car passengers. Conductor Brown is evidently at a disadvantage compared with boiler and building inspectors, though he is even less responsible for the fire, than they are for the accidents for which they are paid to guard against.

"MUNICIPAL SOCIALISM."

Leadville, Colorado, has gone the "municipal socialism" one better than ever dreamed of. As befitting a "duodecimo edition of the New Jerusalem" its streets have been found to be paved with gold. The municipality has leased the mining privileges in these streets for a royalty that it is estimated will reach $1,000,000 a year. This will be amply sufficient to give free water, free paving, free lighting, etc., but also to afford a surplus for distribution as dividends. Now if there was anything in the position of the stop-at-a-time gentlemen this should be all that their dreams have ever held forth. But still we have not heard that poverty had ceased, unemployment vanished, bankruptcy disappeared, or that any of the essential features of competition remained undisturbed.

Perhaps a side-light is thrown on the matter by the fact that this surplus is distributed to "PROPERTY HOLDERS." That is all that all present society. The surplus above subsistence is distributed among "property holders."

THE ANNUAL REUNION.

As the date of the annual Workers' Call picnic is less than two months distant, we would call the attention of those comrades who have not yet provided themselves with tickets, to the fact that they can always be obtained at the office of this paper, 25 N. Clark street, at the meetings of the ward branches, and from many of the party members. Every comrade is expected to do his part towards making this annual institution as successful as possible, and no better way to accomplish this can be devised than by each party member doing his utmost to dispose of tickets for the occasion.

Apart from the mere pleasure which the day affords, the annual picnic of the Workers' Call possesses a great value in bringing together on one day in the year, the elements comprising the strength of militant socialism in Chicago, and this annual reunion has a direct effect upon the vigor with which the propaganda is carried on afterwards. To state in print that there are over 5,000 Socialists in the city is by no means as convincing as the actual materialization is bodily presence of these 5,000. Old comrades in the cause who, perhaps, may not have met each other in the preceding twelve months, find their activity renewed and stimulated by actual contact, which brings the assurance that they are still battling shoulder to shoulder for the interests of their class, while new comrades receive encouraging impressions of the strength of the cause which they have espoused, by viewing a goodly multitude holding the same ideas as themselves. Last, but not least, the finances of the Workers' Call are strengthened in proportion to the success of the day, thus making possible the appearance of larger numbers of Socialists at every recurring picnic, and helping to bring nearer the establishment of the future society which is the common object of all Socialists throughout the world. These "incentives" should be sufficient to induce all good Socialists in Chicago to take hold by providing themselves with tickets for disposal and thus making the picnic successful even beyond expectations.

THE "RIGHT" TO "BLACKLIST."

It is rather strange that the repeated decisions, given against workmen through the courts, should have failed to convince them of the plain and apparent reasons for such decisions, outside of the flimsy pretext of "rights," which is always put forward when brother capital and brother labor appeal to the law to decide their differences. Last week in a Chicago court, the much talked of "blacklist" received legal sanction, the judge declaring that the packing corporations had the "right" to agree together to refuse employment to certain persons, inasmuch as a single corporation possessed that "right" there was no reason why a combination of corporations should not also exercise it in the same manner.

Since the great railroad strike of 1891 this "blacklist" question has almost continually occupied a prominent place in labor journals, and not one that we remember to have seen has discussed it from a different standpoint than that taken by the judge who has just stamped its operation with the approval of law. It has been treated essentially as a question of abstract "right" equal by the representatives of capital and labor, as well as by the legal fraternity, who are conversant, supposed to constitute an impartial tribunal for the settlement of such matters. It has never been discussed as having any relation to the economic system of today, but always as an isolated and unrelated question, a proposition which contained sufficient data to furnish its own solution.

That its advocates should be perfectly satisfied to have it considered in this light is not wonderful, but that its opponents should also agree to occupy the same ground, may appear somewhat strange owing to the fact that in every case they have been balked or defeated in their attempts to have it legally condemned from the standpoint of "right."

But after all there is no mystery about the matter. The discussion of the question of "blacklist" in connection with the whole modern structure of society, would inevitably lead to the Socialist view of the matter, by challenging the "right" of private property in the means of production as the source, from whence the "right to blacklist" is incontestably derived. An inquiry started upon lines which would logically lead to socialism, evidently carries with it more terror for the average "labor leader" than his zeal for the abolition of blacklist is able to overcome.

The "right of private property" once admitted, the "right" to debar certain persons from using that property, follows as a matter of course. Those who object to the latter, while still insisting upon the "sacredness" of the former, have no reason whatever for questioning the correctness of the judicial decision.

If capitalism is "right," blacklist is also "right," and there is no middle ground left to stand upon. The abolition of the one logically involves the abolition of the other, and only those who see and understand their connection, and manifest it through working for socialism, have any title to be regarded as genuine combatants for the overthrow of blacklist. While workmen still remain simple enough to appeal to capitalist law against the workings of capitalism, they will be continually reminded of their folly through adverse legal decisions. When, instead of appealing to laws made by their oppressors, they unite for the purpose of securing the law-making power for their own class, the question of "blacklist" will not only disappear, but the conditions from which it springs will also vanish with it.

THE ALBANY STRIKE.

After twelve days marked by riot and bloodshed, costing the lives of several people, and the maiming of many others, the great street car strike at Albany, N. Y., has at length been settled, and as the capitalist press says, "If the agreement is kept," peace is assured for at least three years. The union men have obtained the greater part of their demands and have in turn made some "concessions" to the company. The three thousand troops who were sent to the city to maintain law and order and incidentally protect "scabs" have been returned to the places from whence they came. The dead have been buried, the wounded are progressing towards recovery in the hospitals, and the harmony between capital and labor has been restored for a period of three years—"if the agreement is kept."

There is nothing about this strike to distinguish it from many others of a similar nature that have taken place, except perhaps the alacrity with which the capitalists resorted to armed force for the protection of their "sacred" property, which from first to last has been created and operated by the labor of the working class alone. The speed with which the strong arm of the law was put in action in this case shows conclusively that the capitalists are beginning to recognize that the status of private property in the means of production is being gradually weakened at its foundation by the socialist thought that it is to be preserved, the armed hand must be resorted to without delay. No time is wasted in scolded arbitration on either side, though it is pretended that an "agreement" made under the muzzle of rifles may possibly last three years.

It would be useless and misleading to enter into a discussion of the relative merits of either side of the case. While the cause of the inherent antagonism between capitalist and working class remains unknown to the latter, their attempts to destroy property are the natural expression of their economic ignorance, while the efforts of the capitalists to protect their property by natural, it is beyond the power of either in present conditions to prevent the recurrence of such incidents, and as the capitalist class have recognized this fact to the full, their determination to settle such matters by the shortest possible method is easily understood.

These inevitable collisions between the classes clear the road for socialism in many ways, and while the socialist can neither prevent or advocate them, he nevertheless is well aware of their import to the movement in which he is interested. No body of workmen emerge from a strike of this sort in the exact mental condition in which they entered it. After the battle is over a few men will always be found who have been forced to recognize to some extent the underlying causes of these outbreaks, and such men must of necessity approach the socialist view of the structure of modern society.

The prompt resort of the capitalist class to armed force, cannot but attract the attention of some of the more intelligent of the strikers to the fact that the possession of the power of the state in its totality, Legislative, Judicial, and Executive, is the source from whence capitalism derives its strength. This conclusion once arrived at, it is comparatively easy to see that this possession is in turn derived from the votes of the workers, and when once this fact is grasped, the necessity of socialism, the organized united power of the working class exercised for the material interests of that class, becomes easily apparent.

In another and different manner, these collisions prepare conditions for the establishment of socialism. The cost of the suppression of this strike, amounting to some $40,000, will fall upon the "tax-payers" of Albany County, the owners of small properties and petty capitals. None of these men need be told of the difficulty, may the impossibility of compelling large corporations to contribute what is called their "just share of the burdens of taxation," and as for the working class, which is even now almost powerless, it is evident that it is still more impossible to look for any relief from that source. A class which receives its wages the bare cost of its production and maintenance as a class, cannot be levied upon, for the very good reason that it possesses nothing. Quarrels between the great capitalist corporations and their employees, in which a display of armed force plays a part, therefore tend to eliminate the small capitalist and property owner, who is forced to bear the greater part of the expense incurred in the protection of the private property of the great corporations and the re-establishment of the status quo.

For these results it is folly to hold individuals or open classes responsible. The society of the future is being evolved through the clash of antagonistic material interests which will ultimately find their solution in the collective ownership of productive property, and such incidents as the Albany strike are at the same time factors in this evolution, and indications that the class struggle has reached a stage where its manifestation tends ever more to assume the form of physical force.

Harmony, Sweet Harmony.

For the benefit of those well meaning ninnyes who drift out their stale platitudes regarding the possibility of permanent harmony between capitalist and laborer, and deprecate or deny the fact of a class struggle, the following injunction issued by a Kentucky judge against striking coal miners in that state is hereby reprinted from the daily press:

"You are hereby enjoined and restrained from closing down the mines of the plaintiffs, from injuring or damaging their property, from interfering with or destroying their business, from persuading, soliciting, causing or compelling any of their employees to stop work or abandon their contract, from retaining any part of the wages of the employee or soliciting, collecting or expelling from any person or persons any money or property, disbursing or paying or furnishing any money or property for the purpose of maintaining, supporting, or furnishing any person or persons endeavoring to injure or damage plaintiffs' mines or business, or to close same down, or in persuading or causing or compelling any employee of plaintiffs to stop work, or receiving from any person any money, property, supplies, arms, ammunition, liquor, or other things to be used for any act in or to furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in the petition in this action."

The substance of this admirable injunction is to strike, forbid the employees from striking, and the employers from interfering with the business of the strikers. It is neither "famous" nor "extraneous." It is nothing but the logical and confident expression of class-conscious capitalism using its instrument, the law, to suppress the workers.

That "handwriting on the wall," with which Dowie is supposed to be conversed, translated into English, runs this way: "Thou art weighed in the balance and the law is found wanting."

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

Ten thousand copies of the "Acts of the Apostles" in the Tagalog dialect, it seems have been lying in Hong Kong for a dozen years, waiting for entrance into the Philippine Islands, from which they were excluded by the Spanish government. As "these books were the property of the British and Foreign Bible Society, there is good reason for believing that our Anglo-Saxon kinsmen on the other side were preparing for any eventualities in the way of "benevolent assimilation" which might possibly occur. John Bull is not quite so slow as some folks imagine, even if he did get left in this case.

But Dewey's guns opened the way, and the job lot at Hong Kong has at last reached its destination, the acts of the modern apostles of capitalism having preceded those of the ancient apostles of Christianity. Now watch out for the rapid evangelization of the "better classes" in our new possessions, just as soon as they come to realize that conversion to the new faith is better adopted to the new industrial conditions of exploitation which will be introduced. Ten to one we will see its first manifestation in an attempt to decrease the number of religious holidays, on which no work is done, which so well suited the indolent nature of the Spaniards in tropical countries.

According to British law, the King of England cannot take legal proceeding for libel against his subjects, and for this reason it is stated, the newspaper edited by Wm. O'Brien was suppressed. Even if the law were different, it is not very likely that the old debauchee would care to avail himself of the privilege. "The fierce light that beats around a throne" may be a fitting subject for a lickspittle poet to praise about, but would hardly bear exhibiting in a public court.

The small oil speculators who have been wiped out in the deals at Beaumont, Texas, will not be the only parties whose occupation will vanish with the find. The manager of a steamship company declares that such an inexhaustible supply convenient to tide water will supplant coal to such an extent as fuel for marine propulsion, that the stoker will be almost entirely eliminated in consequence. Three barrels of oil, he says, will do the work of one ton of coal, weighs 40 per cent less, and can be delivered on board at 25c per barrel.

Some evil disposed persons have insinuated that the officials of the First National Bank in ordering the employees to have their photographs taken for a "bank album," are in reality attempting to protect the bank against the results of possible dishonesty on the part of the clerks. That this view of the matter is incorrect, is amply proven by the fact that the photographer himself states that he doesn't anticipate that the employees will show the slightest reluctance to comply with the order. Of course if they did, it is apparent to all that the project would be abandoned at once, as the bank officials would never be guilty of hurting the feelings of their employees by insisting upon having it carried out.

"We suspect," says the London Spectator, that before the century is old, efforts will be made to prevent these grand stock exchange tournaments, and impede the possession of systems of communications by single individuals. That the suspicions of the "Spectator" will be confirmed there is little doubt. The spectre that haunts Europe, the spectre of socialism, is the apparition which brought forth this remark from the conservative "Spectator." It will appear to others also in due time, and when they become more familiar with its outlines, they will "suspect" that it means something more than an effort to regulate stock exchange transactions and impede possessions etc. "Spectators" who really possess the faculty of seeing, have long ago passed the stage of "suspecting" as regards these matters.

Another "reformer" has started out to "elevate the lower classes," particularly those who inhabit the "lows." His idea of elevating that unwelcome district is to begin with a physical cleaning of the individual, resident, and the first lecture on his series will bear the title of "How to Hygienically Take a Bath." The press reports state that the reformer in question wishing to obtain some pointers as to how to attract a crowd, applied to the experienced "Hinky Dink" for his advice and was informed at once that he might try "letting out a lunch" as an inducement, an answer which in reality contains more wisdom than was ever dreamt of in the philosophy of the average "reformer" who generally deprecates the materialistic methods which the "lows" employ with such success, and which have enabled that celebrated statesman Johnny Powers to retire with property amounting, as is popularly estimated, to a million dollars.

From dispatches state that industrial troubles are rife in Italy, Milan being the storm center, with 15,000 men on strike who have organized themselves into 15 battalions, each 1,000 strong. The whole movement is declared to be undeniably in the hands of the socialists, and the superstitious information is added that it is of revolutionary character. The wealthier part of the inhabitants is said to be leaving the city in large numbers and the government is unable or afraid to interfere although the military organization of the strikers is clearly illegal. The capitalist press, which a few months ago advised the Papal Nuncio as a "Deathblow to Socialism" will evidently try to have to guess again, and Mr. Premier Radial, who declared that "there is no class struggle," may perhaps feel inclined to re-consider his previous opinion, in the face of the conditions which now confront the possessing classes in Italy.

Over to Ireland it seems that the institution of "trial by jury" is somewhat out of gear. The Nationalists complain of "jury packing" which excludes their followers from acting in the capacity of jurors, while the other side declares that if the jurors are not "selected" (which is a much more respectable term than "picked") it would be impossible to get a proper verdict, which is practically a confession of the fact that "might makes right" and that under present conditions, the law is simply the will of the ruling class made binding upon all.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Comrade M. H. Taft.

To the Chicago Comrades in the Socialist cause:
 It is with sincerity and gratitude that I thank you for the kind words of sympathy that came to me from so many comrades at the time of my great sorrow in the death of my wife. Many of you know me pretty well, and I am sure that you know in part the close and perfect companionship that existed between my wife and myself, of our joy in working together for the cause, as well as of her rare and sweet spirit. The tender and sincere sympathy of you, who thus know in part the greatness of my loss, has been to me a real help and makes my sorrow less unbearable. Fraternal yours,
 M. H. TAFT.

Music For Socialists.

We have received from S. Seller of San Francisco, Cal., a copy of the new labor song "Ninety and Nine," words and music complete. The regular price of this song is 25 cents, but comrades wishing to procure a copy can do so by mentioning this paper and mailing 11 cents in postage stamps to S. Seller, 1287 Mission St., San Francisco, Cal.

Wrote Him Down An Ass.

One of the most certain signs of the growth of socialism is the increasing number of pupil attacks upon it which are invariably reported, or sometimes perhaps misreported, in the public press. For instance Dr. Lyman Abbot of Plymouth Church in New York is declared to have thus expressed himself in his sermon last Sunday:

"Socialism argues, that so long as private property exists so long will there be ambition and striving for power on the part of the individual. 'When we destroy this,' says the socialist, 'and make everything into one state—in other words, when we have abolished Mr. Carnegie and established Mr. Croker—all will be well.'"

From what we know of Dr. Lyman Abbot, it is rather difficult to accept this, imbecile statement as an expression of his views on socialism. It is altogether more probable that the reporter instead of Dr. Abbot is the liar in this case, but so much has been lately published regarding pulp denunciations of socialism, that it is not unlikely that many of these utterances are specially manufactured for the occasion in the hope that they will pass unperceived amidst a torrent of similar rubbish. But at the same time the capitalist press will afford Dr. Abbot the opportunity to protest against being represented as a fool by an enterprising news gatherer in search of acceptable "copy."

Socialist Pointers

Have you tried one of Belyin's cigars yet? If not, why not?

The worst thing the socialists would do to the rich would be to put them to bed.

It takes a man who has never made a study of socialism to tell just what the socialists want.

The new chief of police is not going out of his way to turn the rich law breakers out of town.

It is by individual efforts that socialists are made. Brass bands only make democrats or republicans.

The eight hour day is better than the sixteen hour day but under socialism it would be the four hour day.

Why shouldn't McKinley be elected for a third term? If prosperity is a good thing let us have our fill of it.

J. Pierpont Morgan may be making socialists, but it is our business to gather them in and direct them aright.

The judges by their decisions are going to drive workmen to political action whether the latter like it or not.

Let Dowie continue to fight the labor unions and he will soon have the capitalist press patting him on the back.

The party press is the life blood of the socialist movement. When it has a good healthy circulation all is favorable to progress.

Blacklisting is all right and boycotting is all wrong, that is what the class conscious, capitalist courts have to say about it.

If free trade causes the capitalist to have a fit, he would jump off the earth at the thought of the entire socialist program.

No fear that the Workers' Call will receive too much money, as every cent received above expenses will go to improve the paper.

Pettigrew was class conscious when he was poor and he is class conscious now that he is rich, but how about those he is exploiting?

Automobiling is said to be a regular fad. Have you ordered your rig yet or are you working for less than you earn that another may ride?

As we grow a little stronger just watch the politicians turning double back summersaults trying to get into the socialist movement.

The president can travel from one end of the country to the other without expense, and under socialism we could all do the same thing.

Carnegie transfers the labor of Americans amounting to $10,000,000 as a free gift to his fellow Scots and he expects to be applauded for doing it.

The millionaires who have volunteered to act as street inspectors will not soil their hands with toll. The job of bombing will just about suit them.

The trusts will soon own everything but the votes of the people and unless the latter are class conscious they will be able to buy them when needed.

If the district organizations are pushed with vigor some of the political snakes so nicely figured out may be thoroughly smashed at the next election.

It is announced that under no circumstances will the black man of South Carolina be allowed to vote, and still we shed tears over the unhappy lot of Agulnald.

Now that Schwab and the rest of the millionaires have told the young men what to do, the old men in the poor houses should be heard from to let the boys know what not to do.

It will be observed that it was the wealthy owners of the automobile who got the credit of that trip from New York to Chicago and not the common mechanic who went along to run the machine and do the work.

Mailing and Forwarding.

Those credulous mortals who insist upon legislation against the trusts, would do well to ponder the following statement from Prof. Geo. T. Ladd, professor of philosophy in Yale University:

"Twenty years ago the great corporations of this country were persistent lawbreakers, but in these days they do not need to break them, as they have become too powerful."

As an illustration of this the professor is quoted as follows:
 "Some years ago while in Chicago I found that if I cheated the Illinois Central railroad out of five cents I would have to serve a long imprisonment and pay a heavy fine. If an ordinary highwayman should, however, have met me on the street, knocked me down, and stolen all my money, and even killed me for that matter, he would have escaped with a much lighter sentence than I who had cheated a big corporation out of a paltry nickel."
 The professor has merely stated in other words the truth that socialists have always maintained, that the law is the servant and creature of capitalist interests for all general purposes.

LONG HOURS, SMALL WAGES

Machines Specially Constructed for Operation by Child Labor Exclusively.

[The following article is taken from a letter from a comrade who is passing some weeks in the South and who took the opportunity to see for herself something of the "new prosperity" developing around the southern cotton factories. The particular one described is located at Walhalla, South Carolina.]

The factory whistle awoke me at five and I decided I'd get up and go as I might not have so good a chance again. I dressed and went out on the street. There was only one individual in sight and I asked him the way to the factory. He said "they were not working" this morning, "which gave me the impression that they were not going to work, but upon questioning further I found that it wasn't yet time. He told me that the factory whistle would blow twice at a quarter to six for the hands to eat breakfast, then again at 6:30 for them to begin work. So I went back and waited half an hour, then when I started, I walked along with some of the girls who work there, and questioned them, after they questioned me first. They asked my name and if I was going to work in the factory. I asked them how much they got. They said "15 cents a cut." I asked how long it took to make a "cut," and they said "sometimes it takes more'n a day." I went in with them to the weaving room, two-thirds of which was taken up with machines arranged in rows 15x20. The factory is new, everything is clean, and the sunshine streamed into the great windows which had curtains of the white cloth woven in the room. The machinery had not yet started up and the girls quietly took their places at the machines, laughing and chatting as they passed each other. Each girl cares for four machines. The foreman comes around to take the names of new applicants for work, and while he was doing it the machinery started up and the place that had been so bright and quiet and cheerful turned into a pandemonium. The noise was deafening. In order to make anybody hear you had to put your mouth close to his ear and shout at the top of your lungs. The foreman came and asked if I wanted work. I said no, I wanted to go through the factory, and asked him where the process began. He said up stairs. So I went up and began at the beginning. The big bales of cotton are first pulled open and the cotton put into the shredder which separates the waste from the good cotton and twines the latter out on huge spools in the form of cotton batting. Two men were at work here, one for each shredder, and I talked with them, and asked questions freely. People can visit the factory and go where they like and ask questions of the hands if they want to.

I next went to the machines where these big spools are inserted and the cotton is spun off into big soft ropes; these are spun again and again at different machines until the fine thread used for the cloth is made. Young men and boys work at the machines where the smaller spindles are used, and finally children from eight to twelve work at the smallest spindles. The deftness with which these tiny creatures handle the machines was a perfect marvel to me. I could see why children were doing the work and the fact of the matter is that these machines were MADE for children to run, and older persons couldn't do it if they wanted to. The space between the spindles is too narrow for an adult's hand, the touch of an adult would be too clumsy for the spider web threads that are spun, and the whole machine would have to be remodeled to adapt it to the body of a grown person. THE MACHINES HAVE BEEN PERFECTED WITH THE IDEA THAT ONLY A CHILD SHALL RUN THEM!

Each child (nearly all girls), has a row of these machines to look after. They must watch and fix the threads that are broken and clean off the dirt that gathers so quickly on the machines, and take out the full spindles and replace with ones that have the cotton thread that is to be spun finer. I counted the spindles that one child watched, but I have forgotten the exact number. I think it is nearly three dozen. Other children—all boys—bring and insert the smallest spindles in the machines and carry away the full ones. They have little boxes on wheels and they double themselves over and push these boxes from one part of the large room to another as fast as they can run. There are about 25 employees in this factory now, and they work from 8:30 a. m. to 6 p. m., with an hour at noon. The night work was stopped last fall and many were thrown out of work, because they were producing too much. As I looked over this small array of machinery, I thought, how few-faced workers, I wondered if they were glad to be there, and I asked many of them. "Do you like to work here?" and they all said "yes." I asked, "Don't you get very tired?" "No," they said, or "after you get used to it." I didn't find ONE that didn't like the work, and I found only one who admitted being tired. She said she didn't hear the whistle that awoke me. It seemed to me it would wake the dead. It is easy to explain why they like it when you understand the conditions under which their parents lived. They were scattered over these unproductive hills, trying to get a living from their scanty crop of corn and drove of "razor-backs." They had only two luxuries, which were necessities to them, the tobacco they raised, and the coffee for which they bartered. Now they live in neat little cottages which the factory owners have built—a great improvement upon the log cabins of one or two rooms each and without windows. And they have something their parents scarcely saw—money, and small as the amount is, the pennies mean more to them than as many dollars do to us who have always handled coin.

They have always been under-nourished, poorly clad, and without amusements or education, so they are no worse off now. The only things I can see which are worse—they don't think of. One is the nervous strain they are all under by reason of working steadily so many hours in the deafening roar of the machinery; the other is, breathing the fine fumes which cling so annoyingly to the nostrils of a stranger, and which inevitably brings on consumption and other diseases.

If you were to approach these people with the idea of doing away with child and female labor, you probably would be mobbed. And that is the saddest part of it all, they do not realize their slavery but are glad of the chance to be slaves. As I left the factory with its roar and dust behind me, and walked back to my hotel and breathed the fresh air full of perfumes of wild flowers, and noticed the clouds over the green hills, and the hazy blue of the distant mountains, I felt as if I had suddenly grown to be a giant, I felt as if I had the energy of a thousand men and women put up in me, and resolved again to do what I could to free these people from the ignorance and willing dependence which is theirs, and teach them what life is and how to enjoy it in all of its richness and fullness.

Picnic Tickets.

The secretaries of all Ward Branches have been provided with a supply of tickets for the Workers' Call picnic. Along with them in a separate envelope a receipt for the same has been sent, which the recipients will sign and return to this office, 36 N. Clark street. Clubs which have already received tickets and have not yet returned the signed receipts for same are requested to do so at once, as it is necessary that the Executive Committee possess a full account of all tickets that are sent out.

ECHO OF THE PAST

Remnant of an Old Class Struggle Appears in Scotland.

PROPOSED GIFT CRITICISED

Carnegie Arouses Hostility of Landed Aristocracy by his Offer of Cheap Education.

While the fact of the existence of a class struggle between capitalist and laborer is perhaps more clearly demonstrated in the United States than in any other country on earth, it is nevertheless quite as true that of all countries, the United States furnishes fewer actual proofs than any other of the truth of the philosophy which postulates a series of class struggles, as the form of the evolution of society. Our history contains little or nothing of feudalism, the country itself having been discovered and settled during the transition period, and its birth as a millions for some of these "worthy objects" the press terms with effective laudation, his generosity and "public opinion" sing his praises as a benefactor of his kind. Not a dissentient voice is heard, with the possible exception of the socialist press, which persists in calling attention to the manner in which the wealth he so lavishly distributes, was created and by whom. Otherwise there is no discordant note in the universal chorus of praise.

Andrew Carnegie retires from the field of exploitation, loaded down with the surplus value produced by thousands of wage slaves. Wishing to rid himself of some of this vast wealth which is really an incumbrance, he endows numerous libraries throughout the country, establishes a fund for the partial maintenance of the superannuated human commodities which have been worn out in piling up his millions; and immediately a note of approbation goes up throughout the length and breadth of the land. He is pointed out as an example to his class as regards the proper "distribution of wealth." He understands the true function of the successful capitalist, who has retired from the field of "business" with a "swag" which represents years of strenuous endeavor, frugality, honesty;

President of I. C. R. R. Gives his Views on Industrial Combinations

SOME CANDID ADMISSIONS

Says Inter-State Commerce Law Made it Impossible for Small Railroads to Live.

Mr. Huxeyant Fish, President of the Illinois Central Railway, says that immense combinations of capital, i. e. "trusts," will result in general good and benefit everybody.

We print a few extracts from an interview he gave to a reporter of one of the leading dailies:

"I believe," said he, "that the combination of money influences and power—and he asserts that the country which includes ALL of us, has nothing whatever to fear from combinations, however big they may be—that would cover one combination owing everything—because, as he says, the combination principle of our government is itself a combination.

fundamental to the union of the thirteen original colonies, which union has resulted in these United States.

If "the combination of money influences and power" is based upon the foundation principle of our Government really covers, not merely some of the interests of some of us, but ALL of the interests of ALL of us, then let us ALL begin to advocate the combination of those factors of production and distribution which have not yet been combined, and when that is accomplished, let us insist upon combining all of the combinations.

As President of one of the great Railway Combinations Mr. Fish "sees no danger"—to himself—in such combinations of money influence and power—and he asserts that the country which includes ALL of us, has nothing whatever to fear from combinations, however big they may be—that would cover one combination owing everything—because, as he says, the combination principle of our government is itself a combination.

Mr. Fish asserts that the Inter-State Commerce Law "MADE IT IMPOSSIBLE FOR THE SMALL RAILWAY LINES TO LIVE."

Read that Again Please

That law shows that some of us know how to legislate others of us out of business and that some of us do not hesitate, nor scruple about using law for that purpose.

Do you believe that Mr. Fish is telling us the truth when he says that "the legal logical result" (of that law) "WAS FIRST FOR THE LARGER LINES TO GRADUALLY BUY UP THE SMALL LINES?" Remember that he says "the law made it impossible for the small lines to live." Buying them up "gradually" means waiting until their owners were begging to be bought out and were willing to take what they could get.

Do you believe Mr. Fish is telling us the truth when he says: "I saw the combinations just as plainly at the time of the passage of that measure" (the Inter-State Commerce Law) "as I see them now?"

Does he speak with authority when he says "the combination of railroad properties will continue until lines territorially allied will be gathered into systems."

Who can doubt it?

The Inter-State Commerce Law made it impossible for the small railway lines to live and made it possible for the larger lines to buy them up "gradually." Mr. Fish, President of one of the larger lines which has bought up a great many of those smaller lines, says he knew when that law passed what would happen to smaller lines.

Who had that law passed?

We believe Mr. Fish. What he has told us deserves the most careful study. Weigh well his statement that "the big shipper is constantly trying to induce the railroads to break the law" and that "with territorial combination it will be possible to maintain the rates absolutely." (Another way of saying that "the railroads, under those conditions, would not break the law.")

What has all of this to do with store-keeping. If combination is the foundation principle of our National Government, and it is. If the principle is being applied logically and scientifically to many of our problems of production, is it not absolutely certain that sooner or later the principle must become universally operative and so include all of our industrial and social relations.

Store-keepers Unite!

You have nothing to lose now by combining with your present competitors, which will not be taken from you later. Other forces are already gathering which will eliminate the wastes of competitive store-keeping.

The shutting up of all unnecessary stores is inevitable because it is logical. If you find it impossible to combine with your competitors or if you prefer to take another course you can lay all of the facts before the people of your community and help them to collectively do their own store-keeping by making your store and your services the starting point. Local Agitation Systematically Carried On

A NEW ORGANIZER SELECTED

Division is Sub-Divided into Seven Agitation Districts. Successful Meetings Held.

At the Organizers' meeting of last Sunday comrade F. G. Strickland tendered his resignation as Division organizer. The resignation was accepted and comrade August Klenke elected in his place. The Secretary was instructed to notify comrade Klenke to be present at a special meeting on Monday night.

Will Attend Meetings

At 2:30 p. m. comrade A. M. Simons gave his second lesson on Socialism at the Temple. At 3:30 Morris Caplan delivered an address on the subject of Scientific Socialism which was listened to with great attention; at 8 p. m. the days agitation was brought to a close with a rousing meeting, which for enthusiasm exceeded any held for some time previously. Comrade Wise made the address.

Two open air meetings were held last Sunday at 2 p. m. One at California and North avenue, which was opened by comrade Ballard. A large crowd gathered and by the time Comrade Collins mounted the stand fully 600 people were present, who listened attentively until the close. After the speaker got through subscriptions for the Workers' Call were solicited, and the comrades canvassed the crowd with the result that 22 postals were sold in addition to 60 copies of the Call, and a number of books.

In the evening a crowd of 500 people surrounded the speakers stand at Madison and Peoria streets, where comrade August Klenke delivered an address including a comparison between "Danielism" and the "parliament" which served as a pretext for the late Spanish war.

Special Session.

On Monday night, the organizers met in special session to devise a plan for agitation in the West Side. It was decided to ask the 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Wards comprising the North West Division to co-operate and merge the two divisions into one.

Boundaries of Districts.

On motion of comrade Smith the Division is subdivided into seven agitation districts as follows: 1. First District, 12th and 14th wards and that part of the 20th Ward west of Ashland ave. Second District, 16th Ward and that part of the 20th east of Ashland avenue. Third District, 18th, 19th and 10th Wards. Fourth District, 11th, 12th and that part of the 24th Ward south of 12th st. Fifth District, 14th Ward and that part of the 24th Ward north of 12th st. Sixth District, 15th, 16th and 17th wards. Seventh District, 20th Ward.

Each agitation district will elect a committee which will take charge of the agitation in their respective districts.

Instructions to Organizer.

The Division Organizer was instructed to visit all branches and get a list of members of each Branch and put before them the plan of agitation.

Socialist Temple Notes.

Temple announcements are as follows: Sunday, 25 a. m., organizers meeting. Every organizer must be present. At 2:30 comrade Simons will give his third lesson on Scientific Socialism. At 8 p. m. Wm. H. Wise will give an address. Music by Socialist Orchestra. Thursday, 8 p. m., Ladies Auxiliary.

THE MAN WITH A RAKE

WHEN LABOR MAKES HIS TOILET.

Independent community having taken place at a time when Europe, with France as its centre, was ringing the death-knell of the economic system of the middle ages.

For the proof of previous class struggle, the American Socialist must therefore draw mainly upon European history, that of his own country furnishing insufficient evidence of the fact; for the reasons above stated, and many others connected therewith which will readily suggest themselves to the reader. No previous economically dominant class existed here which could even make a pretense of obstructing capitalist development, the Civil War and its cause—chattel slavery—being rather abnormal than in the direct line of economic evolution.

However, now that the thorough exploitation of the home market has driven our capitalists to extend their conquests into European countries, it occasionally happens that the invaders collide with the remnants of feudal ideas, which still exist there, resulting in expressions of hostility against the disturbers, the reasons for which not being comprehended by the average American, the press at once explains as "nobishness." But there is no hint given that this opposition is merely the echo of a historical class struggle, the antagonism between feudal aristocracy and modern capitalism.

In the United States the capitalist is naturally looked upon as the center from which all blessings flow. He is the philanthropist, the endower of colleges and universities, the founder of libraries, hospitals, technical schools, churches and "charities," etc., for the very good reason that under present conditions he alone is able to pose as such; and when he discharges several business insight, perseverance, and other capitalist virtues to numerous to mention. "Society" expects such things from Andrew, and he has not disappointed them. What would become of "society" if capitalists neglected these important matters? Capitalists are merely "God's stewards," the deity having entrusted them with the judicious distribution of His bounty, etc., etc.

Andrew then determines, that when asked to give an account of his stewardship, his native land (Scotland) shall also rise up and call him blessed, so he offers an enormous gift ($10,000,000) to help his poverty-stricken countrymen to obtain an education in the Scottish universities. But to the great astonishment of the holders of "public opinion" in the United States, there seems to be some objections on the part of several holders of "public opinion" on the other side to accepting the gift. Opposition comes from quarters whose existence was hardly suspected. Doubts are even expressed as to whether an "American ironmaster" is a fit and proper person from whom to receive the wherewithal to acquire a cheap education. "Society" on the other side is not wholly unanimous in agreeing upon the function of the modern capitalist exploiter as a dispenser of charity. "Imagine," says one objector, "the Duke of Hamilton, Cameron of Lochiel, or MacDonnell" of the Isles, allowing his heir to get education at the cost of an American ironmaster!

Now, who are these fellows, and why is it supposed they would object to getting something at the expense of another? Our capitalist press assures us that this is hard to understand on Socialism and the Professions.

By G. S.

Those engaged in professional pursuits may boast of their distinctions of culture and refinement along social, educational and various intellectual lines; may flaunt these superior accomplishments in the faces of their less fortunate, (under present conditions), fellow men—the hand workers. They may consider themselves on a higher plane in general from that of the “common rabble,” and if ever descending to look at all upon those “beneath” them, it may be with a mien of great condescension, and as a mark of great favor to those receiving such “unclean,” “disgraceful” attention.

They may ape the veneerings of the “social lights” of the metropolis, and even vainly flatter themselves with the delusion that they wield a controlling influence over the “upper” (moneyed) classes—an influence which will enable them to enter as co-partners, into the ranks of the aforesaid “upper” classes, i. e., exploiters of labor—with financial as well as social standing, (when in fact they are looked upon only as valuable tools for retaining and furthering capitalist interests); while the exorbitant fees they offer in support of their “ambitious” designs, (as yet unattained), in their so-called superior qualifications over those of the hand worker class; as though might of intellect justified their lofty aspirations for power.

They may even believe themselves “endowed with the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.”

These and many other delusions may they foster, but the fact remains the same in spite of their fond and exalted notions—they are as much slaves to the present economic conditions as their brothers, the hand workers, are.

And their position is to be even more deplorable than that maintained by the hand laborers, for they are bound to their conditions, not only by the chains of present society organization, (the inheritance of which is no fault of those born to it), but they are bound by the more deplorable fetters of a blindness to their true position, much more wilful than that of their fellow workers—the hand-tillers; more wilful, because of their superior intellectual development, and consequent enlarged abilities for acquiring more intelligently into cause and effect—a blindness, therefore, seemingly due largely to an indomitable pride—the pride of a self-assumed superior position of brain work over hand work.

While those bound merely by the ties of our present social order (for disorder, rather), are not responsible, as was said, for the conditions, under which they begin life's struggle, (it being but the influence of environment which all are affected by, and above which, few can rise), there is little if any exoneration for those who are bound by any additional chains of their own forging and maintenance.

And although the majority of hand workers also, it seems, are bound largely by blindness, to existing conditions, yet their blindness is more the result of limited opportunities for study and investigation, (due to their environment), than it is due to pride of position—for God knows they haven't much to boast of in that line, under society's present arrangement; but in the case of the professional followers (with their superior opportunities for intelligent inquiry), no such excuse as ignorance should be acceptable, for they have all in the realm of science back of them to enable them to reach accurate conclusions, if they will but apply their knowledge. Yet it seems that this very pride of position—one form of wilful blindness—among the professional workers, holds them bound to their conditions by keeping them ignorant of the great fundamental truths by which they might, if they would, allow themselves to be impressed.

Though ignorance may, as we have seen, be a result of a certain form of pride which in its turn is closely allied to, if not actually one of the forms in which prejudice exhibits itself, not all of ignorance by any means, can be so accounted for, and is therefore not due necessarily to wilful blindness; but such ignorance as is displayed by those whose opportunities make such a plea inexcusable, is never the result of anything but the wilful blindness of pride.

We have already mentioned two factors, ignorance, the result of limited opportunities, and ignorance the result of some form of prejudice, that seem to operate the most actively in keeping men from seeing the truth, and it now remains to examine whether a mere understanding of the truth is sufficient to allow its unrestricted development—that is, if to blindness (either wilful or unintentional), can be ascribed all the woes of mankind. It is certainly most essential as a prerequisite to any form of progress, that the truth regarding old forms and methods be known, so that application of the principles governing the new, may be intelligently made; but the question presents itself whether a simple knowledge of such truths, removes all the barriers to progress.

As stated before, many differences may exist in the minds of men as to the causes of resistance, some possibly not looking beyond the two mentioned in this article, which serve, (as we have noticed), to keep one blinded to existing conditions.

“When thieves fall out, just men get their dues,” might with little alteration be made to read, with equal force and appropriateness, “when capitalists fall out, workingmen get a PART of their (own) dues”; but the converse of this latter proposition, however, would not admit of proof, for so stated, it would be: “when workingmen fall out, capitalists get a part of their (own) dues.” The reason why the converse theorem cannot be carried out to a logical “Quod erat demonstrandum,” lies in the fact that the “dues” are always and at all times, the product and rightful claim of but one class, (the workers), and therefore the original proposition and its converse do not bear reciprocal relations. So in order to reach a conclusion that does admit of proof, and at the same time illustrate the point at issue, we will be forced to state the nearest approach to a converse, thus: “when workingmen fall out capitalists get all their (the workingmen's) dues.” We notice, that in either case, the capitalist is not a loser, for he has nothing of his own (own production) to lose, and the only difference to the workers in the force of these two propositions, lies in the degree of their loss (for they HAVE produced something to lose).

The capitalist, however, is not satisfied with “losing” even a part of the producers’ dues to the benefit of the worker, but thirsts to gather it all to himself. Therefore we have no living examples, any more, in proof of the statement, “when capitalists fall out, workingmen get a part of their (own) dues,” for said capitalists have long since discovered the folly of “falling out” among themselves, as witnessed by the widespread movement of gigantic combinations of capital, or if they do seem to wrangle now and then, it is only to keep up appearances on the divine right of competition and its value as the life of trade. But they turn their increased wisdom on such matters, much further to their own account, by stimulating “falling out” among the workers. In so doing, they exhibit a far greater amount of acumen than do the “just” people in the old saying, who haven't “business ability” enough to try stirring up dissensions among the “robbers.” In order to recover their own; but stand supinely by, and patiently wait until the aforesaid “robbers” HAPPEN to fall out. The “just” people, would at least be justified in stirring up rebellion among the “robbers,” in order to secure a “readjustment,” but what vindication attends the efforts of those producing strife that will enable them to take in an increased amount of that which is not theirs (by production) in any sense. Truly our capitalist brethren are gifted with an interminable amount of gall and secret cunning, (call it “business ability.” If you will, but refrain from any stronger, though probably more truthful appellation).

So much for class-consciousness and its inestimable value. May we study the lessons compiled for us by our capitalist deceits, and apply them to our own advantage. Nothing so despicable but serves us as a school for future actions, if we will heed its teachings.

We might well further inquire into the various motives and influences that serve to hinder the progress of reform, especially as applying to the subject under discussion.

Obstructions and obstructions have existed from times immemorial. No reform movement has ever pressed for recognition from the then existing orders of civilization, but what has met determined resistance.

There may be wide differences of opinion in the minds of men as to the causes of such resistance, and it would undoubtedly be presumptuous for anyone to assume to know all the causes of obstruction at work in the universe of society, for such will be developed only as time goes on and man profits by his knowledge and experience; but we may promulgate what we believe with our present stock of knowledge—to be certain factors at work, and with the help of what we are thus able to deduce, others will be enabled (with the weight of added resources), to make further deductions which will ultimately lead to a consciousness of the whole truth.

We have already mentioned two factors, ignorance, the result of limited opportunities, and ignorance the result of some form of prejudice, that seem to operate the most actively in keeping men from seeing the truth, and it now remains to examine whether a mere understanding of the truth is sufficient to allow its unrestricted development—that is, if to blindness (either wilful or unintentional), can be ascribed all the woes of mankind. It is certainly most essential as a prerequisite to any form of progress, that the truth regarding old forms and methods be known, so that application of the principles governing the new, may be intelligently made; but the question presents itself whether a simple knowledge of such truths, removes all the barriers to progress.

Intellectual worker separated from the manual worker, because of the ancient and deeply grounded belief, or rather the generally accepted theory that brain work is more genteel than hand work, and therefore raises the performer of the first to a plane, in all respects higher than that of the latter.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Chinese of the World-wide struggle of the Proletarian Army for its Liberty.

BEIJING.

There was a rumor that an attempt had been made on the life of our Belgian friend, Edward Anseele, Socialist leader in Flanders, and head of the Co-operative “Voortuit.” Happily, it was a rumor only. Under present circumstances, at the eve of another hard fight for universal suffrage, the Belgian party cannot spare such a force as it is in our sturdy comrade Anseele.

GERMANY.

The printing press at Hamburg, which belongs to the socialist party, has been celebrating its silver jubilee. The business is flourishing, and no less than 250 persons are employed in the production of a daily newspaper, pamphlets, etc.

HOLLAND.

A recent sitting of the Dutch Parliament was very exciting, and showed that it is only the socialists who are the true anti-militarists. As reported in previous notes, the Second Chamber agreed to a proposal, in dealing with a new Army Bill of eight and a half months’ service—notwithstanding the influence of the court and military staff—to have the twelve months’ clause accepted. The War minister, who was personally in favor of eight and a half months’ service, was forced to resign. In his place was appointed the head of the military staff, who was strongly in favor of a twelve months’ service, to break down the opposition. By the attitude he adopted it was clear that his nomination was a challenge to Parliament, which, in spite of the strenuous efforts of the Social-Democratic members, gave way. He got the accepted eight and a half months’ service nullified, and worse proposals agreed to. Comrade Troosters expressed his disgust at the weakness of the Liberals and Radicals, who sacrificed the people's interest to the wishes of a military clique, and bitterly declaimed against a Government that lent itself to political cheating. He was often called to order, and finally, with Van Kol, left the sitting by way of protest.

LABOR ITEMS.

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Exchanges, Throughout the United States.

It is rumored that ubiquitous J. Pierpont Morgan is negotiating for the purchase of a large Danish steamship company's vessels.

A New York dispatch says thirteen of the big wheel cleaned up nearly $150,000, in the little game that culminated in the Wall Street panic.

The oil cloth which the poor man puts on his kitchen table is now in the hands of a trust. But this is a good thing for the consumer from the standpoint of a trust official.—The Critic.

Thousands of workers have been locked out in different parts of Germany for participating in May Day celebrations. Capitalism understands that the meetings are opposed to their interests.

Labor troubles are on the increase in Russia, the Novoye Vremya, a large and influential daily journal, having been suspended for a week by the government for the crime of urging more reasonable treatment for the working class.

The Bryan-Populist-Silver Governor Oram, of Colorado, has vetoed a bill compelling mine owners to put ventilators in mines, and now there is great indignation among the workers. These “reformers” are fine birds, indeed. They are worse than plutocrats and hypocrites besides.

Rev. Granov, of Troy, N. Y., is out with a statement that he is going to support the Social Democratic party because it is the only party that proposes to destroy poverty and institute a system which will make possible the realization of the brotherhood of man, which Christian people profess to believe in.

One of the organizers of the billion-dollar steel trust says that the combine will save its middlemen's expenses alone about $50,000,000. So Mr. Schwab's assurance that heads of acquired institutions will not be decapitated are all for effect—to fool the ignorant public. But it doesn't make much difference anyhow. Cleveland Citizen.

A London dispatch says J. Pierpont Morgan told a friend that there was a “good fight” left in him yet, and when he settled the situation in the United States and got things as he wanted them he would rest. There was a time when people in America would read such a statement as this, but now-a-days we overlook whatever Morgan, Rockefeller, et al., may have to say. “They give us work,” you know.—People's Paper.

The contractors for the Rapid Transit Tunnel in New York claim that the action of the city employees in striking work was a “branch of faith,” that they were about to reach an agreement with the men when the walking delegation jumped in and ordered a strike. The “walking delegate” is an extremely convenient scapegoat upon whom to lay the responsibility for the lack of “harmony between labor and capital.”

The Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workers employed by the packing firm of Swift & Co. have sent an ultimatum to the firm, demanding the reinstatement of three employees of the sheep killing department. It is said that if their demands are not complied with, every plant belonging to the company will be affected by the strike which will follow.

Chauncey Depew has presented his eldest son with a house carrying a $25,000 mortgage. To lift this mortgage will be the first task by which the young man will prove his “business ability.” It is a good thing for Depew Jr., that he doesn't have to work at producing useful things or the job of lifting the mortgage, would probably prove too much for him.

ON FREEDOM

Remarkable Essay by a Pupil of the Englewood High School.

[As an illustration of the manner in which socialism is being grasped by the younger generation, we reprint the following address delivered by Miss Gertrude Cohn, in the Auditorium of the Y. M. C. A., on Wednesday, 2nd May, where Miss Cohn represented Englewood in the oratorical contest between the high school pupils of the city. Miss Cohn is 17 years of age and is now a second-year pupil of the Englewood High School.—ED.]

The realization of freedom, in the true meaning of the word, is the goal toward which society is tending. In order to attain this goal we must first comprehend what freedom is; for, as long as men do not recognize the fact that they are not free, and as long as they do not see what prevents them from becoming free, so long they cannot gain freedom. And yet the great struggles that have ever taken place in man's history have always been, though often not apparently so, for the cause of liberty. As we follow these struggles we may discern that they all move toward one great end—that is, a state of society, namely, freedom, in which circumstances without and the spirit within man shall harmonize. But while we may say this or that has become free, there has never yet been a state of perfect freedom on the face of the earth.

At the beginning of man's history, the struggle was with nature. Man was not free then in the same sense, for he was obliged to battle with the elements for his physical wants. Moreover, at that time, fear influenced the conduct of men—fear of each other, fear of the wild beasts in the forests wherein they dwelt, fear of nature in her tempests and whirlwinds, fear of the mysterious and unknown, fear of the forces of tomorrow. Therefore it was impossible for man at the beginning to be free, for as long as fear exists the highest in man can not develop. Fear of whatever kind is always opposed to freedom. And then ignorance was a barrier, too, for man had not mastered the forces of nature, and until the physical material world became subservient to the wants of man, there could not be freedom for the pursuit of the highest.

But as the wheel of time rolled on, the absolute dependence upon nature became less with the gradual enlightenment of the ages. Almost all obstacles to material advancement have been overcome, till at present, we can no longer say anything but that the world is no longer a barrier, nor mountains, nor deserts, nor forests. We should have no need to dread even famine, for if the earth does not yield abundance in one part of the globe, swift steamers could bring produce from another.

And yet according to my definition of freedom—an ideal state of society—it is certainly evident that despite all our conquests of nature we have not attained freedom. The world is far from being what we wish it to be, but how many of you, I wonder, have ever thought what is the preventive. We all want the beautiful, the noble, and the true, yet how many have ever wondered why we don't obtain them.

Now let me go back again to the early life of mankind. As men grew more dependent upon nature, they became more dependent upon each other. When they lived in vast jungles, like wild animals, each dug a cave for himself, each hunted food for himself, and each depended on his individual labor for all that he gained. At that time it was possible for men to live quite independently of one another; but later, as man multiplied, individual life ceased and co-operation commenced. Life began on a broader scale and man united with man to meet common needs, resist common evils, and supply more easily and more satisfactorily common wants.

Great machines were ingeniously constructed to manufacture a large amount of one article. So, instead of each man at the present day making his own clothes, digging his own food, raising his own vegetables, and so forth—each person engages in but one kind of labor, while he receives the benefits of a “hundred or more different kinds.” Now it is clearly impossible for anyone today to do the various kinds of work necessary to supply the wants of even a very simple life. Hence the life of each man is bound up with the life of his fellow men.

We all recognize the importance of labor, for what could be accomplished without it? But in order to work, we must have material and tools. New material is furnished us by nature, and man's labor and God-given sagacity have created tools. I mean by tool any instrument or agent which under man's direction utilizes the raw material of the earth. Now the tools today, as for example, factories, stock-yard plants, railroads, and so forth, belong to private monopolies; and also natural resources—as for instance, mines, wells, land, and so on—belong to a few individuals. Therefore, since man cannot own for himself these means of producing the necessities of life, he must apply to their owners and accept whatever conditions these owners offer him. Hence our system of wages.

This is clearly a system of dependence on the part of all wage workers. For you must see the difference between the time when each man owned his few simple tools and enjoyed for himself the entire product of his labor, and the present time, when the workers do not own the tools they operate and do not receive all that they produce. On the contrary, the wage workers apply their labor-power to the production of wealth for the owners of the tools, whereas they work, and in return get, in the form of wages, but a small part of what they produce.

Aside from the results of this system, the fundamental principle upon which it is based is contrary to freedom. For the power in the hands of a few to control the means whereby everyone must live necessarily causes the dependence of the many upon these few. The ownership, by a few, of the natural resources of life meant for all, is sacrilege to nature, to freedom, and to God. I have tried to show before that the life of each man is bound up with the lives of his fellow men; so how can we, when we come to think of it, call it right that a few should appropriate to themselves the natural resources and the tools upon which all humanity depends. I cannot, for lack of time, go deeply into this monstrous wrong, so I will proceed now to some of the effects of the wage system.

It is an undisputed fact that, in the present system, the great bulk of the people are not certain whether on the morrow they shall be free from want. The vast majority of workingmen know that any day their services may no longer be required, and that they may not be allowed the privilege even of telling for their bread. This is why there is the worry and hurry, on everybody's part, to scrape up by fair or foul means, money. Money is the idol worshipped now. And why? Because, before you can get anything you must hand up a coin. And so, labor, brains, cunning, and what not, are all directed to this end.

And all this is far from being freedom. Freedom in the sense I speak of, is the power of living on the highest conception of life; is the power of doing what to our conscience is noblest; is the power of bringing into blossom the holy seed planted in each of us. When freedom comes to mankind there will no longer be this miserable struggle for existence; earning a living will no longer be the object in life of the bulk of humanity; work will become a joy, a holy activity. But not until all men are certain that they shall never be in want; not until the gratification of all physical wants becomes an easy matter—so easy and so certain that men, relieved of the struggle for existence, will recognize the divine within them—then, and not till then, will freedom come to men.

“To make men free! It is with me the dearest purpose of my heart. That I may know and do my part to speed the cause of liberty; My energy and life to be Made consecrate to the one theme. The single purpose and the dream. In every land to make men free—To make men free!”

CHURCHES VS. SOCIALISM

Capitalism and Modern Religion Both Stand in Hostile Attitude Towards

The church as an organized body is hostile towards socialism because it is a strong competitor, and the church will harbor no rival with a social repair outfit. No wonder they refuse official recognition.

There are some very clever Christian Socialists, but the great mass of them and their leaders condemn the new and “grandly improved brand of righteousness.” It is easier to change the system of weights and measures than the ethical system, moral codes and customs. Hence the attitude of Socialist leaders and followers toward a decayed and corrupt church. Subjected to the snubs and sneers of the holier than thou it is but natural that we retaliate in the most approved of fashion. We do not know what socialism will be a thousand years hence. We do know this much that the early Christians suffered great annoyances at the hands of the upper classes even as we suffer. In spite of the most agonizing persecution they carried their message to the poorer classes without purse or price. Refined, sincere churchmen, clergymen and lady members what think ye of this? Eyes have ye but ye see not beyond the light of your own social circle. Have ye ye but ye hear not the groans of the brutally enslaved who create all the blessings you enjoy but never do you deem them worthy of your thankfulness. Hearts of gold and sympathy ye have but ye feel not, “For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.” As a whole body ye have not yet spoken. Perhaps you await a more convenient season? Will the old book stand? Maybe it will for the pen and truth is mighty and does not come under the hand of perishable flesh.

Behold the strange spectacle! Christians have forgotten their Biblical lore. Certain passages called to mind make their heads weary. Sermons to gain new converts are all right. Preaching about loving indiscriminately sound malapropos considering we love the best of all still more than we do each other. Infidels, avowed unbelievers, familiar with holy writ keep the lamp of learning trimmed and a burning. The dear old book is dusted and bolstered up and what good there is in it for the human race, is extracted by the Socialist brethren and handed over to the suffering sheep. Not a mother's son of them receives a salary, but if they were in trusty manager Schwab's shoes they could not be more diligent. Christ's last words to his disciples were to feed the sheep, and we are doing it, though not necessarily his disciples. Perhaps the false disciples are singly ensconced churchmen and the genuine are Socialists who despise pomp and ceremony while a life is snuffed out at every syllable uttered in the Bay State pulpits. Knowing these things how can any laboring man or Socialist attend with patience to the divine services of the present day. From a class-conscious point of view not a word is to be heard indicating a desire to improve upon the conditions which induce poverty among the masses. Not caring to waste valuable time among a hostile class of people we prefer to seek for kindred spirits in the humbler walks of life. The best proof we have of the official hostility of the church is shown in the social ostracism of Prof. Herron. He is a graduate from the church. Let us hope others will graduate to a circle where they can utter free thought. Again we observe a suppression of Socialist publications and interferences with their meetings whenever it can be done without alarming the sleepy giant Labor too much.

Another proof of the moral bankruptcy of the standard usage orthodox brethren lies in their repugnance to reasoning or arguing for an improved order of society with their Socialist brethren to aid them in the task. No answer yet to Socialist arguments but scornful sneers, noisome powder, bullets, shells and stifling prisons.

That is the way Mammon and Jehovah, both gods of unrighteousness will keep their footholds on the necks of the people. Under the rule of capitalism we must all suffer whether we are good, bad, or indifferent, rich or poor. Our motto and battle cry at all times should be, “Let the nation own the trusts” then the whole nation will reap the benefit of those trusts, which today appear so baneful.

EQUALITY.

LOCAL NEWS AND NOTES.

The regular meeting of the 13th Ward branch was on Friday, May 25th, at Aurora Hall. The number of members in attendance was not large, but the enthusiasm manifested made up for the absent ones. Comrade Albert J. Fox, and Dr. Chick were accepted as members. After the regular business of the branch was transacted Comrade Ballard made a short but interesting address, relating his experience in the southern states from which he has just returned, and where he met the propaganda for socialism. Comrade Dr. Chick then took the floor and gave an address upon socialism which was listened to very attentively. The branch considers that the new comrades will be able to do good work for the Socialist movement in the district.

At the meeting held on Peoria and Madison streets last Sunday, Comrade L. Anderson alone sold 55 “Workers’ Calls” and five subscription cards. There are few party members more energetic and persistent than Comrade Anderson in pushing the party press.

A proposal to invite Walter Thomas Mills to address the members of the Bircklayers’ Union on June 12th, met with the unanimous approval of the members of that body at their last meeting. The hall is located on the corner of Peoria and Monroe streets.

A Socialist comrade who has been very active in the cause sends us two journals printed in English at Manila, Philippine Islands, where he at present holds a government position. They are called the “Manila Tribune” and the “New American,” respectively, and both give evidence of the “strange life” which has invaded the islands in conjunction with American capitalism. One of them gives an account of the shooting of four Filipino boys by an American negro tramper, who is to be tried for murder. The boys were all between 8 and 12 years of age. One was killed instantly, and the other was killed by a bullet wound. The accused will plead “self-defence.”

Patriotism and Property

Evidence can be drawn from all ends of the earth to prove that capitalist “patriotism” is the same everywhere. Here is a statement from Brigadier General Frederick Grant, who has just returned from the Philippines, which gives additional testimony to the truth that men in every case and in every land are dominated by material interests:

“THE PROPERTY-HOLDING CLASS in the islands is composed of persons who are rather ignorant, and who could not quite understand the situation. They are NATURALLY our friends, but they have been under our influence to throw in their FOR TUNES with the insurgent cause. When they heard that a party was coming into power in the United States which was in favor of withdrawing the troops and giving up the government to the insurgents they did not know what to do. If they acted out against the insurrection they would be likely to lose their lives and PROPERTY as soon as we turned our backs.”

Here we have it plainly stated that the possession of property alone was the factor in deciding those who owned it, to throw in their lot with either side. The man who has nothing to lose but everything to gain, can easily remain “patriotic” to the end, but the “patriotism” of the property owner is like “Providence,” always on the side of the big battalions.

The Labor Commodity.

A movement to attract European capitalists to Chicago is now being engineered by the Real Estate Board of this city, which is engaged in the preparation of “literature” advertising the location of Chicago as a business center. According to the press, one of these publications entitled “Chicago as an Industrial Center,” has been issued.

“tre,” has the following to say about the labor supply, which it declares to be a subject of “vast interest” to foreign manufacturers:

“Abundance and variety of any article is a PREREQUISITE for a large market. This is as true of LABOR as of any COMMODITY.” The supply of labor in Chicago is practically unlimited.

When a socialist writer of speaker refers to laborers as “commodities,” he often greets with the retort that the “American worker is a ‘free man’” a “sovereign” etc. etc., from this very class of people who now assure the foreign capitalist that there is an unlimited quantity of him which can be purchased—they don't say cheaply—the word “unlimited” is sufficiently suggestive of itself. But this only happens when they have something to “sell” by saying so. The “free man” in question then becomes an “indentured,” which is listed in the same category as cheap land, fuel and raw materials. When the capitalist places him there and publishes the fact, it is merely a plain “business proposition,” but when the socialist corroborates the statement, it at once becomes a “pernicious fallacy” advocated only by “impractical visionaries.”

Ancient Historical Documents Show Changing Ideas of Ruling Class on “Morality.”

To judge by the “RIGHTS” indignation of the Lord's chosen disciples, whenever they have occasion to discuss violations of capitalistic standards of morality, one would think that the present code of ethics was divinely ordained at the beginning of time and had been in force ever since. But the student of the world's history cannot fail to discover the hollowness of these pretensions. In studying the “social customs” of the middle ages, one is constantly and forcibly reminded of Marx's assertion that the economic conditions of a certain period form the foundation on which the superstructures of moral and juridical ideas are erected. What once was considered right and moral, gradually becomes immoral and criminal, when the interest of the ruling classes so demand it under the pressure of changed economic conditions.

During the first period of the middle ages, when feudalism held sway over the world, the latter had the duty to work and pay toll to their lords, and the female serfs were forced to submit to the sexual desires of the masters. The lord had unlimited control over his chattel-slave, and thus the right of the first night was instituted, forcing the slave to surrender his dearest treasure to the master and to see the tyrant's offspring growing in the body on which he had built such fond hopes.

The church, that now would celebrate young and healthy girls behind the cloister walls in order to save their souls, sanctioned this custom and was not afraid that the souls of the serfs would be lost by such a degradation. For numerous documents prove that the clerical gentlemen themselves were very fond of claiming and enjoying this jus primæ noctis.

Girls that were too unattractive had to pay a tax for not suiting the taste of the master and for being ineligible for the inestimable favor of debauchery.

When the enforcement of the right of the first night became impracticable, the clergy found ways and means to make as much money as possible out of marriage laws—of course, always with a view to providing for the safety of those wicked human souls. Frequently newly wedded couples had to pay “damages” for the pleasures of the first three nights in the form of a contribution to church funds.

In France, the right of the first night, called “marquette,” could be legally enforced—no difficult matter, considering that the feudal barons were the supreme judges of the courts. A decision in favor of Seigneur Lourie, feudal lord of the village of Aas in 1538, reads as follows:

“Every man marrying in this village is ordered, before holding sexual intercourse with his wife, to present her to the lord. The MALE offspring of the marriage is considered free, as the first birth may be due to the first night.”

The elements that parade their virtues on the house tops and praise the Lord because they are not like others, could find very interesting material for the study of ethics in some of these ancient documents. Of course, it would be overreaching to expect that they will see the beam in their own eyes before seeing the splinter in their brother's. Moreover, society can very well do without their sanction. Regardless of the futile attempts to foster an ironclad standard of ethics on humanity, the economic development of society will gradually evolve conditions leaving the human conscience free to follow its own dictates, and so consider moral whatever contributes to the welfare and happiness of the race.

The Twenty-first Ward branch opened its out-door meetings Thursday week to a crowd of 150 or more people, who listened to a splendid talk by Comrade Ed. Klenke, after which we disposed of 20 “Workers’ Calls,” following which Comrade Klenke answered quite a few pertinent questions.

Echo of The Past.

any other supposition than "enobishness," which is an explanation that doesn't explain. Let us see if the matter can be elucidated from the standpoint of scientific socialism.

In the first place it will be observed that these three individuals (who are only used as representing a class which has no existence here) are possessed of titles, and if their "circled" is investigated it will be found that these titles were in existence before the discovery of America, and further inquiry will show that these titles in every case were the distinguishing marks of a great landed proprietor. At one time the holders of these titles (and lands) occupied a similar position in Scottish society that Carnegie and Rockefeller occupy today in the United States. They were looked upon as "God's stewards" and were in their time the centers from which all the philanthropy and charity of those times emanated. It was mostly to the bounty of their class that the universities, churches, schools, almshouses and other "public utilities" of that day owed their existence and their generosity in those directions evolved the same phase at that time that the Carnegie and Rockefeller class now receive for similar "services" in the United States. An "ironmonger" in those days was a rather insignificant person, who lived under the protection of these landed proprietors and who was properly respectful in all his trivial dealings with them. The idea that an ironmonger could ever pretend to assert equality with them never entered their minds—or the ironmongers either for that matter. They owned the predominant means of production in those days, i. e., the land, while the ironmonger owned merely the few paltry tools of his craft, and an insignificant stock of crude commodities in iron.

But times have changed and the ironmonger of the middle ages developed into the great drust magnate of today. The rude tools of iron handicraft have evolved into the great rolling mills, blast furnaces, machine shops, and foundries of today where scores of thousands of men are employed in turning out millions of tons of iron and steel products. And the economic descendant of the despised ironmonger of the middle ages owns it all, and has utterly displaced in economic and political importance the lineal descendant of the titled land proprietor who in his palmy days never controlled the one twentieth part of the wealth which his successor now possesses.

Taking these things into account it is not surprising to find the acceptance of Carnegie's gifts arises not from "enobishness" or a reluctance to acquire something at the expense of others, but from the fact that these people look upon Carnegie as a worshiper of functions which they still think properly belong to them. He represents a class that has supplanted their class as "God's stewards," a class that has relegated them into a secondary position, by displacing them as ruling class, and their objections are merely an echo of the old antagonism between landed proprietors and modern capitalists, one of the historical series of class struggles which have been the main factors in economic evolution.

"Enobishness" as an explanation falls to the ground when it is considered that most of the "bells" of these titled persons are regarded as a good matrimonial catch by the members of the capitalist class themselves. Let the "bell" of the Duke of Hamilton for instance (supposing him to be unmarried) cross the Atlantic in search of a wealthy bride, and he would find no lack of capitalists quite willing to seek a family alliance with "nobles" like himself. The rising capitalist manufacturer was always considered as an upstart, a parvenu, a snob, by the titled aristocracy of Europe, who for over a hundred years have indulged in well bred sneers at the vulgarity, insolence and pride of the commercial exploiters, who were displacing them as ruling class, and judging from the efforts made by the latter to conceal their vulgar past by imitating to the best of their ability the feudal aristocracy, it is not difficult to see that the capitalist class has never been able to rid itself wholly of the sense of social inferiority with which it started.

Neither can it be said that Carnegie's gift is distasteful to this class because they are unwilling to participate in something for which they have rendered no equivalent. They themselves are parasites who live upon rent, produced by the agricultural laborer. Their method of appropriation is more ancient, and therefore their eyes more "honorable" than the newer method of exploiting laborers through ownership of the modern machinery of production. The traditions of the time when their mode of exploitation carried with it economic and political supremacy yet operates to render them disdainful and contemptuous to their successors. For them the ironmonger of the twentieth century differs only from the ironmonger of the fifteenth in that the former has increased in wealth and impertinence.

It is needless to say that Carnegie's gift is not likely to be rejected, those who would do so on the above grounds not having sufficient power to determine that question, as capitalism preponderates also in Scotland at the present day. But in registering their protest they serve the purpose of the socialist as illustrating one of the series of class struggles which have been the main factors in the economic and political development of the United States.

Capital is the creation of labor. It is labor's finished product. Capital is the result of work that you did, yesterday; or the day before or last year or ten years ago.

Doesn't the world seem so empty, empty?

Linemen on Strike.

Oh, my friend, CAPITAL never demanded out of you, interest or rent. It's the CAPITALIST that does that. That is all that he does do.

Now keep that distinction well in mind for therein lies the whole secret of "the labor problem." You have all doubtless heard how very difficult this "labor problem" is and that it cannot be solved in any other way than by letting it remain as it is.

Now if you are going to continue accepting the solution of your masters, you can be very sure that they will never find any other, they don't want to find any other solution, and they don't want anybody else to find one. "But how about you?" Are you satisfied? Or do you want to try a different way? If you do, here it is, and it is just as easy as catching a penny.

Destroy the capitalists, that's all. Easy isn't it? And you don't have to bother going out for a gun or an axe to do it either. All you have to do is to just withdraw your support and the capitalists will be as helpless as a fly in the air. It is from stealing the product of your labor that he has grown so great. It is your support at the polls that makes him so strong, and his last support is his life. It is the ballot that these things must be altered. That is the foundation of the capitalist power.

Men, do you know that there is a political party in the field today whose campaign is to destroy how issue never changes: a party that will not fuse and never compromise; a party of the workers, by the workers and for the workers; a world-wide party that numbers its supporters in every nation of the world; seven million telling voters that know what they want and how to get it? This is the Socialist party, and it is the only party that has been in the field for years ago by a little handful of men that worked and didn't know any better than to think, too. And comrades, that movement has grown in spite of kings, bayonets and prison cells, until the redoubtable Mark Hanna hears and fears the steady tramp of those seven million men who know what they want, and who are going to get it.

In the language of the trust magnates these Socialists are nothing but "arbitrators." They don't want much, only what the product of their toil is worth and they are going to have that even to the last farthing.

Now take your choice: Line up, all you that feel as though you would like to be your own master and get the full product of your toil. All you who are willing to try to get along without the capitalists, join the Socialist party and help work out your emancipation.

And all the rest of you who feel as though you need a master and want your children to be slaves, you had better be getting together, too, though I am sure I don't know what to tell you to do. Probably the best thing for you to do is to head for the lake, for there are stormy times ahead, and don't you forget it. When the process of "benevolent assimilation" is complete and our patriotic capitalists have opened up China with capital stolen from your toil; when the latest labor-saving machines are operated on Chinese soil by coolie labor at 10 cents per day to supply the markets of the world, do you know what will happen to you. You will have to take your fried rat as payment for your day's work and say "thank you." There is no other way out of it. Either that or come over where the men are.

And now in conclusion let me emphasize that capital and capitalists are NOT the same. We want the capital but we don't want the capitalists. And if anything should happen that our government should be slightly disorganized for a few days, we will have the capital, but God save the capitalists. The only real relation that exists between them is that the capitalist is a name given to the man that steals capital away from labor. The father of capital is labor. But the father of the capitalist is the father of lies. And somewhere I have read there is a deep pit dug for him, and my friends, I think it about time that we took the chains that we have worn so long, and placing them about the neck of the hideous monster drop him down into it. And over the mouth of it, free, glorious, emancipated labor will erect a temple, not to the vile wretch we cast in, but to the countless sons of toil that have gone down in the battle for freedom. And in the building of that temple we will call no man master, for the name of it shall be the Co-operative Commonwealth. "And we will keep close guard over the pit to see that the monster comes not forth again to eat up our substance and sap away our lives."

SUMMER READING
THE SILVER CROSS

The Carpenter of Nazareth
—by—
EUGENE SUE.

The plain but thrilling story told in a masterly manner by the great French author, who holds the reader as soon as he starts to read it. Stripped of the Church garb, Jesus appears before us as the type of the earnest, honest radical leader of the people, a figure which history has reproduced with slight variations in every crucial period in the progress of mankind, when the old order of things had reached its climax and was about to give way to the new. Able from being a story of social struggle, with dramatic incidents second to none, the book gives the reader a clear idea of the teachings of Nazareth which most of our generation—whether Christians, Jews or free-lancers—have failed to perceive through the haze of Church legend which attaches to the story of Jesus. As a picture of society and the social classes of that epoch with the class struggle raging within it, this story will throw a strong light on our own conditions of to-day.

BRICKS AND MORTAR

Men of the Trowel Hear Socialist Speaker in Their Union.

MILLS AT BRICKLAYER'S HALL

Talks of Mission of Organized Labor to Lay Foundations of Future Social Structures.

There is nothing of greater interest or of greater importance to the socialist movement than the very great interest which the Chicago trades unions are now taking in the subject. A number of our comrades are speaking frequently at the regular meetings of the trades unions, and the interest is very rapidly increasing. During the last few weeks Walter Thomas Mills has spoken for the painters, paper hangers, glass workers, pattern makers, cigar makers, and on Tuesday night last he spoke for the bricklayers' union. There are four thousand members of this union in Chicago and probably there is no group of workmen anywhere to be found with as large a percentage of active and effective workers for socialism.

The bricklayers' educational club, of which John Catrell, and a number of others of the most active comrades are members, has been doing splendid work in that union, but Tuesday evening was the first time in its history when a socialist addressed the body by invitation of the union. When the invitation was voted two weeks ago there was not a little hesitation and a good deal of direct opposition to extending the invitation. But the socialists, reinforced by a good number of democrats who had worked with Comrade Mills in the democratic party, supported the invitation for personal reasons, and it went through. But when the address was over Tuesday night, the bricklayer who had been the most active in the opposition, made the motion to extend a vote of thanks for the address, which was taken by a rising vote and was accompanied by the most tumultuous cheering. The same gentleman, Mr. Peterson, was the first to personally congratulate Mr. Mills on the address, and did so by declaring that his own politics had been changed by that address, that he had never before understood the relations of the trades unions to socialism, nor the manner in which workmen were kept quarreling among themselves for the benefit of the capitalists.

The president of the union, the secretary, the business agent, were all very cordial in their congratulations, and Comrade Mills was told over and over again, that he should hereafter have the right of way in Bricklayers' Hall to speak at any time, and on any subject which he might elect.

Comrade Mills said in part: "I am glad to speak to the trades unions about the history and trials and triumphs of organized labor, to acknowledge the great services which these organizations have rendered in the past, and their very great importance in the present, and to point out what seems to me their greater struggles and their greater triumphs for the future."

"The wage system commenced with the workers utterly helpless. They had been evicted from the old feudal estates, they had been driven into the towns, and they came there in great numbers without tools, without organization, without any access to the land, without any means of employment, and with no way by which they could live at all except as hired men, and they were set to bidding against each other to determine who should be permitted to live and who should be compelled to starve. That was the beginning of the wage system. (Cheers.)"

The helpless workers were not long in making the effort to organize, but their organizations were forbidden by law. To combine for mutual defense was declared treason to the state, but through the dungeons, the prisons and on the scaffold, the brave workers in open defiance and in secret combination struggled for the right to organize, for the right to be heard, for the right to stand together, and at last secured for the workers every advantage which the sellers now possess. The right to organize, the right to combine, the right to strike and the right to vote under the authority of the law, was secured by those who fought for them in open defiance of the law. (Cheers.)

"But the world advances. New conditions demand new methods of warfare. So long as industry was local and not international, if the workers of any given locality could organize and surround the shop, they were able to force up prices and shorten hours. The bosses no longer ask for a longer day, their scheme now, instead of asking for lengthened hours, is to quicken the speed within the hours, so that even within the shortened hours which the unions have been able to secure, they are able to utterly exhaust the productive powers of the workers. (That's right!—and applause.)"

"But more serious than any advantage which any change of tactics on the part of employers makes necessary, here a change in the demands made by the workers, are the new conditions which the world's market has already brought to commerce and will speedily bring to the workers also.

"The products of labor are now sold in the world's market. The price of any commodity is no longer fixed by local conditions, but by supply and demand in the world's market, that country being able to get the business which can produce the largest quantity of any given grade for the smallest price. But cheap production involves cheap labor, and if America is to hold her own in this world's market, her workers must produce more and receive a smaller share of what they produce, than any other nation on earth. (Applause.)"

"Formerly when the workers struck, the answer of the boss was to import other workers. Tomorrow the answer of the boss will be to export the factory. (Cheers.) If the American worker strikes, instead of struggling with a hungry, unorganized, unemployed fellow laborer who waits outside the shop for employment that he may not get, tomorrow, if the American laborer shall strike, instead of bringing helpless workers from the peasants of Europe, from the black men of the South or from the yellow men of the Orient, tomorrow, if the American laborer shall strike, the factory will be exported and the American laborer may take his choice—out-do the productive capacity of the Chinese coolie for the share of the product which the coolie gets, or if he does not want to join the coolies in Asia he may join the tramps at home, and the world's market will be supplied from Peking and Hong Kong, rather than from Chicago. (Great applause.)"

"Commerce is international. For the future there is no hope for labor except in international organization, but you cannot go abroad and successfully organize the helpless workers of other lands while still fighting a doubtful battle at home. (Cheers.) You cannot any longer secure the welfare of the workers and others anywhere, until the workers everywhere, shall be provided for. (Applause.) So long as the public authorities of America conspire with the powers of Europe to rob and oppress the workers of other lands, the trades unions will be both helpless at home and powerless abroad. (Applause.)"

"The unions must enlarge their program. They must strike directly for the power of state. They must go abroad, but they must go in command of the army and navy. They must be triumphant at home first, they must undertake missionary work afterwards. (Great cheering.)"

"The organized workers have always led. The overwhelming majority of those who are unorganized, even while they eat the bread of the sweaters and exploiters, long for deliverance and depend upon the labor organizations as the only power strong enough to effect a union of all the workers at the ballot box, and at last to win deliverance for all the workers everywhere. (Great applause.)"

"And when will you do this? Not so long as a part of you go on a strike, and another part join the militia to shoot the strikers. (Cheers.) Capitalism would be powerless if the workers would refuse to strike each other. (Great applause.) Not so long as you divide your votes and cancel each other's citizenship at the ballot box and allow those who rob you in the workshop to write the laws and run the government. (Cheers.) Again, the capitalist will be utterly helpless, the hour the workers refuse to vote against each other. It is simply a question of standing together. The unorganized and undisciplined workers all about you, and the helpless worker of the world depend on you to lift up the banner, and lead the way to union and to victory."

As Comrade Mills was seated, workers from all part of the hall were on their feet clamoring for recognition. The motion was made for a vote of thanks and seconded by an uproar of voices. It was taken by a rising vote when the whole audience sprang to its feet in the midst of a tumult of cheering.

(One of the lessons in the series of twenty lessons given by the Chicago School of Social Economy is devoted to the subject of the relations of the trades unions to socialism. In this lesson Comrade Mills explained exhaustively all of the questions arising in this connection, and in response to the urgent request of many comrades will have an extra edition printed for the immediate use of the unions and others interested in this subject. It is a document of twelve large pages, and Max S. Hayes says of it, "It is lawless." This article can be obtained for five cents, in stamps, each or for distribution at the rate of $1.00 per hundred. Address The Chicago School of Social Economy, 4115 Ellis avenue.)

ON THE RAILROADS

Energetic Worker Distributes Socialist Literature.

IS THREATENED WITH ARREST

Refuses to be Bulldozed by Hired Spy and Gets Even by Doubling His Activity.

For over three years I have been traveling between East Orange, N. J., and New York. During this time I have distributed daily the following papers: Worker, Workers' Call, Cleveland Citizen, Public Ownership, Volks Zeitung, International Socialist Review, and many other publications on socialism. I have taken bundles of The Worker and laid a paper in each seat of the trains and watched the people take them up and read them, and before they would arrive at their station are styled by socialists the hirelings of capitalism, who see the spies among the workmen on the Erie Road. All look for some kind of socialist papers, when they see me. Let every socialist in the land that has to travel on trains, give out socialist publications or papers to the CONDUCTORS, BRAKEMAN, FIREMAN, ENGINEERS, in fact, any one employed upon the railroads of the country, do the same kind of work that I am doing, and you will see how quick we will accomplish our emancipation from wage slavery and establish the Socialist Co-operative Commonwealth through the Social Democratic Party.

Even if a shoo-fly should come up to you and threaten you with arrest, it's nothing but a game of hide-and-seek, to waste you out of your good work, keep a stiff upper lip, show yourself a man and not a coward, onward with the good work of Socialism, Education. We want the workmen to become the great thinkers of the world, so that they can master the industrial institutions of the country in which their lives shall be one of ease and comfort in place of slavery of long hours under pagan wages.

WEST SIDE REPORT

Agitation Plans Completed and in Operation.

OUT DOOR MEETINGS GROWING

Socialists of the West Side Intend to Take First Place in City Propaganda Work.

During the past week the West Side organization has been busily engaged in completing its agitation plans for the ensuing summer. On Friday evening the members of the 15th Ward Branch met at Comrade Kellogg's house, the most important business transaction consisting in the having the Branch join the West Side organization. On Monday, the 15th Ward Branch met at Schenck's Hall and decided to merge itself in the West Side organization.

SOUTH SIDE REPORT

Increased Activity Everywhere Gratifying Results.

WORKERS VERY ENERGETIC

Agitation Meetings, New Members and Subscribers, Receipts and Expenditures etc.

The South Side workers are succeeding in their efforts to systematize and organize their work. Week before last there was regular reports made by nine comrades as special workers. Last week the number was raised to twenty-three. There are yet thirty comrades who have volunteered to give one evening a week and report on the work, several of whom are again to be at work, who have neglected to make reports. But a report is important. Here is a summary of the work reported:

Comrade Anderson leads the list with 5 subscribers for the Workers' Call, the collection of back dues from 2 comrades and a subscription of 50 cents to the organization fund. Comrade Lela Lowrie, 2 subscribers; Mrs. Forberg, 1 subscriber; C. F. Low, 1/2 subscribers and 3 new members; Comrade Rasmussen, 4 subscribers; Roberts, 3 subscribers; E. Kilbuck, 2 subscribers; E. Johnson, 5 subscribers; Martin, 1 subscriber; Horsley, 4 subscribers; Unassigned report, 2 subscribers; Comrade Kleininger, 1 subscriber; 1 new member and sold 5 picnic tickets. Mrs. Ishijah sold 11 tickets; Comrade Fellner, 1 new subscriber; Comrade Haah, 1 new member, 5 Workers' Calls; Ransbaum, 3 subscribers; Comrade Paul Pierce, 3 subscribers; W. B. Pierce, 2 subscribers; N. J. Nielsen, 4 subscribers. Comrade Kleininger, 4 subscribers. THE WEEK'S MEETINGS.
The meetings for the South Side for the week were well attended and did excellent work. The meeting at Cottage Grove avenue and 37th street Wednesday evening was prevented by the rain. On Saturday evening at 111th and Michigan streets, Comrades Mills and McDermut addressed about 200. Comrade McDermut dwelt somewhat at length on the number of useless people. He referred to himself as a court reporter and his daily duties being about as necessary in a reasonably organized community as the man who keeps the score in a prize fight.

At 31d and Halsted streets Comrades Wanbope, Mrs. Forberg and Saunders addressed a large group of enthusiastic listeners. It was Mrs. Forberg's first address on the street corner and Comrade Saunders recommends that she be kept doing so. At State and Congress streets Comrades Caplan and Zimmerman spoke for five evenings of the week. Large crowds were constantly in attendance and arrangements will be made to have a speaker every evening in the week as well as Sunday afternoon and evening.

CAPLAN HITS THE SINGLE TAX.
Sunday afternoon Mrs. Forberg and Comrade Zimmerman and Sunday evening Comrades Caplan, Zimmerman, Saunders and Mills were among the speakers. Comrade Caplan made an especially good hit in response to an inquiry regarding the single tax. He explained that under the single tax the tax would have to be paid by the employer, but in order to be paid by him would need to be deducted from the products of the workers, and that means that under the operation of the single tax the employer would continue to scheme for benefits his own toll did not produce, and the toiler would continue to toil for a part of his products only.

THE UNEMPLOYED AND THE WOOD PILE.
Comrade Zimmerman gave an interesting account of going the rounds of the charity organizations seeking relief as a man-out of a job. The details were very entertaining and when he called for volunteers of those who liked that sort of relief whenever the victim of a lockout, there did not seem to be anyone in the crowd who was satisfied with the charity scheme for relieving the distress incidental to the periodic break-up under the capitalist employer.

PRIVATE PROFIT.
Sunday afternoon Comrades McDermut and Mills spoke at Cottage Grove avenue and 6th street to a large company. In his address Comrade Mills defended the socialists from the contention that they were opposed to private ownership, and showed that instead of this being the case that socialism is the only program by which all the people will ever be able to privately own and control the things for CHAUNCEY—It has amused the children for two seasons already. Why not a third?

FAT MAN—Well, if it don't please them, they can have another. Puppets are cheap anyhow, and so long as I hold the strings, it don't matter much as to what they are attached.

Vall in the Twin Cities.

In spite of the shortest of notice, the comrades of Minneapolis and St. Paul succeeded in holding two large meetings in both of the cities. The meeting at Minneapolis was held at Century Hall, which was well filled with eager listeners. Mr. Vall spoke at considerable length on the economics of the present system and his remarks were well appreciated. For almost a full hour he was answering questions, and apparently satisfactorily to the audience. In Minneapolis he was challenged by Rev. Sample to debate on Single Tax, which he promptly accepted, and arrangements will be made at some future date, when Vall is through with his tour to accommodate the gentleman.

At St. Paul, a half a dozen stalwarts of the professor tried to repeat their game of creating a disturbance, but the witty answers of the speaker and characterization of the S. L. P. put the audience in such a state of laughter, that they failed to open their mouths again.

On Wednesday and Friday the 25th and 15th Ward Branches took the same action.

This completes the West Side Division, and everything is now ready to push the work of agitation.

On Monday evening the 9th and 10th Ward Clubs met and a very interesting discussion took place on the question of pushing the circulation of the party organ. Comrade Hechtman suggested that the comrades supply the candy stores with copies so as to get it before the public, and urged that ads be solicited in the same manner. This suggestion should be acted on by every comrade as far as possible.

The Organizers met on Monday to compare notes, and it was decided that the Branches be requested to hold weekly meetings, so that the Ward organizer may be enabled to make his report every week.

Treasurer reported as follows: Cash on hand, $2.30. Turned over by Socialist temple Committee, $12.95. Per 9th and 10th Ward Branches, $1.12th Ward Branch, $1.12th Ward Branch, $1. Total $15.85. Expenses: To Division organizer on account, $10. Postage to Recording Secretary, 15 cents. Total $25.15. Balance on hand, $3.50.

It was decided to place the Ward Organizer in charge of open air meetings in his ward, with instructions to take up collections and turn the proceeds directly into the Division Organizer's fund.

Organizer was instructed to procure 300 Workers' Call Postals and 500 Due Stamps and Application Cards. While the work of organization was pushed, agitation was by no means neglected.

An open air meeting held on Halsted and O'Brien streets on Friday was opened by Comrade Levenberg, who soon collected a crowd. A question from a Democrat in the audience asking whether the working class would not do better to vote the Democratic ticket, as that party had reformed and declared against monopoly, was answered by Comrade Klenke who pointed out that socialists wanted no reform to make capitalism bearable, but revolution to abolish it altogether. Another individual wanted to know what the Democrats could do in the city, as long as they were not elected in the State and nation. The speaker replied that he did not know exactly what they COULD do, but he could easily tell what they DID do. He then began to cite the police club during the recent lockout, the refusal of the city to order the construction of the school buildings, thus enabling the contractors to break up the Building Trades Council, the enlargement of the brickyards at the Bridgeway to make more brick by convict labor and throw them on the market to compete with the product of the laborers outside. This did not suit the questioner who came back with the assertion that socialism was a humbug, but the crowd gave him the laugh and hoisted him down the street.

Three meetings were held on Saturday evening, one on 12th and Kedzie streets, where Comrades Fox and Collins spoke. A new comrade, Cope, made his initial speech by opening the meeting with a very creditable introduction.

The meeting was disturbed somewhat by an intoxicated wage-slave, whose presence and remarks were in themselves as good an illustration of the effects of capitalism as could be desired.

The second meeting was held at Armitage and Milwaukee avenues by the 25th Ward Branch. It was the first open-air meeting held by the Branch this season. Directly after the Salvation Army had departed, Comrade Klenke mounted the stand and expanded the class struggle to an extensive audience.

Comrade Robbins spoke the same day to a small crowd at Paulina street and Milwaukee avenue.

Capitalism may be depended upon to see that there is no "agony domination" in the South, as long as the vast majority of the colored population are propertyless wage workers.

In his talk of the probability of a third presidential term for McKinley, Chauncey M. Depew says a rather left-headed compliment to Mr. W. J. Bryan, by asserting that "nothing stands in the way."

Senator McLaughlin, it is reported, will drop Tillman, and conversely we suppose Tillman will drop McLaughlin, but it seems to be fairly well settled that neither of them will drop office for the purpose of ascertaining the trend of "public opinion."

"Perhaps that incentive" which inspired Mr. Edison to invent a cheap Portland cement which can be "poured" in the form of a building was the fact that he desired to secure more leisure for the bricklayers whose labor has been intensified within recent years to the utmost limit of physical endurance?

In the press accounts of the great banquet given by the members of the London Chamber of Commerce to their New York prototypes last week, it is not easy to discover many traces of the boasted democracy claimed for the American and British Governments. Leaving out of account the magnificence and luxury which marked everything connected with the banquet, the speeches and conversation of those present as reported in the daily press shows that these men rightly enough considered themselves as the central objects around which everything else revolved. They settled out of hand the relations between the two countries, discussed treaties, policies, alliances and matters supposed to be settled by the "people" of their respective countries, with the easy confidence of men who thoroughly understood their power as dictators and directors of national and international politics. The ruling class certainly labor under no delusion as to their position in society to-day, whatever the laborers upon whose backs they ride may think of the matter.

It is rather curious to observe the wonderful faith exhibited by most people in "business" principles. Get things down to a "business" basis and all will be well. At the woman suffrage convention held last week in Minneapolis, the audience were treated to an address on the "servant problem" by a young woman who is alleged to have studied the subject thoroughly. According to her theory, the root of the evil lies in the fact that household labor is not on a business basis. These well-meaning women are evidently ignorant of the fact that the employment of thousands and millions of wage laborers on a strictly business basis, as in shops, factories, mines, etc., is by no means a solution of the labor "problem." It is difficult to see why, if household labor were put upon the same footing, any particular improvement should be expected, but it is not at all hard to imagine that those who advocate this "reform" would be the very first to deny the organizations which domestic servants would be compelled to establish in self-defense.

THAT THIRD TERM.

In hinting at the advisability of electing McKinley for a third term to the presidential chair, Senator Depew exhibits considerable foresight in assuring the "public" that the suggestion contains nothing whatever that is calculated to frighten the most timorous amongst them. McKinley has been a competent and faithful employee and no good reason can be given for dispensing with his services in 1904. Great prosperity has resulted under his administration, he commands universal confidence, and national pride has been vastly stimulated during his previous terms of office. There is nothing whatever to stand in the way of his re-election, except a political tradition, an unwritten law which is supposed to prohibit any one individual from occupying the presidential chair for more than two terms.

Although it suits the capitalist press at the present time to treat Depew's assertion as a joke, there is nevertheless considerably more truth embodied in it than they see fit to make public. It will hardly be disputed that if McKinley's third term was an absolute necessity for capitalist interests, his election would be a foregone conclusion. The individual who cannot already perceive the manner in which traditional policies have been reversed and "time-honored principles" abandoned, within recent years, is not likely to prove a more insuperable barrier than in 1896 or 1898. The cause of economic reaction which went down to defeat with Bryan in 1896 can hardly be expected to gather to its side a force sufficiently strong to check capitalist development, merely because the ruling class might determine to set aside another comparatively unimportant political tradition.

But under present circumstances the probability of successful opposition to a third term for McKinley are reduced to a minimum, a fact which the unobscured Depew is perfectly aware of. The manifest weakness of the Democratic party, and its hopeless outlook for the future, brings his suggestion clearly within the range of what is called practical politics. No one knows better than Depew the difficulty experienced by the Democrats in finding an "issue" for 1904, and the only senator seen clearly that this difficulty will be immensely increased in 1904. As he states that in all probability an entirely new political party will spring into existence in 1904, it is not such a far-fetched idea to propose the re-election of the tried and faithful servant of capitalist interests for the third term. Depew knows well that the "entirely new party" must attack capitalism, and that upon his other platform can it hope for the slightest success, and he understands further that to the mass of voters composing that party, the re-election of McKinley as an individual will be very largely a matter of indifference. Their fight will be made not against McKinley's personality, but against what he represents, and will take on more and more the earmarks of a class struggle. Under such circumstances the fact that the capitalist candidate is running for office for a third term, will not attract a great deal of attention. Conservatism must be abandoned by the opponents of the Republican party; their platforms in the future must perforce become more or less constructive and revolutionary. Of course there is no certainly whatever that Depew's suggestion will be adopted. As he himself says there are many other "able men" from which the ruling class can choose a candidate. If they see fit, but it is none the less certain that the strength of the possible opposition to the proposal has been carefully considered, before being made public, and that the shrewd capitalist-senator has judged that there is not much danger to be apprehended on the score of want of precedent. At any rate, whatever selection the capitalist class may make for 1904, they will be all probability discover that the most formidable opposition will not arise upon the question of how many times their candidate has been nominated but rather on account of the economic situation he represents.

THE NEGRO AND HIS "RIGHTS."

It is at least encouraging to know that here and there the voice of some white men are being raised in protest against the slavish submission to injustice recommended by those spirited capitalist crawlers of the Dr. Parkhurst and Booker T. Washington type, as the proper policy to be adopted by the colored population of the U. S. One Chas. H. Williams, a well known writer of Baraboo, Wis., has published an open letter in reply to the sermon preached by the former lickspittle, in which the negro was advised to say nothing about his voting rights under the Constitution. Mr. Williams declares that "God, the country and the future have nothing to store for people of African descent unless they become manly men and womanly women asserting their rights as such, demanding and obtaining them peaceably if they can, forcibly if they must."

Booker T. Washington on this matter and deprecates that of Williams, the Chicago Tribune declaring editorially that the latter "is not so good a counselor as the former," a statement whose truth depends altogether on the point of view taken. If the interests of the capitalist class furnish the criterion by which the views of Mr. Williams are to be judged it is undeniable that such counsel is evil. If on the other hand the question is judged from the standpoint of the interests of the working class (to which the vast majority of colored people belong) it is equally apparent that the counsel is good.

There can be little doubt but that the utterances of Parkhurst, Washington and others of that ilk are directly inspired by capitalist interests. At no period in the history of the country has the necessity of a great body of non-resistant, submissive, industrial slaves been so urgent as at present. Upon every hand signs of revolt amongst the white portion of the working classes is evidenced by recurring labor disputes, strikes, lockouts and boycotts, which threaten to assume greater proportions every year, as wealth concentrates in fewer hands. The capitalists knowing full well that these conflicts will ultimately take a political form are naturally inclined to prevent the colored man from adding his weight to that of his white fellow workers as a political factor in the struggle. They are sufficiently afraid to understand that if the demands of colored men for the franchise are concerned, the latter will eventually be used against their interests in conjunction with the forces of the rebellious white workers. To this end they foster race prejudice and hatreds, and seek to pit white against black in order to neutralize the efforts of both.

For these reasons they assume that because the "Southern people" are unalterably opposed to permitting the negro to exercise his "constitutional rights," the best policy for the latter is to submit quietly. He must not protest, for such action on his part will only increase the hostility of the whites against him. His aspirations for the race to which he belongs, the production of "manly men and womanly women," can only be realized through uncompensated subordination upon his part to injustice which even his masters recognize as such. For his manliness in to be attained through servility, independence through slavery. The "education" of his race demands that he be first reduced to a political nonentity. This is the gospel that twentieth century capitalism preaches to the negro, through the mouths of Dr. Parkhurst and the still more contemptible Booker T. Washington.

Mr. Williams asserts that if the negro cannot attain his rights by peaceful methods, force must be resorted to. This assertion is stigmatized as nonsense by the Tribune, which falsely declares that "attempts to gain rest or imaginary rights by that method do not succeed in the United States." The negro is supposed to be ignorant of the fact that the birth of the Republic itself was brought about by forcible methods, that chattel slavery was abolished in the same manner and that the fighting power of the negro himself was used as far as possible to aid in the emancipation of his fellows from the same chattel slavery. These historical facts are conveniently ignored, because the only remaining antagonist against which the political or physical force of the negro can be directed is modern capitalism, which has changed the form of his oppression from chattel to wage slavery in its own interest solely.

It is true that the negro can accomplish nothing by making his race and color the starting point from which to struggle for his "constitutional rights." In such a conflict he is doomed to certain defeat, while the power of fostering and inflaming race prejudices remains in the hands of his oppressors. His complete political and economic emancipation is conditioned upon precisely the same terms as that of his white fellow workman. Only by taking part with them in the great class struggle which embraces all workers regardless of race, creed or color, can he hope to realize the freedom that is now denied him. For him as for all other workers, socialism is the only method by which it can be secured, and by which the aspirations of Mr. Chas. H. Williams for "manly men and womanly women" amongst the colored people can take substantial material form.

North Side

Mass Meeting.
Saturday evening, June 15, Subject: "What God have Unionists done for Working People?" by Miss Ellen Lundström. "Woman's Position in Society," by Thomas J. Morgan. At 8:00 P. M. in the Chicago Tribune Building, Chicago, Ill. Free discussion. Everybody invited.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

"The reason this city is dirty is because the necessary amount of money is not appropriated and expended for keeping it clean," says Mr. Harry O. Selfridge in his recent article on street cleaning. This new original view of the matter is of course endorsed by the local capitalist press which refers to the article in question as an "excellent monograph." Wonder what they would have called it if Mr. Selfridge had attempted to discover the reason for "the reason etc.?"

Once more the Stockyards becomes the arena of "reform." Scarcely has Swift and Company prohibited the use of profanity on their premises, than the firm of Libby, McNeil and Libby issue an ultimatum forbidding the chewing of tobacco by their employees, under a similar penalty, viz., that of immediate discharge. Capitalist reform invariably consists in regulating the conduct and habits of the wage slaves in whatever manner the owners may decide. It can always be suitably prefaced with the command: "Thou shalt not."

"Students of Sociology" were startled over the report of the City Statistician to the effect that the month of April showed a great increase in the number of women arrested, over the preceding month. The Chief of Police however allayed their fears by explaining that this result was merely a proof that the police were attending more strictly to business. Women were not getting worse, but the police force were getting better, so everything was for the best in the best of all possible worlds. But of course nobody was rude enough to ask what was the value of the "sociology" which depended for its knowledge of the conditions under which women of this city live, upon police reports.

Whose Government is it? A cabinet member sums up the situation in Cuba as follows:

"We feel that it will be some time before the Cubans accept the Platt amendment. The determination is that that amendment SHALL BE ACCEPTED BEFORE THE CUBANS ARE ALLOWED TO ESTABLISH THEIR OWN GOVERNMENT. It is very much OUR affair and yet the Cubans are the ones who are the losers, they being just so much time in getting THEIR government a-going. We, on the other hand, will continue military occupation and control as at present."

The Cubans are "free" to accept or reject these terms as they see fit, much in the same manner that the working-class are "free" to accept or reject the terms offered by their exploiters, the owners of the means of production and distribution. The freedom of Cuba, resolves itself into something suspiciously like the "freedom of contract" which is enjoyed by the wage working class in all countries.

There is nothing so mysterious in the offer of Mrs. M. B. Irving of $1,000 to the business man who can conduct his business successfully for one month without lying, a fact which none understand better than the business element themselves. It is interesting however to note the distortions of the daily press in their efforts to side track this very disagreeable person by an ingenious method of begging the question. It happens that the editor of the Ladies Home Journal, who is generally regarded as an authority on the mental peculiarities of women, has stated that they show a decided tendency to avoid payment of debts. Their lack of "principles" in this respect, he says, has brought many small dealers into bankruptcy. This is supposed in some manner to offset the charge made by Mrs. Irving as regards the business man, and she is advised to extend her offer to her own sex. In this manner it is hoped that the reader will infer that Mrs. Irving's charge is directed rather against men than against "business." What she has plainly stated is that what is to-day called "business" is inherently dishonest irrespective of the sex of the party conducting it, and that its success is dependent upon dishonesty. The whole matter depends upon the definition adopted by those interested in the question. From the capitalist conception of honesty Mrs. Irving is wrong, from the socialist standpoint she is undeniably right. Her thousand dollars is in little danger of forfeiture.

Convention Notice.

Comrades,
The N. E. C. having affirmed the date of July 20, as the date for the opening of the unity convention, I hereby advise all comrades to that effect. Credentials are in the hands of the printer and will be mailed to all Locals and State Committees in a few days, with instructions as to the election of delegates. All comrades who have been members of the party prior to June 30, are entitled to representation providing they are in good standing. Therefore in order that all comrades may be represented at the coming convention they are reminded to pay up all their dues promptly.

Locals are also reminded that an assessment was levied equal to ten cents per member and all those Locals or sub-divisions which as yet failed to pay same are requested to do so at once, as the N. E. C. would like to report to the convention that all obligations of the party have been paid.

Those still committed to the cause, yet not settled their Int. Dist. Stamp account are urged to attend to same without delay.
Let our Party be fully represented at the convention, so that it can be said it was the largest gathering of socialist delegates at a National Convention ever held in the United States.
Yours fraternally,

LINEMEN STILL OUT.

Explanation of the Causes Which Led to the Strike and the Situation as it is at Present.

[This communication which was refused publication by every capitalist daily in the city has been sent to this office with request to print it. We regret to say that it reached the office too late to be reinforced by editorial comment.—ED.]

Chicago, Ill., June 11th, 1901.

All of the Commonwealth and Edison Electric Light Companies Linemen who went on strike three weeks ago, are still out. The men had been getting $2.15 and asked for $3.00 per day. Every honorable means to induce the company to comply with the linemen's request has failed. The linemen gave, at the company's request, two weeks for consideration of this question, which the committee, appointed to represent the union, was lead to believe would be favorably considered. But apparently that was never the company's intention.

We were to have that, only, after a struggle and not until then. The company has been increasing the voltage in the last year from 2,000 to 3,000 volts and now they are coming out with 18,000 volts, increasing the number of wires as the poles of which a man have to climb through, increasing the danger in a thousand ways. Yet the company can't see why this increase of 35 c per day should be paid linemen, the company claims that their wires have been cut down in several parts of the city, and of course, have notified the police, as a means of securing cheap detective service. The truth is there never was a day in Chicago, but what the company's wires were down, in trouble, and a detriment to the public.

But as there is a strike on they would have the public believe it to be the work of those striking linemen.
The linemen concluded that a rate of 35 cents per day was but a small part of the amount the men should get. And they don't intend to change their minds or go back to work until they get it. The company has purchased a wheelbarrow load of Smith & Wesson revolvers which they intend to use as an argument and as a settlement. The linemen, who belong to the International Brotherhood of Electric Workers, claim to be as stiff as the company is stout. Thus a long hard and bitter struggle is expected. The company with its millions have not as yet been able to get any men.

Respectfully,
P. E. CULLIMAN.

If the "conquest" of foreign markets is a desirable object, why should there be any objection to an "emperor" at Washington? Are not the two words the complement of each other in every respect?

Socialist

Pointers

It is up to the party members to make the picnic a success.
Dowie thinks democracy is a failure. He must have been looking at the present.

There seems to be a general idea that the immediate demands of our platform should be changed to make socialism the one immediate demand.

The lists of suicides in the daily papers are getting almost large enough to crowd out the prosperity news.

Now that Senator Clark is fixed for four years he has forgotten that he is the friend of the workman.

McKinley has modestly refused the third term before it was offered him, but Mark Hanna has yet to be heard from.

No matter how much Bryan may desire to come our way, his party is fixing so it will not matter which way he comes.

The way to reform the levee is to abolish it. If it was not for the profit there is in it the levee would not last a week.

Socialists of the United States should be ashamed of themselves. Even Spain has one socialist member of its national legislative body.

This promises to be a good summer for the birth of an assortment of reform parties that will never live through the winter.

People who think that the poor could abolish all their ills by taking a bath every day should remember that they need an occasional haircut.

When Rockefeller grabs in a few more industries it will come to pass that those who cannot get a job as his hired man will starve to death.

None of the rich thieves have been chased out of town by the reform police administration. It would last about a day if it were to try that.

The International Machinists' Union has voted down socialism. If they prefer a part of their product rather than the whole of it, that is their business.

Prosperity is a condition in which the rich get more than they need and the poor get only enough to live on. No wonder the rich think it is a great thing.

The organizers cannot do much without the active help of the party members, but a pull altogether will move mountains of prejudice and will work a revolution.

The college presidents have at last discovered that their graduates are up against it and are telling them they are doomed to disappointment if they hope to get rich.

The present dickerings with the street-car companies over the renewal of their franchises shows plainly the democratic party favors municipal ownership for campaign purposes.

Cuba is discovering that the promise of a capitalist government only holds good when it is no money in the pockets of the business men of the land to break it.

It is getting so that the man without a dollar or a job is not so much afraid of socialism as he once was. Even the fear that we want to "divide up" has ceased to alarm him.

The capitalist can take a vacation and his pay will go marching on. Under socialism we would all be capitalists. Wouldn't it be nice? But then, you know, no one would do the disagreeable work. Wouldn't that be too bad?

General Grant says Aguinaldo should be set at work on the stone pile. Then he takes two months' leave of absence to visit his son-in-law who is one of the Russian nobility. The average West Pointer is class-conscious all right.

The reward of $1,000 for an honest business man will hardly be taken up. It is a small fry business man who can't make more than that in a month by taking part of the product of the labor of other men.

The politicians who are always on the lookout for a harmless issue should make one of the third term idea. It has about as much to do with the active every-day affairs of the people as some of the other issues that campaigns have been fought over.

Picnic Tickets.

Comrades:—
The secretaries of all Ward Branches have been provided with a supply of tickets for the Workers' Call picnic. Along with this is a separate envelope a receipt for the same has been sent, which the recipients will sign and return to this office, 36 N. Clark street. Clubs which have already received tickets and have not yet returned signed receipts for same are requested to do so at once, as it is necessary that the Executive Committee possess a full account of all tickets that are sent out.

The South in Transition.

Politics and Social Status. Capitalist Development. Old Economic Struggles. The Future Conflict. "Reformers" at Work. Charitable Organizations. Capitalistic Policies. The Outlook for Socialism.

Through the great newspapers and periodicals of the South appear almost continuously articles pointing to the achievements of this republic, nay of the world, and with glittering adjectives is the fact heralded that the scene has been reached. The writer begs the attention of the readers of the Call to some facts commonly overlooked, which facts are to be observed by those who will see.

Politically, there is just one point of difference between the North and the South today. The democratic party in the South occupies the same social position as the republican party in the North. If you would be low-down, "out of our set," just identify yourself with democracy in the North, and if you would pass through the world "unhonored and unnamed" in the South, just insist on being a member of the republican party. Why, even one of the Atlanta Journal's school children's excursionists to Washington, after shaking hands with McKinley, declared he was entirely too nice a man to be a republican, and it was too bad he was not a democrat (and thus belong to really good society). But these differences, after all, were only the result of environment. Fundamentally there are no differences between the two parties. They each serve the one common end, that of legislating in the interest of commerce. If the republican party is more corrupt in practice it is not so much due to innate meanness or a lower moral tone than the democrats, but to, to them, unfortunate fact of having been in power so many years out of the last fifty, they have grown bold and arrogant.

Many articles appearing in the Southern press of late are urging upon northern capital the desirability of "investment in the South." The fact is pointed out that the people of the New England states have on deposit in the savings banks an amount $6 to 1 over the people of the Southland, and the statement made that this is because the New England states have had manufactures and the South has not. In this connection it is declared that 75 years ago, when a great Southern man died, the only thing the South furnished for the funeral was the corpse and the grave—that the coffin, shroud, shoes, shirts, nails, lumber, etc., were all manufactured "up North," while, at the same time, the natural resources of the South in timber, coal, iron, cotton, and all raw materials, were far better in quality and much greater in quantity than those of the North. This is all very true, but the South has waited too long for the golden opportunity of the second time and the harvest of the North has come, and is now well-nigh gone. Just at a time when commerce is almost a corpse, the South is talking about taking it up. At the present stage of commercial development the South can never gather the great benefit that has so helped and built up the North.

Forty years ago there was a great war. On the surface it appeared to be "for" or "against" human chatties, but fundamentally it was more—much more than that. It was a four-year sanguinary battle against evolution. It was not due to the production of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" by Harriet Beecher Stowe, neither was it due to the high morals of the North and the "holier than thou" in the breasts of the so-called patriots from the North of Mason and Dixon's line. It was simply fate. It was the inevitable passing of one economic condition for another. Not a life of selfishness was in it. The North saw its opportunity. It embraced it. It could and did take what it was a high moral stand. It took from the South slavery so-called. That extraction well-nigh beggared the South for forty years. While it lay in a stupor over its loss, and its untrained white hands wondered what they would do, and the negro, free, a great man, found that his last state was worse than his first. But all this time capital in the North was not idle. It had an eye to the South. It could afford to grow sentimental over the negro. He never would be much of a factor among the northern blunders. Sectional lines have been closer and closer drawn.

A new stage in the development of the age is now on. In 1860-61, in a few southern states, there was fought a battle that decided forever that man could not be bought, sold and owned. If the millions of wretched homes had not been, and if the billions of money spent in this senseless battle, had not been, the result would have been just the same. Why have an investment of from $500 to $1,000 in a black man, and all the care and anxiety of his keep, when he can be hired for a life time now for a less sum than it formerly cost to buy him? This is the industrial phase of the same struggle.

The last and final struggle of the age is now being ushered in. Where formerly a few states contended for a certain industrial proposition, now the time is being rapidly formed for a great economic battle that shall involve the civilized world, and whose coming and outcome are as inevitable as was war over states' rights and slavery forty years ago.

The opportunity to the South for money-making in manufactures will never be what it has been to the North. The day of the North's supremacy is over, as well. The new conditions are rapidly drawing to a close the industrial forces, and the battle must be fought. It will be a bloodless battle, but it will be fought with results of more moment than the bloodiest wars of the history of man's existence.

A Carrie Nation and a bartender that strikes at the effect and ignores the cause, is a characteristic trait of present reforms. It is one-tenth of the energy thus expended, the great throbs of sympathy, were directed to a united action at causes, how quickly would some real reform follow. Recently a Mrs. Felton appeared before the Woman's Club and told the hearts of the members of that organization a story in the denunciation of the brute in human form who sold his seventeen-year-old son for $10 per month to the contractor of a convict camp. Of course it is awful that such things should be, but the most distressing part of it is that our good women should be wrought into hysterics as they have had their imaginations drawn upon to paint in demagogical colors that parent, and yet never a word as to the causes which lead up to such barbarous practices. Do these women not see, will they not heed, that humanity is a nothing compared to a dollar, and let all that is true and holy and noble but be given a way by which those "noble" traits may be turned into money, and what cares commerce if homeless wrecked and young boys starve, and babies weep the fabric that cover the beautiful forms that society, with such glitter and show, presents to the favored few who may belong to their set. What does it matter if eternal souls are forever crushed out and high and noble hearts never see development, if but their flesh and blood may be converted into diamonds, and their hearts and souls like alkali and satins.

Well may society organize charitable institutions for the relief of the poor, hold charity balls, etc., if with one hand, and that by far the stronger one, it takes from the class now so needy, that which leaves it a pauper, and with the other and weaker hand it does out a pitance of that which was originally the property of those now called paupers.

The ministers of a city gather in Monday morning conferences and raise the questions why the masses are not in the churches. Why that dear institution, the church, is disintegrating. One noble brother has discovered the cause(?)—not enough hell is preached. Did he mean that he could frighten the masses into the church, and through it into the Kingdom? Years ago, when the public was not theologically well informed, and possessed more or less of the superstition of the dark ages, to preach hell and fear, to drive the flock into the Kingdom, might, and is, a measure, did prevail. But that day is passed and gone. Will not the divines discover that they are battling with an effect, and forgetting the cause. They stand to defend a system that is absorbing the life blood of the masses, and they will not pay the price of the truth, and set the people free.

But the picture is not altogether dark. In fact, it is flooded with light. The darkest hour is just before day. The long period of viewing industrial facts to suit selfish ends is rapidly drawing to a close. "In that day," so often spoken of by Isaiah, a new order is coming in, and before the 20th century is one-quarter gone, shall the real beauties of this splendid country begin to dawn. But the battle of slavery must again be fought, this time the negro only one of the factors, and that battle shall forever set the world free from industrial slavery, and cause every man to take under his own vine and fig tree, and every one to know the Lord, from the least unto the greatest.

POLITICAL SIGNS.

Popular Journal Makes Significant Admissions Regarding the Future Struggle.

The following from the Central Farmer and Nonconformist, a former Fusionist paper, which is now talking straight socialism, contains a whole straw-stick to show the direction of the coming tornado.

Fusion in South Dakota seems to be a house divided against itself. There is only one thing on which the democrats and populists agree and that is that in case David B. Hill is the democratic candidate for president, they will all bolt. Further than this they will never agree on anything.

It is claimed that ex-Chairman W. K. Kidd, Thos. B. Ayers, W. T. Follette and other leading populists are about ready to join the social democrats, while ex-Senator Pettigrew, M. L. Fox, ex-Governor Lee and B. H. Lewis are looking towards the formation of a new party in case Mr. Hill or some man agreeing with him shall be the presidential candidate.

It is also claimed that these last named gentlemen have the full sympathy of Marion Butler, Charles A. Towne, Henry M. Teller and perhaps Wm. J. Bryan.

This new party is to be a half way house on the highway to reform—a station on the railway of progress—an obstruction to the radical thought of the 20th century. "It will avoid the extremes of socialism and at the same time attack capital." These moderate reformers favor preventing corporations and individuals from accumulating more than a certain amount of capital. The means to be used to accomplish this are income, inheritance and land taxes, with the government ownership of means of transportation and communication.

The only difference we can see between these two classes of reformers is that one intends to make the whole trip and the other proposes to go only half way. One swallows socialism all at once, and the other proposes to take it in small doses.

The new party promises too much to catch the conservatives and too little to catch the radicals.

It is urged to lead a horse to water.

and then not let him drink. When the new party leads its followers so far on the way to socialism they will be apt to go the rest of the journey on their own volition.

A prominent Bryan democrat of Omaha in discussing this question said to the writer: This half way business is all nonsense—the matter is not a subject of compromise—one can't go halfway and then stop—it must be straight socialism or straight plutocracy, and when the division comes I am going with the plutocrats.

The signs of the times all point to the division of the people of this Union—conservatism has had its day—the time for conservatism is past; the line of the coming battle are forming; labor will engage in a death grasp with capital. The outcome will be a triumphant plutocracy or universal socialism.

We see great hopes for the future in the political conditions of the present. The people are talking but little electing socialism. They do not care for party democracy—they are no longer interested in position. They are becoming more radical every day. They are only waiting for the Moses who will lead them into the land of promises.

And one of these days they will stop waiting for any Moses and so right in and take the promised land without any leader to help or hinder.

Vall's Sayings.

Capitalism and the results of capitalism are the only devil we need fear. Socialism has come to destroy this devil and his works.

Capitalist lackeys often denounce laborers for what they term lack of gratitude to their employers. Great Scott! Is it not bad enough to be robbed, without being grateful to the robber?

Heaven is not a locality hereafter, but a state or condition of love, justice, peace, plenty and fraternity here. Socialism is the realization of this ideal. Are you aiding the dawn of this golden age?

"These Socialists are Holy Terrors." Right you are. They are terrors to those who secure their living by sucking the blood from the producing classes—terror to all forms of injustice and hypocrisy.

Good Christian people criticize laborers for bicycling and excursioning on Sunday. Still they uphold, directly or indirectly, a system which deprives the laborers of an opportunity of an outing on any other day. "Consistency" thou art a jewel.

Reformers endeavor to persuade the capitalists to be good masters, to be kind and generous to those dependent upon them. But it is not good masters that we should endeavor to make, but free and independent men and women. The relation of master and slave is wrong and should not be condoned but abolished.

"Sol" it is said, "what would the laborers do if it were not for the capitalists who give us employment?" But rather what would the capitalists do if it were not for the laborers who produce the wealth upon which they live in luxurious idleness? Socialism would free the laborers from this dependence upon the master class by taking capital, the means of livelihood, the common property of all the people. God speed the day!

CO-OPERATIVE ENTERPRISES

Considered as a Source of Finance for the Dissemination of Socialist Principles.

Our European comrades, notably in Belgium and France, have strengthened their socialist organizations immensely by practicing economic co-operation. I want to suggest briefly some lessons we may learn from their experience.

First, however, let me hasten to explain that their methods have nothing in common with those of the well-metamorphosed simpletons who regard the class struggle as a process for the regeneration of society and who expect to get "something light new" by forming a federation of independent producers to compete with capitalism as the open market.

What our European comrades do, and what we might do, is to organize not as producers but as consumers: to unite the purchasing power of as many wage workers as possible, thus saving the profit which goes to the retailers; and thus at once raising their standard of living and securing ample funds for socialist propaganda.

There are of course differences between the situations in Brussels and in Chicago which must be understood if failure is to be avoided. When the Belgian co-operatives were organized, department stores had not appeared, and the socialist Maison du Peuple is today as large as any capitalist retail store in Belgium. In Chicago on the contrary the department stores are in full possession of the market and any attempt to compete with them along the whole line would certainly require large capital and would probably be futile.

HOW TO BEGIN.

What the Belgian socialists did was to select some one commodity of prime necessity on which the workers were paying large profits, and make it for themselves. They selected bread to start with, and by combining their consuming power they were soon enabled to supply laborers with a better quality of bread at a lower price than before. Their growing numbers and the consequent growth of daily sales enabled them to utilize the finest labor-saving machinery, and their constantly growing surplus enabled them to extend their work on lines of least resistance.

I believe their experiences could be duplicated in Chicago by properly directed effort. The place to begin is where active socialists are the thickest and where regular meetings of considerable size are held. The regular ward or town organization of the Socialist Party might appoint a committee to ascertain how many would co-operate in their purchases of bread and also how many would secure pledges of patronage from non-socialist neighbors.

FORM OF ORGANIZATION.

With the case of four hundred families secured it would be easy to find some baker now struggling for existence who would be glad to sell his plant to the socialists on their own terms rather than see his trade cut into by their competition. Having found what the plant would cost the next thing would be to form a legal organization to carry on business. Under our Illinois law a corporation must not have shares of less than $10 each; the shares must be transferable at the will of the holders and the voting power must be proportioned by the number of shares held.

The law also provides, however, for the organization of a "society not for pecuniary profit." The incorporation fee is much less for this than for a corporation, and instead of shares there may be life and annual memberships. I was once an officer of a society in Chicago organized under this law for the purpose of publishing Unitarian Sunday-school literature and assisting in the establishment of Sunday schools.

In this society annual memberships were fixed at $1.00 and life memberships at $10.00. Its affairs were managed by a board of directors elected by the members at an annual meeting. The plan of organization worked smoothly enough and I believe would be well adapted to a co-operative society composed of socialists which should set out in advance to use its profit for socialist propaganda. Of course if profits were to be divided it would be necessary to organize under the regular corporation law, but this would involve the risk of the shares being secretly bought up by capitalists.

VARIOUS PRACTICABLE ENTERPRISES.

A bakery is a good subject for co-operation because it is mainly dependent on a quick-turn market for its product, and this the Chicago socialists and their friends can command; another good example is a laundry, most of the laundry work in Chicago is done in small shops whose equipment could be duplicated at small cost. The prices charged are far above labor cost on account of the large commission paid for securing custom. Destructive chemicals are used which rot out the clothes in a few washings. The rates charged are so high that most workmen's wives are forced to do their washing at home without machinery because unable to pay the laundry prices. There are great possibilities here for co-operation.

The clothing industry is not yet on the basis of large capitalization. The so-called manufacturers are wholesale dealers who purchase the materials and turn them over to "cutters" who have little capital and employ only a small number of laborers. The wages paid are deplorably low; on the contrary, the profits of the great retail clothing dealers are large, or would be but for the high cost of operating stores and the cost of advertising. Socialist co-operatives could pay decent wages and turn out honestly made goods at less than clothing store prices and with a profit for the propaganda fund.

RETAIL GROCERIES.

This is a branch of trade where concentration, in Chicago at least, has made little progress. I had a long talk today with a comrade whose daily work is selling specialties to grocers. From him I learn that the grocery department of the largest department store does $250,000 business the sum of six or seven of the most prosperous stores in residence districts, while there are over 2,000 groceries in Chicago. The profits would be large but for the necessity of multiplying of stores and the losses by bad debts. A large proportion of the income of every working class family goes for groceries, and wherever 200 socialist families can be found within a radius of a mile, a co-operative grocery would be almost sure to succeed.

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSEKEEPING.

This is a subject on which my sex prevents me from speaking with authority, but I believe that important developments in the near future are bound to come along this line. Housekeeping today for the bourgeois classes is in the feudal stage; for the proletarian it is in the barbaric stage. The women of the small middle class just dropping into the proletariat are just dropping into the proletariat.

in question didn't baptize Christ, that ceremony being performed by John the Baptist many years afterwards, and that it is not recorded that John presented the young man with money for allowing him to perform the operation. Neither was there any objection to remark that the wine men didn't put the gold in a bank until the Messiah came of age, but left it at his feet instead and went their way. But then of course "they didn't know everything down in Judea" in those days, their business instincts not being as highly developed as those of their twentieth century prototypes.

However ill versed in Scripture those in charge of the children may have been, they at least are aware of the fact that the dollar was not forthcoming. They have learned that there may be a wide distinction between "presenting" a thing and "giving" it, and it is altogether likely that the baptismal list of the first Sunday will hold the record until the pastor invents a new rite.

The foregoing incident is of little consequence except to illustrate the truth that the modern church has nothing for the working class, either spiritual or material. It shows conclusively that the hope of a "reward in the hereafter" now possesses even less value as a bribe than the promise of one dollar in cash. History tells us that at the crucial period when Christianity and Paganism were engaged in the final conflict for supremacy, the Emperor Constantine turned the scale in favor of the former, by promising every recruit for baptism a white robe and a gold piece. He was able to redeem the promise, and thus assist in overthrowing the supremacy of Paganism in the state, but the modern church is in no such fortunate position today.

Bound up as it with the present capitalist mode of production, it is equally powerless to provide for the discommodated masses, the victims of an unjust and untenable economic system, and as its impotence in this respect becomes increasingly evident, the masses will turn, and even now are turning, to Socialism for relief. As the vision of the other world fades away, the possibilities of the present one stand out ever more distinctly, presenting a view of a future society, and the methods of its realization, from which the mean and pitiful efforts of the modern church and its accomplice, the modern capitalist, can never succeed in permanently diverting the attention of the working class.

Trains Of A Week.

From the Cleveland Citizen.

A $4,000,000 railway combine of the "community of interests" plan is forming. A $200,000,000 coal trust is being organized. The billion-dollar octopus is gobbling up more mines and mills. The Edison and Standard Oil lighting plants of New York combined with $45,000,000 capital. The shipbuilding trust is now a reality and controlled by British and Standard Oil capital. Southern cotton manufacturers are combined and all their product will be handled by one corporation. "Glucose trust" has swallowed its independent competitor and will combine with the starch trust, capital to be raised $55,250,000. Forty-six canneries on the Pacific coast formed a salmon combine, capital $25,000,000. The Standard Oil people have combined the linseed oil and lead trust with upward of $25,000,000 capital. Copper trust absorbed more independent concerns and will capitalize at $155,000,000. Sugar trust and its competitor, the Ardenbush, are said to have finally made peace. Flour trust with $10,000,000 capital was formed. A $20,000,000 linen trust will control all the linen shirts, collars and cuffs in the country. A $15,000,000 red wood trust is organizing on the Pacific coast.

MODERN "FISHERS OF MEN"

Church Bites Its Hook With A Silver Dollar to Attract Candidates for Baptism.

A casual glance over the daily papers is quite sufficient to show that the churches and the people are perpetually drifting further apart. Only a few weeks ago it was stated that the failure of the clergy to preach what is known as the old-fashioned Gospel, was the principal cause of this distressing situation, but notwithstanding the wide discussion of the question, no symptoms of "reform" in this direction have yet become apparent. The Monday morning reports of sermons preached on the preceding day are no different in any respect from those of three months ago, before the discussion took place, except perhaps that the antics of the modern "Evangel," John Alexander Dowie, have furnished to some extent a substitute for rambling and incoherent sermons on social reform, raising the standard of "morality," the duties of rich and poor, religion and business, success, etc., etc.

That these topics, or rather, perhaps the method of their treatment in the pulpit have but small attraction for the working class, goes without saying, but nevertheless there is little fear that they will be abandoned in favor of the old-fashioned gospel above mentioned, which is certainly less attractive still. However, if one method fails another must be tried, and according to the press a clerical genius in Reading, Pa., has hit upon a most ingenious compromise partaking of the elements of religion, business, advertising and charity, in about equal proportions, which promises at any rate a temporary success. He gave notice that each child brought up for baptism in his church would be presented with one dollar.

Instantaneous result at once was obtained. The church was crowded to the doors, nine mothers presenting their offspring as candidates for baptism at a dollar per head. Six other children then walked up and were duly baptized according to the prescribed formula. But the method of presenting the dollar, although no doubt extremely creditable to the inventive genius of the clerical adjuvant, was probably rather a disappointment to the intended recipients. The coin was pressed for a moment into the palm of each child, and then handed to an officer of the church who will deposit it in a bank to draw compound interest until the candidate is of age, although it is not stated that this peculiar method of presentation was announced beforehand.

But before the baptismal ceremony was performed, the fairer made a judicious attempt to justify the proceedings by an appeal to the Scriptures for a precedent. He said that what he was about to do was not new by any means; that when the three wise men from the East sought the infant Christ, they brought with them gold, incense, etc., as offerings. As some of those present seemed to be aware of the ridiculous fatuity of the analogy, the bluff went all right. It never struck any of the audience that the three wise men

LAW OF SOCIAL GROWTH

Freely Translated from the Preface to Marx's Critique of Political Economy.

The first work which I undertook for the purpose of solving the doubts which perplexed me was a critical re-examination of Hegel's Philosophy of Law. The introduction to this work appeared in the "German-French Year Books," published at Paris 1844. My investigation ended in the conviction that legal relations and forms of government cannot be explained either by themselves, or by the so-called general development of the human mind, but on the contrary have their roots in the conditions of men's physical existence, whose totality Hegel, following the English and French writers of the 18th century, summed up under the name of civil society; and that the anatomy of civil society must be sought in political economy, to which study I next gave my attention.

The general result which I arrived at and which, once obtained, served as a guide for my subsequent studies, can be briefly formulated as follows: In making their livelihood together men enter into certain necessary, involuntary relations with each other.

These industrial relations arise out of their respective conditions and occupations and correspond to whatever stage society has reached in the development of its different relations.

Different stages of industry produce different relations. The totality of these industrial relations constitutes the economic structure and basis of society.

Upon this basis the legal and political superstructure is built.

There are certain forms of social consciousness or so-called public opinion which correspond to this basis.

The method prevailing in any society of producing the material livelihood their own private use. Socialism asks for the collective ownership only of those things which are collectively used. Production is not carried on individually, but socially. Consumption is not carried on socially, but individually. Capitalism provides for the private control of that which is done socially and makes impossible a sufficient ownership to provide for the wants of the workers in their individual consumption. Socialism will not only give an individual control of the goods he consumes, but socialism by controlling the means of social production will place the possibility of abundant ownership in things of private use within the reach of all.

A VACATION STUDY

Dedicated to Members of the I. A. M. Now on Strike.

FOR PERUSAL AT LEISURE.

Observations on College Competition and Sundry Other Matters Connected Therewith.

Brother Machinist: While you are enjoying your vacation, and wondering perhaps when it will come to an end, let us venture to call your attention to the fact that your dear, good, kind-hearted masters have, in consideration of the weather, and for sundry other reasons which will be mentioned hereafter, determined that your leisure shall be extended indefinitely if possible. To this end, they have, at no little expense to themselves, taken measures to provide substitutes who will carry on the work during your absence. And they have besides paid you a handsome compliment in the selection of these substitutes. They have not gone into the highways and byways endeavoring to pick up a scrub gang to take your places, but on the contrary they have been so keenly alive to the importance of the mysteries of your craft that only those who have been trained in the great seats of learning have been deemed worthy to supplant you.

Without any desire to flatter you we must nevertheless admit that never before has it come to our notice that any profession save your own has been accorded such recognition, and we sincerely hope that you will at the next election justify the esteem which your former employers have placed upon you, by demonstrating that you are quite equal both in brains and skill to those whom your sagacious masters have selected to keep the wheels of industry moving, while you are enjoying a temporary period of rest.

We have often heretofore alluded in rather disrespectful terms to what is known as the "dignity of labor," but the following extract from the daily papers having been brought to our notice, has induced us to reconsider to some extent at least, our previous opinions on the matter:

Ann Arbor, Mich., June 14.—The various manufacturing companies in Detroit which have suffered from the recent machinists' strikes are filling their VACATED POSITIONS with University of Michigan engineering students. Two junior students have gone into the employ of the Olds motor works and three more have been signed. The Northern engineering works of Detroit and the Chicago ship building company have each taken in Professor M. E. Cooley of the engineering department of the university as a student to fill the positions in their plants. Full machinists' wages are guaranteed and a large number of young men are ready to avail themselves of the offer made. The companies from which the offer comes promise to protect the student workers from any assault by the union men.

You will no doubt agree, brother machinist, that no higher compliment could possibly be paid to the importance of your craft than is set forth in the above dispatch. It has really so far removed you and your fellow workmen above the common herd of mechanics that it is to be hoped that you will not so far forget your dignity as to follow the vulgar cry of "scab." You stand upon an altogether different plane from that occupied by them, and both the press and your employers recognize the fact. You and your fellow workmen didn't "quit your jobs." Carpenters, painters, bricklayers and others might do so, but not you. Not at all. You simply "vacated your positions," which is an altogether different matter. And the students didn't take your jobs. Not at all. They merely "filled the vacated positions." Therefore you cannot consistently call them "scabs" and still preserve your dignity.

In any case, whatever you may think of the compliment your employers have paid you, you will doubtless appreciate the wisdom, foresight and business ability they have displayed in helping to create and maintain institutions from which they can obtain material for such emergencies as the present. And this gives us an opportunity to say a few words regarding education in general. For though it may not be apparent at first glance that you are being even now substituted to some extent by the students, it is none the less true. Although the advantages of a university education may have been denied you, still a considerable amount of valuable information may be acquired in that greater university known as the labor market, in which you now stand idle.

In the first place, these university students feel no compunction whatever in supplanting you. As a rule they belong to the same class as the masters against whom you have struck, and you therefore cannot judge them exactly as you would a body of non-union workmen. They cannot be with the same eyes as you, all of them without exception believing that they will be the future occupiers of the same relation to you as your present employers do now. They wish to "get in the world," to become masters, of men—that is of workmen, and their sympathies are naturally with the class to which they belong. They did not learn engineering for the express purpose of supplanting you when on strike, in fact it is very doubtful if they ever thought anything whatever of being employed in this manner, but nevertheless they have no objection to getting some practice at your expense, it being, as was said before, their intention to become masters in turn.

For most of them believe thoroughly that by hard work they can all attain such positions, as great care has been taken to inculcate this belief in their minds. But of course you know that as the universities are turning them out by thousands every year it is an absolute impossibility that they can all become masters. However nothing can convince them of the truth of this until they have gone out into the world, where the most intelligent of them gradually learn by bitter experience, that instead of having a sure thing, they have been really engaged in a lottery where there are a thousand blanks to one prize. The fellow who gets the prize of course believes more firmly than ever in the capitalist gospel that has been inculcated, and constantly insists that had the other nine hundred and ninety-nine worked as hard as he did it would also have drawn the prize. It is apparently impossible for him to see that if they had done so he would not have drawn it.

The schools, colleges and universities in which these youths are trained are endowed, supported and maintained by the master class who own the tools and machinery with which you work, and the wealth necessary for this purpose was and is extracted from the product of your labor by your masters.

Therefore, before you condemn the action of these young men would it not be better to enquire how far your class is responsible for their existence. You should make sure that the working-class, of which you are a part, cannot be charged with fashioning a scourge to whip their own backs. Let us see.

Who constructed the universities? Architects, masons, bricklayers, carpenters, painters, plasterers, machinists etc.—all workmen.

Who produced and transported the materials from which they were constructed? Millwrights, iron and steel workers, gunsmiths, stone-cutters, railroad operators, millers, teamsters etc.—all workmen.

Who feeds, clothes and maintains the students, provides their equipment, prints and binds their books etc? Why a host of farmers, butchers, bakers, cooks, tailors, map makers, engravers, lithographers, scientific instrument makers of all kinds, printers, bookbinders, etc. etc., all as before—workmen!

Are the students the children of these workmen? No, in the vast majority of cases they are the children of the people who "employ" these workmen—the parties who own the tools and materials with and upon which the aforesaid workmen expend their labor, and without which they cannot labor.

Then it is the labor of the workmen of all kinds, that enables the owners of the means of production to have their children educated in the universities and colleges, while the children of the former are debased?

Exactly so.

What do the masters give in exchange for these benefits? Nothing whatever. They don't have to. They merely OWN the things, and that is all sufficient.

Don't they give the workmen wages? No, the workmen produce his own wages in the product which his labor creates.

Then it is merely because the workmen consent to the private ownership of the means of production that such a situation as this is possible? Nothing else whatever.

Then it is not rather silly to denounce the action of the children of your masters, brother machinist, when your own class support a system of society which brings these very results? You cannot deny it. But you may say, how is it to be changed? That is easy enough. Cease to support it and it will fall to pieces. It is only because of your acquiescence that it holds together. You have voted for it and your votes have been translated into law. Say by your votes that it shall be legal no longer; there are far more of your class than of the masters. Vote the system out of existence and in place of private ownership of the means of production, establish collective ownership by all the workers. Then everything created by labor shall belong to those who created it, for their full use and enjoyment. Mines, mills, workshops, the land, the tools, the machinery, the universities, the schools and colleges, everything necessary for the physical and mental development of the human race must be collectively owned by all the people for the benefit of all the people. Then goodbye for ever to rent, interest, profit, wages, strikes, lockouts and scabs, whether from the universities or elsewhere. That would be SOCIALISM.

This is a big program. It is. It is the biggest program that was ever mapped out for human achievement; the greatest social revolution that the world has ever known, but not too great for the

NEW SPEAKERS ON THE LIST.

Press Circulation is Steadily Pushed and Many New Members Join the Party.

The South Side campaign was reinforced last week by another campaign speaker. Mrs. Davies and Mrs. Forberg are now regularly at work and are meeting with great success wherever they appear on the South Side soap box. Both were formerly school teachers, both are well-read in economics and history, both have the training which comes from long and active participation in the ordinary church work, and while the soap box is an entirely new experience, speaking of another sort and under other circumstances is not new to them. Mrs. Forberg's address at 111th street and Michigan ave. was highly appreciated by the West Pullman comrades as had been her address the week before in Englewood. She argues the question of socialism from woman's standpoint and does so with great effect. Mrs. Davies spoke at Thirty-first street and Fifth who insisted on living a useless life, and again, he wanted socialism because under socialism all services would be mutual and whatever service he should render others he would always have the satisfaction of knowing that they too were helping the common welfare.

MORE ABOUT THE TRUSTS.
Sunday afternoon at Sixteenth street and Cottage Grove avenue was the largest meeting yet held at that corner. Comrade Mills discussed the trusts. He explained how they came into existence, not because of the wrong-headedness of the men who were in them, but showed how they were the necessary result of the great machinery of modern production and distribution. In answer to a question from the crowd, "What are you going to do about it?" he said, "We know better than to try to destroy them, because we know we are not able and we know better than to destroy them if we were able. The only way you can destroy the trusts is to destroy the machinery which makes the trusts inevitable, and we do not want to destroy the machinery for the want to use it." In answer to a question from the crowd, "How are you going to do it?" he said, "The trusts are a good thing for those that are in them. Those of us who have suffered because of the trusts should ourselves join the trusts." And then the question followed, "How are you going to do that, they won't let you in." Comrade Mills said, "We are going to get in the same way Rockefeller, Morgan and the rest of them got in and are able to stay in themselves. They

CONVENTION TOPICS

Attitude of the Socialist Party Towards "Public Ownership".

NO POLICY OF COMPROMISE.

Socialism Can Only Come Through the United and Intelligent Action of the Working Class.

Our coming convention will be called upon to define the attitude of the Socialist party toward the "public ownership" and "reform movements" of which we are at present hearing so much. This is the most important matter that will come before us. With our convention will begin a new era in the history of socialism in the United States. It is therefore essential that both Socialists and opponents shall know exactly for what our movement stands.

It need scarcely be said that we should not be guided by expediency; we should set forth clearly our aims, our conception of socialism. It must be admitted that there are many who regard themselves as Socialists who do not see clearly the difference between socialism and "public ownership." Even a pretended Socialist paper of wide circulation appears to regard the "public ownership" as a safe and sound way of gaining our end. We do not want socialism to be brought about by people who are acting blindly. We do not want it except as it comes by the action of men who are conscious of what they are doing and are prepared to face the responsibilities which it will bring.

Furthermore, the point is well taken that a public ownership party is more likely to gain the "step" than is the Socialist party. We cannot hope to win on that platform.

How, then, will socialism be brought about? The position of the ruling class at the present time appears impregnable and it is steadily extending its power. When we consider that capitalism controls our schools and universities, that learned men are becoming the mere tools and mouthpieces of trust magnates; when we see a press utterly subservient, our venerated constitution and national traditions thrown aside when they would impede the onward march of capitalism; when we see the increase of armies and navies, and, perhaps most discouraging of all, the pages of our great reviews filled with discussions, not as to how society can be redeemed, but as to how the present system can be upheld and the working class retained in subjection; when we see all these, and yet other means of power in the hands of the ruling class, it would seem that our cause is hopeless and our efforts utterly vain. But we know that wealth has always been able to buy its defenders; that even among the learned have been found apologists for slavery and every form of oppression and tyranny; that principle, justice, powers cannot maintain the sway of decadent and afeble social systems.

For what do we hope? Surely not for a "reform" of the present system. But in the present darkness comes the promise of the dawn. The signs are at hand of a great international movement of the working class, the class which, says Marx, "holds the future in its hands." In the midst of the strife of nation against nation there is growing surely and rapidly a sense of the solidarity of the working class. As it appears to me there is only one possible way in which socialism can come. It can come only through the self-conscious action of the working class. Our work for the future must be largely the education of the working class, the deepening of the feeling of its solidarity. To unite and enroll the working class to the task for Socialists. We have, in the words of the Manifesto, "the advantage over the great mass of the working class of clearly understanding the line of march, the conditions and the ultimate general result of the movement." A distinct policy of no compromise with the present system is the only one that can be adopted by

I notice briefly two minor questions. The "immediate demands" contained in our last national platform seem to me to be misleading and not in keeping with our Socialist principles. In place of them we should set forth simply what Socialists would expect to do in legislative and administrative offices in which they may gain power, before a complete victory makes possible the inauguration of a co-operative commonwealth. Among the things to be gained, as far as is possible under the present system, would be education for all, without capitalistic bias, protection for the lives and health of workmen, employment for the unemployed and aid for organized labor in its contest with capitalists.

The second point is as to the name to be adopted by the united party. There is little to be said in favor of the name by which we are at present known nationally. The Chicago comrades have already taken a name which shows for what we stand and which needs no apology or explanation. The comrades of several states have done the same, and locals and members throughout the country have expressed their desire that the name SOCIALIST PARTY be the one by which the Socialists of America shall unite for the great advance which they are ready to begin.

The Right Hour Day.
This is how a capitalist manufacturer satiates himself that the machinists are on strike for something they don't really want. We quote from the "Shoe and Leather Reporter":

"We have made careful computation and have discovered that granting eight hours as a day's work and ten hours wages means $30.00 less income for our men, and while we are compelled to meet the demands for the present, we, in common with other large concerns, cannot stand such a strain, and it will inevitably react on our workmen. The fallacy of the argument that has attended this general demand for a reduction in the hours of labor lies in the fact that not one man in the whole force would decline to work ten or fifteen hours daily if he could receive double pay, and so I say they are not sincere."

There are two reasons given by this gentleman for opposing the demand for eight hours. First, that it would reduce the annual income of the firm by $30.00. Second that the men are not sincere. The reader will judge for himself which of these two reasons is likely to carry most weight with the employer.
